

THE

HISTORY

ENGLAND.

Written in FRENCH by M. RAPIN DE THOYRAS.

Translated into ENGLISH, with Additional Notes, by

N. TINDAL, M.A.

Rector of ALVERSTOKE, in HAMPSHIRE, and Chaplain of the Royal Hospital at GREENWICH.

ILLUSTRATED WITH

MAPS, GENEALOGICAL TABLES, and the HEADS and MONUMENTS of the KINGS.

The FOURTH EDITION, corrected.

VOL. VI.

LONDON:

Printed, by Affignment from Mr. KNAPTON, for

T. OSBORNE and J. SHIPTON, J. HODGES, J. ROBINSON, H. WOODFALL, W. STRAHAN, J. RIVINGTON, J. WARD, R. BALDWIN, W. OWEN, W. JOHNSTON, J. RICHARDSON, P. DAVEY and B. LAW, T. LONGMAN, T. CASLON, S. CROW-DER and H. WOODGATE, T. FIELD, G KEITH, M. COOPER, and C. WARE,

MDCCLVII,

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

http://www.archive.org/details/historyofengland00rapiuoft

THE

HISTORY

ENGLAND.

OF

BOO'K XV.

The reign of HENRY VIII. containing the Space of thirty seven years and nine months.

20. HENRY VIII.

ENRY VIII. fon and fucceffor of Henry VII. Henry VIII. came to the crown at the age of eighteen years, wanting a few months². The lord Herbert, his hiftorian, fays, the king his father defigned him at fuff for the archbifhoprick of Canterbury, becaufe, having an elder fon, there was no likelihood that Henry would afcend the throne. And therefore, continues he, care was Hiseducataken to inftruct him in all the parts of learning neceffary tion. for a prince that was one day to be a churchman. He would have fpoken more juffly, if he had only faid, that Henry VII. had fuch a defign when he firft put him upon his fludies. But as the young prince was become his heir-apparent at the age of eleven years, it could not be with the fame view, that he caufed him to purfue the fludy of fuch parts of learning as were proper for a clergyman. It is more likely therefore, that the king his father kept him to his fludies, for fear his active and fiery fpirit fhould carry him a He was born June 28, 1491, and came to the crown April 22, 1509.

to more dangerous employments b. He was only fon of 1509. queen Elizabeth, heirefs of the house of York. Consefequently he might have given the king his father fome trouble, had he thought of afferting his right as heir to his mother. However, Henry having taken a relifh for learning in his younger years, preferved it ever after. He al-Herbert. ways delighted in perufing good books, and converfing with the learned, even when the multitude of his affairs feemed to divert him from fuch kind of employments. By that means he made advances in the fciences very uncommon to great princes. Francis I. his cotemporary, ftyled by the French historians, the father of the muses, was in learning much his inferior. He fpoke French and Latin very well and readily. He was perfectly skilled in musick, as two entire malles compoled by himfelf, and often fung in his Hollingfh. chapel, do abundantly witness. He was exercised in the most abstrufe points of the Aristotelian philosophy, which alone was in yogue in those days. But he applied himself chiefly to the fludy of divinity, as it was then taught in the universities, all stuffed with useless questions. Thomas Aquinas's fummary was his favourite book.

This knowledge, which was confidered as a great ac-Henry has good conceit complifhment, even in ordinary perfons, had upon the young of himfelf. prince an effect which is not unufual. It gave him a good opinion of himfelf, which had but too much influence upon all the actions of his life. The exceffive commendations beftowed upon him by all, helped to confirm him He is often in this conceit. When he was yet unexperienced in the impoled up-affairs of the state, he fancied himfelf very able; and this prefumption was the caufe of his being often the dupe of those princes with whom he was concerned, as will more amply appear in the courfe of his reign.

His good qualities.

on.

But in remarking that this prince had a great deal of felfconceit, I don't pretend to rob him of, or any ways leffen, the noble qualities he had from nature or education. In his youth he was very handfome, and expert in all bodily exercifes, as much as, or more than, any prince of his time. Accordingly, he was paffionately fond of all those diversions, which gave him an opportunity to shew his activity. He was courageous without offentation, of a free and open temper, an enemy to fraud and infincerity, fcorn-

b Burnet fays, his father had given orders, that both his elder brother and he should be well inftructed in matters of knowledge, not with defign to make him archbishop of Canterbury, for he had made imall progreis when his brother died.

ing to use indirect means to compass his ends. His libe- 1509. rality perhaps was as much too great as the king his father's avarice. Henry VII. feemed to have been folicitous to accumulate riches, only to afford his fon the pleafure to fquander them away without any difcretion.

As Henry VIII. when he mounted the throne, was little His first experienced in the affairs of the government, he made use stow. at first of the king his father's ministers and counfellors. Hollingsh. The principal were, William Warham archbishop of Can- Herbert. terbury, and lord chancellor of England (of whom honour- Pol. Virg: able mention is made by Erasimus . fomewhere in his writings); Richard Fox, bifhop of Winchefter, fecretary and lord privy feal, who had been employed in the late reign, in the niceft affairs; Thomas Howard earl of Surrey, lord treasurer of England, son of the duke of Norfolk, flain at Bofworth field, fighting for Richard III. George Talbot, earl of Shrewfbury, lord fteward of the king's houfhold ; Thomas Ruthal, doctor of law; fir Edward Poynings; knight of the garter, controller, whole name is still famous for a statute enacted in Ireland in the former reign, whilst he had the government of that island; fir Charles Somerfet; lord Herbert of Gower, Chepftow, and Ragland, lord chamberlaind.

Henry VII.'s funeral was celebrated with great magnifi- Henry VII's cence a few days after his death. His body was interred Hall. at Westminster in the chapel built by himself, and for the Hollingsh. adorning whereof he had spared no cost. This chapel paf-, Stow. fed then for one of the stateliest in Christendom. Henry Herbert. VII. covetous as he was, laid out fourteen thoufand, fome fay, twenty thousand pounds sterling; a very confiderable fum in those days, when money was much scarcer in Europe than at prefent °.

c Eraimus of Rotterdam came over . into England, in 1497, and studied fome time in Oxford and Cambridge. His inftructions mightily promoted the new learning, and particularly the knowledge of the Greek tongue.

d He bore that title upon marrying a daughter of William Herbert, earl of Huntingdon. He was natural fon to Henry Beaufort, duke of Somerfet, killed at Henham. To these counfellors the lord Herbert adds, fir Thomas Lovel, master of the wards, and constable of the Tower, fir Henry Wyat, fir Henry Marney, afterwards (1532) lord Marney, fir Thomas Darcy; afterwards (1511) lord Darcy. Thefe he fays were felected out of those his father most trusted, by the counters of Richmond his grandmother, and farther observes, that this council was of fcholars chiefly and of foldiers, without fo much as one lawyer, which he wonders at, p. 2:

e His tomb, perfected by his executors 1519; coft a thousand pounds; which, as money went then; might be thought a fumptuous monument. Herbert, p. 2.

1509. Herbert.

6

The lord Stafford fent to the Tower. Hall.

Ruthal is of Durham. Act. Pub. 258. General pardon. Proclamation to encourage the people to complain. Stow. Hollingfh. Herbert. Pol. Virg.

While the obsequies were preparing, the new king privately retired from his palace of Richmond to the Tower of London, under colour of withdrawing on account of the king his father's death. But it was rather to fettle with his ministers some affairs which would not admit of delay. Whilft he was thought in his retirement to be employed in devotion, he ordered Henry lord Stafford, brother of the duke of Buckingham, to be apprehended, probably upon fome groundlefs fufpicion, which foon vanished, fince fhortly after, he was created earl of Wiltshire.

The fee of Durham, vacant by the translation of Chrimade bishop stopher Bambridge, to the archbishoprick of York, was conferred on Thomas Ruthal, doctor of law, and one of XIII.p.256, the privy council f.

> A few days after, the king confirmed his father's general pardon granted before his death 8. But all offenders had not the benefit thereof. A proclamation quickly appeared, wherein the king faid, that, being informed his good fubjects had been oppressed under the specious pretence of preferving the prerogatives of the crown, he gave them leave to bring their complaints, and promifed them fatisfaction. The defign of the proclamation was not to reftore to his fubjects the fums unjuftly extorted by the late king, but only to encourage them to exhibit their complaints against Empfon and Dudley, the instruments made use of by Henry VII. and to give them some fort of fatiffaction, by punishing these two ministers.

When the proclamation was published, numberless petitions were prefented against them. This was what the court wanted, not only becaufe thefe men were odious to the whole nation, but moreover to flow the people, the new king intended to rule in a very different manner from Empfon and the king his father. Upon all these petitions, Empfom Dudley are and Dudley were called before the council, where they called before were briefly told the principal articles alledged against them.

f And pope Julius fent him the form of the oath he was to take to the holy fee, of which, the curious reader may fee a copy in Rymer's Fæd. tom XIII. p. 256 .- About this time, the king confirmed to John, earl of Oxford, the poffestion of the castle of Colchester, granted to his anceftor Alberic de Vere, by the empress Maud; and appointed fir Edward Howard, standard bearer, with a falary of forty pounds a year; and fir Thomas Boleyn, warden of the exchange at Calais, with a falary of thirty pounds fix shillings and eight pence. Ibid. p. 251, 258.

g Out of which were excepted all perfons guilty of murder, felony, and treafon. In the fame pardon, all vagabonds and flurdy beggars were ordered to depart out of London, and repair to the feveral places where they were born. Stow, p. 486.

Empfon

Empfon answered for both, " That the accusation was of 1509. " a very new and ftrange nature: that usually men were " profecuted for acting against the laws, or difobeying their Empfon's " fovereign; but for their part, they were accufed by the defence. " people of executing the laws, of which they themfelves Hall. " were the authors: that, on the other hand, the king Hollingfh. " called them to an account for obeying his father's ex- Pol. Virg. " prefs orders, unheard-of crime ! the punifhment whereof " would be apt to throw all his fubjects into rebellion: " that if they must be punished for fuch offences, he de-" fired it might not be divulged to foreign nations, left " they should infer, that the final diffolution of the Eng-" lift government was approaching." To this it was briefly replied, " That he had fpoke with great freedom; but Herbert, " his eloquence was fruitlefs and unfeafonable : that they " were not accufed of executing the laws, or of obeying " the king, but of ftretching the laws beyond their due " bounds, and exceeding their fovereign's commission, " which acculations they had reason to fear were too " well proved." Then they were both committed to the They are Tower h. The king was refolved to make them an ex- fent to the Tower. ample, in order to content the people who were extremely Hall, incenfed against them. Thus their condemnation was re-Stow. folved before their appearance, though it was not yet Hollingth, known on what to ground their process. In any other country, an act of fovereignty to fend thefe two men to the gallows, would have been feen with joy. But it is not the fame in England, where the greatest criminals have privileges, of which they cannot be debarred, without giving the people occasion to think, the court is forming defigns against liberty. It was necessary therefore to fearch for fome express law to condemn them. But upon examining the accufation, already brought against them, great difficulties occurred. It appeared, that though they were accused of numberless offences, nothing could be proved but their mercilefs execution of the laws. But notwithstanding they had stretched these same laws as far as the words would bear, it could not be charged to them as a crime, fince they had the king's warrant, in whom the execution of the laws is lodged. It is true, Henry VII. contrary to the cuftom of his predecesfors, had acted according to the utmost rigour of the statutes. But he might h Their promoters and inftruments were also apprehended, and put in the pillory. Hall, fol. 1. Stow, p. 487.

A' 4

do

fation against them. Herbert. Hollingfh. Stow,

8

They are condemned to die.

Hall.

Debateabout the king's marriage with Catherine of Arragon. Herbert.

1500. do it, and if the former kings had done otherwife, it was more out of condescension than justice. These two minifters, therefore could not be tried for obeying him. Befides, to condemn them for executing their mafter's orders, was publickly to difhonour that prince's memory, and renew the remembrance of his feverities upon his fubjects. It was refolved therefore to put them to death upon a falfe acculation, of intending to withdraw their allegiance from Slight accu- the king fince his accession to the throne. It is evident, the acculation was entirely groundless. For how could two perfons, fo odious to the whole nation, and deprived of all credit by the death of Henry VII. think of fuch a defign, and still less put it in execution 1! Mean while, it was not fcrupled to take away their lives for a forged crime, because they were believed worthy of death, though not condemned by the letter of the law. Upon this frivolous accufation, they were brought before their proper judges, and found guilty, whether talfe witneffes were fuborned against them, or by a mental refervation, hitherto unknown in England in judgments of this nature. Dudley was tried at London the 16th of July, but Empfon was not condemned till the 14th of October at Northampton. Henry, either out of scruple, or some other motive, suspended their execution till the next year k.

Whilft means were contriving to difpatch thefe two minifters, the king and the council had a much more important affair to take into confideration. We have feen, in the former reign, prince Arthur's marriage with Catherine of Arragon : that prince's death without iffue ; the reafons inducing king Henry VII. to defire, that prince Henry, become his heir apparent, fhould marry his brother's wi-dow; the confent of Ferdinand and Ifabella, father and mother of the princes; and pope Julius's dispensation for the marriage. The true reafon why Henry VII. propofed this match was, his unwillingness to reftore the hundred thoufand crowns received in part of Catherine's dower. He was also afraid of losing the other half, which remained to be paid. In fhort, he forefaw, that, after the receipt of the i They were accused, as appears in their indictments upon record, of a confpiracy against the king and state, of fummoning, during the late king's fickness, certain of their friends to be in arms at an hour's warning ; and upon the king's death to haften to London, from whence it was inferred by the jury, that they intended either to feize the king's perfon, or to deftroy him. Herbert, p. 4. k King Henry the VIIth's executors made restitution, this year, of great fums of money extorted from many perfons by those two oppressors. Hall. fol. 7.

- A &

whole, the princefs his daughter-in-law would indifpenfibly enjoy her fettlement of the third part of the revenues of the principality of Wales, and the county of Cornwall. However, as it was not decent to urge fuch a motive to the pope, to obtain a difpensation for fo strange a marriage, which could not but be deemed fcandalous, it was pretended to be neceffary to preferve the peace between Henry VII. and the king and queen of Spain. That was the motive alledged to the pope, which he readily confidered as fufficient, though there was but too much reason to question whether it was the true one.

In confequence of the pope's difpensation, Henry and Hall. Catherine were folemnly affianced. Neverthelefs, whether Herbert. Henry VII. intended only to deceive Ferdinand, and get the remaining hundred thousand crowns, or was moved by the remonstrances of Warham archbishop of Canterbury, con-Burnet's cerning the marriage, he fo ordered it, that the prince, his Ref. T. I. p. 38. fon, on the very day he was fourteen years of age, made, in the prefence of certain witneffes, a protestation in form against the confent he had given. But the protestation was kept fo fecret, that it came not to the knowledge of the publick till it was neceffary, many years after, to divulge it. Upon the news of Henry VII.'s death, Ferdi- A.G. Pub. nand fent to the earl of Fuenfalida, his ambaffador in Eng- XIII.p.249. May II. land, a very ample power to renew the treaty of alliance made with the deceased king, ordering him withal, to demand the confirmation and execution of that which was concluded for Catherine's fecond marriage with prince Henry, now become king of England.

The Spanish ambassador having presented a memorial Difficulties upon this occasion, it was deliberated in council whether about the the king should confummate the marriage with Catherine. Burnet. The affair was debated with great attention. Against the Reasons for marriage it was alledged, that for a man to marry his bro- and against ther's widow was a thing unheard of among christians: that fuch a marriage was contrary to the law of God, and therefore it was a queftion, whether the pope had power to dispense with it. This was the archbishop of Canterbury's opinion, who could not forbear confidering the marriage as really inceftuous. But Richard Fox, bifhop of Winchefter, was of another mind. He ftrenuoufly infifted upon the pope's dispensation, and the unlimited power of Christ's vicar. He affirmed, " That the pope's granting a dispensation, was a " certain proof that he had the power, and was fufficient " to fatisfy the king's confcience: that no perfon upon earth " could 1509.

" could limit, or fo much as inquire into the papal autho-" rity; and though fuch a power fhould be afcribed to a " general council, at least the council of England could " not pretend to it." To thefe arguments concerning confcience, the bifhop added others drawn from reafons of ftate, and the king's particular intereft. He faid, " that " probably, the king would have, during the course of his " reign, many disputes with France, England's old enemy, " and whether he would attack or only defend, the al-" liance with Spain was abfolutely neceffaty : that in fend-" ing back the princefs Catherine after having affianced " her, he would affront king Ferdinand, which he would " certainly revenge by leaguing with France, and fuch a " league could not but endanger England, or at least be " extremely expensive to the nation : that moreover, if the " king refused to confummate his marriage with Catherine, "he must resolve either to restore her dower, or suffer " her to enjoy her fettlement: but by marrying her he " would fave the hundred thousand crowns received by " the king his father, gain another hundred thousand, which " the king of Arragon was to pay, and avoid the great " charge of marrying another princefs, and conducting " her into England. In fine, he enlarged upon the fweet " and virtuous temper of the princefs of Wales, capable " of making a hufband perfectly happy." Adding, " there " was no room to doubt, that the princefs was fill a " virgin, fince she herself affirmed it, offering even to " be tried by matrons, to fhow that fhe fpoke the truth."

All these arguments, except the first, concerning the difpenfation, were very firong. As to that, it was fo dangerous for a churchman to dispute the pope's authority, Catherine, especially such a pope as Julius II. who was still in his vigour, that the archbishop of Canterbury durft not perfift openly in his opinion. So, the king clofing with the bishop of Winchester's and almost the whole council's fentiments, it was refolved he fhould confummate his marriage. But first he required of the princes that she should Act. Pub. XIII.p.251. renounce by a folemn act her dower of two hundred thoufand crowns, and confent that the fum fhould belong to the king her spouse, to be claimed again neither by herfelf nor heirs, nor by king Ferdinand her father, nor queen Joan her fifter, nor any perfon living, on any pretence whatfoever. Two days after, the earl of Fuenfa-Ib. p. 253> lida made the like renunciation in the name of king Ferdinand and queen Joan. Catherine's letters patents, wherein

10 1509.

Pol. Virg.

Henry refolves to marry

June 7.

254.

in the ftyles herfelf only princels of Wales, bearing date 1509. June the 7th, it is evident, the king married her not on the third of that month, as historians affirm, nor sooner than Hall, &c. the day these letters were figned. Their coronation was Death of the folemnized on the 24th of the fame month, and five days counters of Richmond. after died Margaret countels of Richmond and Derby, the Hall. king's grandmother 1.

In the beginning of his reign, Henry willingly left to his Herbert. council and ministers the care and management of his himfelfup to affairs. As he was in peace with all his neighbours, what hispleafures. paffed in the kingdom could not keep him much employed. Hollingfh. He thought only of fuch pleafures and diversions, as were Stow. more fuitable to his years, than application to bufinefs. But as he was naturally liberal, his entertainments at court were very expensive. The ancient bishop of Win-Quarrel chefter, Henry VII.'s old minister, could not help mur-between the bishop of muring to fee the money lavished away without any ne- Winchefter ceffity, which his deceased master had amassed with fo much and the earl care, pains, and injuffice, in which he had himfelf been em- of Surrey. Surrey's ployed. He threw all the blame upon the earl of Surrey, character. lord treasurer, who was his rival in favour under the late Pol. Virg. king, and continued to be fo still under the prefent, by Herbert. gaining the affection of his new mafter by a blind compliance to his will. During Henry's VII.'s life he was more close, and harder to part with money than the king himfelf. How express foever the orders were for payments, he always found difficulties, and by that means made his court admirably to his mafter. Being continued in his poft in the present reign, he became quite another man. He not only paid, without examination, whatever was ordered, but alfo put the king upon fpending extravagantly. This gained him the favour of the young prince, who was naturally addicted to prodigality. The bifhop of Winchefter openly blamed this conduct, as highly prejudicial to the king's interest. But he was little regarded, in a court where every one was firiving to make an advantage of the fovereign's liberal temper. Mean while, his difcourfes exafperated more and more the earl of Surrey and the young courtiers against him, who never ceased to do him ill offices with the king. Thus the bifhop, who was in fo great credit in the late reign, gradually loft it in this. His difgrace, which fat Herbert. heavy upon his mind, threw him upon devifing means to Heintro-duces Wolsupplant his rival, by introducing at court Thomas Wolfey, fey at court, 1 She was buried at Weftminfter. Stow, p. 487.

whole

II

Stow.

whole qualifications he was no ftanger to. Wolley was a clergyman, already eminent for his merit, though he was but a butcher's fon of Ipfwich. The bifhop of Winchefter eafily forefaw, the king would foon be in want of perfons about him, fit and able to eafe him; and as he knew Wolfey's genius, did not queftion that when he was at court, he would render himfelf neceffary to the king. To that end, he procured him the place of almoner. We fhall fee prefently that the bifhop was not miftaken in his judgment, or rather that his forefight was far fhort of Wolfey's fortune ^m.

Confirmation of the treaties with Scotland, Act. Pub. XIII.p.257, crown. 261, 267. and with the emperor. p. 260. Aug. 20. Bambridge arch bishop of York ambaffador at Rome. p. 264. Sept. 24.

About the middle of the year, the treaties concluded between Henry VII. and the king of Scotland, were confirmed or renewed by the bifhop of Murray, who was fent into England to congratulate Henry upon his acceffion to the crown.

The emperor Maximilian fent also an embaffy to Henry, to congratulate him, and confirm the treaties made with Henry VII. in the year 1502.

Chriftopher Bambridge, archbifhop of York, being at Rome, where he was gone to have his election confirmed, received a commiftion from the new king to act as his ambaffador. We fhall fee prefently the reafon, why the pope wanted to have an Englifh ambaffador refide at his court, and why the king was defirous to be particularly informed of what paffed at Rome, and in all Italy.

m Thomas Wolfey was born at Ipfwich, in March 1471. He was fent to early to Oxford, that he was bachelor of arts at fourteen years of age, and from thence called the boy bachelor. Soon after he was elected fellow of Magdalen college, and when mafter of arts, had the care of the fchool adjoining to that college committed to him. Being charged with the education of the marquis of Dorfet's three fons, his lordfhip prefented him to the rectory of Lymington, in Somersetsthire, October 10, 1500. He had not long refided at his living, before fir Amias Powlet, a justice of peace, put him in the flocks for being drunk (as is faid,) and raifing difturbances at a fair in the neighbourhood. By the recommendation of fir John Nafant, he was made one of the king's chaplains. In 1506, he was instituted to the rectory of Bedgrave, in the diocefe of Norwich; having then, befides the rectory of Lymington, the vicarage of Lyde, in Kent. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 217. Whilf he was king's chaplain, he infinuated himself into the favour of Fox, bishop of Winchester, and of fir Thomas Lovel, who recommended him to the king as a fit perfon to be employed in negotiating the marriage between Henry VII. and Margaret, duchefs of Savoy. He was dispatched to the emperor her father, and returned with fuch speed, that the king feeing him, fuppofed he had not been gone. Having reported his embaffy, he was made dean of Lincoln, February 8, 1508, and on the 20th of the fame month, prebendary of Walton Brinhold, in that church, In these circumstances he was when he was introduced at court by bishop Fox, after Henry VII.'s death, where he foon found means to infinuate himfelf into the favour of his ion and fucceffor. Burnet's Hift. Ref. Fiddes.

Thefe

I2 1509.

-

These were the most remarkable occurrences in Eng- 1590. land, during the first eight months of the reign of Henry VIII. They were for the most part domestick affairs of little Necessity of importance, except the king's marriage which was attended affairs of with very great confequences. But there paffed abroad Italy, for the matters of great moment, which became as it were the full underfource of the troubles wherewith almost all Christendom history of was agitated for above fifty years, and wherein England was Henry VIII. but too much engaged. For fome time, the affairs of Europe had begun to have a new face, and what happened this year in Italy put them upon fuch a foot, as obliged almost every fovereign to be concerned therein. Henry VIII. unhappily entangled himfelf in the troubles of that country, which feem to have had no relation to him. This makes the knowledge of the affairs of Italy fo abfolutely neceffary, that without it neither the events of this reign can be understood, nor the king's character fully known. It will therefore be proper to enlarge upon this fubject, which concerns not only the hiftory of England, but also those of France, Spain, Germany, Switzerland; the principal events whereof, for a long fpace of time, flowed properly from the affairs of Italy. It is true, most of the authors who have writ the hiftories of the ftates, fuppofed their readers to be acquainted with what paffed in Italy at the fame time. They have thereby much fhortened their works; but withal rendered them very obscure to those who were not so fully inftructed as they have supposed. For my part I intend another courfe. Since the affairs of Italy are the foundation of most of the occurrences in Europe and particularly in England, during almost one half of the fixteenth century, I think they ought to be spoken of something largely, which alone can clear the particular histories proceeding from thence. But to avoid tedious digressions, it is necellary to give first a distinct idea of the state of Italy, as well as of the character and interests of the several princes.

I have already related, in the foregoing reign, how Lewis State of XII. affifted by the Venetians, conquered the duchy of Milan Italy, Miupon Ludovico Sforza, pretending a right to it as grandfon Naples. to Valentina Visconti, daughter of John Galeazzo I. duke of Milan. I have likewife had occasion to speak of the conqueft of Naples by the united arms of Lewis XII. and Ferdinand, and of the means used by Ferdinand to remain fole mafter of that kingdom. It will fuffice therefore to add here, that though Lewis XII. loft his portion of that conqueft, he defifted not from his pretenfions, but was waiting for a favourable vourable opportunity to affert them. I must now briefly fpeak of the other states of Italy, and first of the ecclesiastical state.

1509.

Ecclefiastical state,

Before the kings of France and Spain had fet foot in Italy, the popes were as fovereign arbiters of that country. But it was not fo much by their temporal arms as their spiritual, of which they made frequent use. For fome centuries paft they had loft great part of the demeins formerly belonging to the church. About the end of the reign of Otho I. the ecclefiaffical flate confifted of the city of Rome and its territory, with Tufcany, the marquifate of Ancona, the duchy of Spoleto, Ravenna, all La Romagna, and the whole country in general comprised formerly under the exarchate ". But afterwards, during the wars of the Guelphs and Gibelins, the emperors wrefted from the popes all Tufcany and feveral towns in other parts. Some of these towns had thought fit to withdraw their obedience from the church, and the popes themfelves had been forced to grant others in fee to lords who ferved them, or from whom they expected affiftance. At length, the emperor Rodolphus I. having fold liberty to as many cities of Italy as would purchase it, there were feveral formerly belonging to the church that embraced the opportunity to shake off at the fame time both the emperor's and the pope's yoke °. Hence there were quickly in Italy almost as many fovereignties as cities. The ftrongest fubdued the weakest, and fell at last themselves under the dominion, or rather the tyranny of fome of their own citizens, who found means to feize the whole power. In this manner were formed in Italy feveral petty ftates, out of the ruins of what the antient kings of Italy, the emperors, and the popes had formerly poffeffed.

In the pontificate of Alexander VI. the ecclefiaffical flate was reduced within narrower bounds than before, though the popes had preferved the fovereignty of feveral cities, of which they were no longer proprietors. Of this number, were Ravenna, Bologna, Ferrara, Urbino, Faenzo, Rimini, Pezzaro, Imola, Cefena, Perufa. Notwithftanding all thefe loffes, they were ftill very powerful, becaufe their fpiritual n So was this diffrict formerly called, becaufe it was governed by the emperor of Conftantinople's general in the weft, named his exatch, who refided at Ravenna. The first exarch was under Juftin the young, in 567, after Beliarius and Narfes had driven the barbasians out of Italy : the laft was Eutychius, defeated by Aftolphus, king of the Lombards, in 751. Pepin, king of France, turned him out of the exarchate, and made a prefent of it to the pope.

• As Florence, Genoa, Lucca, Bologna, &c.

arms

arms gave them great advantages over their neighbours. 1509. Moreover, befides the revenues of the ecclefiaftical flate, they had very confiderable incomes from all Christendom.

But when Lewis XII. took poffeffion of the duchy of Milan, and Ferdinand of the kingdom of Naples, the affairs of Italy had quite another face. Then the temporal power of the popes was nothing in comparison of that of these two monarchs, who, befides their dominions in Italy, had moreover at their command the forces of two large kingdoms. On the other hand, the Roman pontiffs met with much more opposition, when they had a mind to brandish their fpiritual weapons, whole force was in proportion to the weaknefs of those against whom they were darted. For that reason they fought all forts of means to drive the foreigners out of Italy. But as they could not by their own ftrength execute fuch a defign, they were forced to make use of one of these kings to destroy the other, in which their policy was often deceived. For, they could not humble one without giving the other a superiority more destructive of their interefts, than the equality which was between them before. This for many years was the occasion of all the pope's intrigues, and withal an incumbrance they could never get clear of. Sometimes they joined with one to pull down the other; fometimes fetting them at variance, they remained spectators of the war; and sometimes they called in foreigners to make the balance incline to the fide they intended to favour. But whatever was the fuccels of these wars, the conqueror always became very formidable to the. pope and all Italy. It is certain therefore that the conquefts of Naples and Milan gave a mortal wound to the temporal power of the popes, and were also very prejudicial to their spiritual authority. As the popes from thenceforward had frequent occasions of quarrel with the kings of France, now become their neighbours, they fometimes used their spiritual arms, but not with the fame fuccefs as formerly against the fovereigns of Italy. As they had to deal with princes who did not eafily bend, they only gave them occasion to examine the grounds of the papal authority; and this inquiry was not to the advantage of the popes.

Befides the intereft of their fee, the Roman pontiffs had also that of their family, of which they were no lefs mindful. Each of them feeking to raife his nephews or other relations, all the cities formerly belonging to the church were fo many objects that inflamed their defires. Alexander VI. who of all the popes his predeceflors was the least forupulous, 2 had had formed the defign of making Cæfar Borgia his baftard a great prince, by crecting him a flate out of feveral cities of La Romagna, which still owned the pope's fovereignty, and were under his protection. To execute this defign it was, that Cæfar Borgia either by fraud or force became mafter of Perufa, Urbino, Imola, Faenza, Rimini, Pezzaro, Cefena, under colour that the poffeffors had not been punctual in paying the tribute or annual relief to the holy fee. But Alexander VI. dying before his fon was well fettled in his conquefts, it happened, during the fhort pontificate of Pius III. and the interval between his death and the election of Julius II. that the former owners of these cities found means to recover them. This was chiefly by the affiftance of the Venetians, who for their pains kept Faenza and Rimini.

Character and defign of Julius II. Guicciard.

The republick of Venice. Paruta, Doglioni. Sabellico. Bembo, &c.

Julius II. who fucceeded Pius III. formed for the house of la Rovere, of which he was, the fame projects as Alexander VI. had formed for that of Borgia. He was no fooner in the papal chair, but he begun the execution of his defigns with imperioufly acquainting the Venetians, that his intention was to reannex to the church whatever had been alienated, and therefore they must restore Faenza and Rimini. Upon their refusal he demanded aid of the emperor Maximilian. This was properly the first rife of the league of Cambray, mentioned in the foregoing reign, and of which I shall be obliged to fpeak more fully hereafter.

The fenate of Venice had long passed for the wifest and most politick assembly in the world. By their prudence and abilities they had by degrees formed in terra firma P a flate, which being supported by a very ftrong naval force, was inferior to none in Italy. This state confisted of Friuli, Trevifo, Verona, Vicenza, Padua, Bergamo, Brefcia, Crema, Cremóna, Rovigo, and the whole Polefin, Ravenna, Faenza, Rimini. Most of these cities with their territories were formerly part of the kingdom of Italy. After that, they fell under the dominion of the German emperors, vio governed them by their vicars. At length, either the ricars were become fovereigns, or being expelled, the cles had recovered their liberty, to fall again afterwards under the tyranny of fome private perfons, who had usurped an abfolute power. Of these it was that the Venetians had acquired . them either by money or arms. But however it be, when publick of Venice are of two forts : are maritime, and called the fca flate. those in Lombardy, that compose terra

'P The towns belonging to the re- firma, or the firm land flate; the reft '

they

they had made these acquisitions, it is certain, the authority of the emperors was feldom acknowledged. Mean while the emperors still preferved their pretensions to all these cities, as having been formerly parts of the empire, or rather of the kingdom of Italy, enjoyed by fome of their predeceffors. Friuli was conquered upon the church of Aquileia, to whom it was prefented by Otho I. Ravenna, Faenza, Rimini, formerly belonged to the fee of Rome. Rovigo and the Polefin were conquered upon the duke of Ferraro. Cremona and Gierradadda, appertained to the duchy of Milan, having been refigned by Lewis XII. Brefcia was taken from the dukes of Milan, and Crema freely given up by duke Francis Sforza. They had ftill in the kingdom of Naples five maritime places, mortgaged to them by one of the kings.

Bologna 9 was a rich and powerful city, but not fo con-Bologna. fiderable as formerly. Civil difcords had at length com- Ghirard. pelled her upon certain terms to fubmit to the church. After Alberti. that, the city was governed by the pope's legates, fent thither from time to time. But their dominion fuffered frequent interruptions. The legates oppreffing the people forced them often to shake off their yoke, and expel them the city. But it was only to fall again under the tyranny of the heads of faction, who by their oppressions forced them to have recourfe to the pope and receive his legates again. This is what happened feveral times. In the year 1440, Hannibal Bentivoglio became fo powerful, that he was little lefs than a fovereign. From that time to 1506 fome one of the family of Bentivoglio held the government, though the pope's legates were still admitted and honoured, but without having any real power. At last Julius II. not content with this fhadow of authority, demanded in 1506 aid of Lewis XII. to make himfelf mafter of Bologna. Though France had hitherto protected the Bentivoglios, Lewis however ordered the governor of Milan to fend the pope troops. Whereupon John Bentivoglio, head of that house, seeing himself fortaken by the king of France, quitted Bologna with all his family, and retired to Milan, leaving the city to the pope.

The duchy of Ferrara , was a fief of the church, long Farrara. poffeffed by the family of Efte, who were invefted by the Sardi. pope, and paid a yearly relief in money. This petty ftate bordering upon the pope and the Venetians, and being very

B

9 The fecond city of the ecclefiaftical state, and the third of the four most confiderable univerfities in the world, Paris, Oxford, Bologna, and Salamanca, fays la Forest.

VOL. VI.

The birth place of the poet Ariofto, who has a tomb and epitaph in the benedictines church.

convenient

17 1509. Modena and Reggio. G. Batt. Pigna.

Urbino. Cimarelli.

Parma and Placentia. Alberti,

Florence. Machiavel.

Pifa. Alberti. convenient for both, preferved itfelf by their mutual jealoufy, but however, the Venetians had taken from them Rovigo and the Polefin. But Julius II. had greater views, and thought ferioufly of annexing the whole duchy to the church. Modena and Reggio were likewife under the dominion of the family of Efte, not as belonging to the duchy of Ferrara, but as a diffinct flate acquired by that family after being poffeffed of Ferrara. Julius II. had alfo pretentions to thefe two cities, as having been formerly given to the church by Charles the Great, and perhaps on the fole pretence that they belonged to the duke of Ferrara his valial.

Urbino ' had formerly been of the church's demein. But the popes had not for many years challenged more than the right of fovereignty. Cæfar Borgia had feized this city, and expelled duke Guidobaldi Ubaldini, who recovered it after the death of Alexander VI. As Guidobaldi had no children, Julius II. perfuaded him to adopt Francis Maria de la Rovere, nephew to both, fon of the pope's brother and the duke's fifter. Shortly after, la Rovere became duke of Urbino, by the death of Guidobaldi his adoptive father.

Parma and Placentia had been under the dominion of feveral lords or tyrants, till at laft they became fubject to the dukes of Milan. Lewis XII. took poffession of them after his conquest of the Milanefe.

Florence, a very potent city, and the chief of Tufcany, was fallen at length under the dominion of the family of Medicis. But afterwards an oppofite Faction prevailing, they were driven from thence, and were now in exile, attempting however from time to time to be reftored to their country.

Pifa had been formerly a very confiderable city by reafon of her naval forces, but at length becoming fubject to the dukes of Milan, a baftard of that family, to whom it was given, fold it to the Florentines. The Pifani were againft the fale, and would have recovered their liberty, but were overcome. After that, Charles VIII. in his way to Naples reftored Pifa to her liberty; but as foon as the Florentines had nothing more to fear from him, they befieged Pifa, though affifted by the Venetians, and the fiege was ftill carrying on at the time of the league of Cambray.

The city of Genoa, after fundry revolutions caufed by the factions of the Fregoffas and the Adornos, was at length

• The birth place of the famous painter Raphael, and Polydore Virgil, who wrote the English history.

fallen

Genoa. Pizarre. fallen into the hands of the French, in the reign of Charles VII. After that, Lewis XI. refigned it to the duke of Milan, and Lewis XII. feized it after his conqueft of the Milanese.

This furvey of the states of Italy shows, that it was then Motives of divided between fix powers, namely, pope Julius II. Lew-the league of is XII. king of France and duke of Milan, Ferdinand king againft the of Arragon and Naples, the republicks of Venice and Flo-Venetians. rence, and the duke of Ferrara. To these fix may be added, the emperor Maximilian, who without poffeffing a foot of land in Italy, had however pretensions to whatever was formerly enjoyed by the emperors, and particularly to the firm land state of the Venetians, whose ruin the other fix were equally concerned to procure. The emperor pretend- Hiff: della ed that all the Venetian dominions belonged to the empire ; Legha di he paffionately defired to wreft fome place from them that would give him entrance into Italy, and an opportunity to re-eftablish the imperial power in that country. Julius II. as I faid, had formed a project to annex to the church whatever had been alienated, and especially the duchy of Ferrara and the towns of La Romagna. This defign could be effected only by the destruction of the Venetians, ever attentive to oppose the growth of their neighbours. Besides, the pope had a mind to begin with them, and wreft from them Ravenna, Faenza, and Rimini. Lewis XII. repented of yielding to them Cremona and Gierradadda. He wanted to difpoffess them, and under that pretence to get possefion also of Crema, Bergamo, and Brefcia, and in general of whatever had belonged to the dukes of Milan. Ferdinand was defirous to recover without money the five maritime towns of the kingdom of Naples, which had been mortgaged to them. Moreover, his interest required that there should be always troubles in Italy, to hinder Lewis XII. from thinking of the conquest of Naples. The duke of Ferrara wished to recover Rovigo and the Polefin. Laftly, the Florentines, obftinately bent upon the fiege of Pifa, protected and defended by the Venetians, could defire nothing more advantageous than to fee that republick unable to affift the Pilani.

Such were the motives of the league formed against Ve- League of nice, of which the pope, the emperor, and the king of Cambray. France were the chief promoters. For the greater fecrecy, they fpread a report that the emperor, as guardian to Charles of Auftria his grandfon, had agreed that his differences with the duke of Gueldres should be amicably adjusted. To that purpole, the city of Cambray was appointed for the place of B 2 congress, 19 1509.

Cambray.

20

Hift. della Legha di Cambray.

Treaty of the allies against Venice. Bembo. congrefs, thereby to intimate, that the affairs only of Flanders would be confidered. Here the famous league againft the republick of Venice was concluded; and the better to deceive the fpies, was figned at firft a treaty of perpetual peace between the pope, the emperor, Lewis XII. and Ferdinand, which was indeed made publick. But a fecond treaty, which care was taken not to divulge, contained a league offenfive and defenfive againft the Venetians, the principal articles whereof were thefe:

In the first place it was set forth in the preamble, that the Turks having begun to make great progress in Europe, it was abfolutely neceffary for the christian princes to join their forces against them, but that the Venetians by their continual incroachments greatly obstructed this union. From thence it was concluded, that they were to be difpoffeffed of what they had usurped. This was the pious motive of the league. And therefore it was agreed, that of their fpoils, the pope flould have Ravenna, Faenza, and Rimini; the emperor, Verona, Vicenza, and Padua, and as duke of Austria, Treviso, and Friuli : Lewis XII. as duke of Milan, Cremona, Gierradadda, Brefcia, Crema, and Bergamo : the king of Arragon, Manfredonia, Trani, Monopoli, Brindifi, and Otranto in the kingdom of Naples: that the dukes of Ferrara and Savoy, and the marquis of Mantua should be admitted into the league if they defired it; the first to recover Rovigo, and the Polefin; the fecond to get the kingdom of Cyprus out of the hands of the Venetians? and the third, to obtain fatisfaction concerning certain pretenfions he had upon Venice. Laftly, that all who had any claim upon the Venetians, fhould be received into the league as principals, if they declared themfelves within three months. Thus, in order to wage war against the Turks, no other means were found than to ftrip the Venetians of all their firm land state, and leave them only the fingle city of Venice.

Projects of the allies. Guicciard. Mezerai. To accomplifh this defign, it was agreed, that the king of France in perfon fhould enter the territories of the Venetians, the firft of April, in the year 1509, with an army of forty thousand men: that the pope should fend an army into la Romagna, and Ferdinand have another in Lombardy, with a fleet in the gulf, and the emperor attack the Venetians from the fide of Germany. But as he had lately made a three years truce with them, an admirable expedient was devifed to furnish him with a pretence to break it, which was, that the pope fhould fummon him as the church's advocate, to come and defend the patrimony. In fine, Julius II. en- L gaged to thunder out all the ecclefiaftical centures againft Venice. This league was figued at Cambray, December 10th, 1508.

that

The time of executing the projects of the league being Campaign of come, Lewis XII. departed from Milan the beginning of the year April 1509, at the head of forty thousand men, whilft the Mezerai. pope's army entered la Romagna, under the conduct of Bembo. Francis Maria de la Rovere, duke of Urbino, and Raymond of Cardona, threw himfelf into Lombardy, with the king of Arragon's troops. At the fame time, the duke of Ferrara, took the field in the Polefin. But the emperor contented himfelf with ftaying at Trent, and feeing the reft of the allies act, in order to be ready to reap the fruit of their labours. Mean while, the Venetians, having first provided their towns with ammunition, raifed an army, under the command of count Pitigliano their general, whofe lieutenant was Barthelein d'Alviano.

The van of the French army commanded by Chaumont, Battle of paffed the Adda, the 15th of April, and at the fame time Agnadel. the pope excommunicated the Venetians, and put the city of Venice under an interdict. On the 14th of May, was fought the battle of Gierradadda or Agnadel t, between the French and Venetians, contrary to the opinion of Pitigliano. though general in chief of the Venetians, and to all reafon. For the Venetians having no refuge but their army, it was by no means proper to hazard a battle. But the heat of Venetians Alviano, prevailed over his general's prudence. The Vene-lofe all their flate of tian army was entirely routed, and Alviano taken prifoner. terra firma. Whereupon the Venetians being no longer able to refift their enemies, Lewis, in lefs than a fortnight became mafter of Cremona, Peschiera, Crema, Brescia, Bergamo, and of all the places in general, formerly belonging to the Milanefe. Moreover Vicenza, Verona, and Padua, fent him their keys. But as by the treaty of Cambray, these places were in the emperor's division, he fent their deputies to him. Maximilian was then at Trent, expecting the fuccefs of the confederate arms. Upon the arrival of the deputies, he ordered his troops to advance towards the flate of Venice, and as these cities freely opened their gates, had nothing to do but to garrison them. Treviso alone refused him admittance, and remained firm to the Venetians, though reduced to the 1509. Sardi.

* Called alfo the battle of Rivolta,

B 3

22

laft extremity. Friuli and the towns of Iftria followed the ftream, and fubmitted to the emperor. On the other hand, the duke of Urbino, with the pope's army, took Ravenna, Cervia, Faenza, Rimini, whilft the duke of Ferrara became mafter of Rovigo, and the marquis of Mantua of fome caftles which were convenient for him. Thus, in a moment, the Venetians faw all their dominions reduced to the fingle city of Venice, with five places in the kingdom of Naples, which could not be of much fervice to them. Mean while, they were not entirely difcouraged amidft fo many calamities, though the fenate and people were under the greateft confternation. Their chief care was to re-affemble their scattered troops, and use their endeavours to break fo destructive a league.

Pifa furrenders to the Guicciard.

Lewis XII. returns to France. Mezerai. Guicciard.

The Vene-Padua, Bembo.

and appeafe the pope.

The misfortune befallen the Venetians occasioned the loss of Pifa. This city defpairing of being relieved by Venice, or Florentines, the king of France, who had deferted her at laft, furrendered to the Florentines, after having endured a long fiege.

Lewis XII. having compafied his ends, returned into France, after he had detached a body of his troops, under the command of la Palisse, to join the emperor, who probably, had not men enough to fupply his garrifons, and to keep an army in the field against the Venetians, who were drawing together again. Upon the king of France's departians retake ture, affairs began to have a new face. The Venetians took Padua by furprife, and kept it ever after. Moreover they found means to fend into Friuli, an army which employed the greateft part of the emperor's troops. In thort, they appeafed the pope by their humble fubmiffion, and obtained his politive promile to give them absolution, and take off the interdict upon certain conditions, which they could not refuse him. On the other hand, Ferdinand, who had not yet reaped any benefit by the league, was eafily gained by the offer of the five cities held by the Venetians, in the kingdom of Naples.

> Whilft the fenate was labouring to draw off the pope and the king of Arragon from the league, Maximilian with his own and la Paliffe's forces, laid fiege to Padua, but after an unfuccefsful affault, raifed it, and retired into Germany. At the fame time, the French general alfo returned to Milan. By which means the Venetians had time to breathe a little, and continue with the pope negotiations, which made them hope the event of the war would not be fo fatal as they had hitherto apprehended,

The

The emperor befieges Padua in vain.

OF ENGLAND.

The union of the king of France with the emperor, made 1509. Julius II. extremely unealy. He beheld the French king fo firmly fettled in the duchy of Milan, that it feemed impof- The pope's fible to diflodge him. On the other hand, the emperor uneafinefs, Mezerai. could not but be formidable to him, fince he had an entrance Guicciard, into Italy, by means of Verona and Vicenza. He did not know what to think of the powerful aid lent that prince by Lewis XII. to compleat the ruin of the Venetians, and he was not without fear, that thefe two monarchs had made a private treaty together to fhare all Italy. Mean while, he hardly faw how thefe two formidable potentates could well be opposed. Venice was reduced to nothing. The Florentines were drained by the long Pifan war. As for the king of Arragon it was almost impossible to treat with him, without being liable to be deceived. He knew how to improve all the treaties, and fcrupled not to forfake his allies, when it was for his intereft. Notwithstanding all these difficulties, He forms the pope formed the project of putting the affairs of Italy new proupon another foot, in order to execute his first defigns. jects. He refolved therefore to agree and league with the Venetians, to take off Ferdinand from the league of Cambray, by invefting him with Naples, to use his endeavours to fet the emperor and king of France at variance; to bring a Swifs army into the Milanefe; in fine, to perfuade the new king of England to make a diversion in France. These were the pope's projects, the fuccels whereof we shall see hereafter. He be- He makes gan with making a peace with the Venetians upon three peace with the Veneconditions. First, that they should defist from all their pre- tians. tenfions to the cities of la Romagna, lately taken from them. Bembo. Secondly, that they fhould renounce the right of placing in Ferrara, a certain magistrate called Bisdomina. Thirdly, that they fhould leave the navigation of the gulf free to all the fubjects of the church. In the prefent circumstances of Venice, there were no other conditions to be imposed upon her.

After fo long a digreffion concerning the affairs of Italy, which however is not uselefs, as will appear in the fequel, we must return to the affairs of England.

The parliament being affembled the 21st of January 1510, 1510. the commons reprefented to the king, that certain flatutes made in the former parliaments, had given occasion to the The parlia-ment meets, had given occasion to the Herbert, Herbert, forced interpretations upon them; contrary to the natural Statutes meaning of the words : that therefore it was necellary to fof- foftened. ten, or so explain them, as to prevent such abuses for the future.

B-4

Act of attainder againft Empfon and Dudley. Hall. Stow.

New treaty of all-ance between Lewis XII. and Henry VIII.

future ^u. Henry readily agreed to what was proposed by the - commons, not only because the thing was just in itself, but chiefly becaufe it naturally led to his defign of having Empfom and Dudley, attainted by the parliament. Though thefe men had been already condemned by their proper judges, the king had deferred the execution of the fentence. He could not help having fome fcruple, for caufing them to be accused of a crime of which he knew them not to be guilty. Nevertheless he wanted to factifice them to the people, without incurring the imputation of a falfe acculation, and withal to vindicate his father's memory, by intimating, that they had exceeded his orders. To reconcile thefe two things, he fo managed it, that the parliament paffed an act of attainder against them; that is, they were condemned to die by the authority of the king and parliament, without any particular mention of the crimes they had incurred, or of the proofs upon which their fentence was founded. This method, which till then had been feldom practifed, was but too frequently used in the fequel of this reign, fo dangerous is it to effablish fuch precedents. Mean while, Henry having still fome difficulty to overcome his scruples, delayed their execution till the following August ".

Whilft the parliament was thus employed, Lewis XII. fent ambaffadors to England, to renew with the king the treaties made with Henry VII. As by the peace of Eftaples,

" The benefit of forfeitures for penal laws was also reduced to the term of three years next preceding. There was likewife a fumptuary law against excefs in apparel repealed, and a more decent one subrogated. Herbert, p. 6. -----It having been enacted in the 3d of Henry VII. That a coroner should have for his fee, upon every inquifition taken upon view of the body flain and murdered, thirteen shillings and four pence of the goods and chattels of the murderer; fince the enacting of which, coroners would not perform their office without receiving the faid fum of thirteen shillings and four pence; which was contrary to the common law, and the intent of the fame statute of Henry VII. It was therefore now enacted, that upon a request made to a coroner, to come and enquire upon the view of any perfon flain, drowned, or otherwife dead by mifadventure, the faid coroner diligently shall do his office up- .

. .

on the view of the body of every fuch perfon or perfons, without taking any thing for it, upon pain, to every coroner that will not endeavour himfelf to do his office, or that taketh any thing for the doirg of it, for every time, to forfeit forty fhillings. Statut. I Hen. VIII. c. 7.

w They were both beheaded on Tower-hill, August 17. Hall, fol. 8. Dudley had, at the time of his death, in lands, fees, and offices, to the yearly value of eight hundred pounds; and twenty thousand pounds in ready money, befides jewels, plate, and rich furniture, &c. During his imprifonment in the Tower, he writ a book called Arbor Reipublicæ, dedicated to king Henry. By Elizabeth his wife, one of the daughters and coheirs of Edward Grey, viscount Lifle, he left iffue three fons and one daughter. Stow. Dugdale's Baron. vol. II, p. 217.

after the death of one of the two kings of France or Eng- 1510. land, his fucceffor was to fignify to the furvivor, whether he would continue the alliance, it was Henry's business to in- Act. Pub. form Lewis XII. of his intention. However, he had done March 23. nothing towards it. But as he was a lively young prince, and Du Tillet. abounding in riches, Lewis thought doubtlefs it would be Herbert. proper to prevent him, for fear he might engage in defigns Stow. destructive of the welfare of France. His ambaffadors therefore concluded with Henry a new treaty of alliance, wherein the former treaties were not mentioned. By this it was agreed, that the peace between the two kings fhould laft till the death of the fhortest liver : that it should be confirmed by the flates general of France, and the parliament of England: that each of the two kings fhould take care to obtain the pope's approbation, with a previous fentence of excommunication against the first violator.

There was nothing faid in the new treaty of the 745000 crowns that Charles VIII. had promifed to pay to Henry VII. or his fucceffors, and for which Lewis XII. himfelf was engaged by a fublequent treaty, because the bufiness was only to renew the peace between the two prefent kings. How- Act. Pub. ever, Henry forgot not to fecure the debt, by requiring of XIII. p. 277 Lewis letters patents, wherein he promifed to pay the arrears 280, 287-293. by twenty five thousand livres every fix months, till the whole was difcharged. After which the peace was ratified and fworn by both the kings.

Julius II. was meditating great defigns against Lewis XII. The pope The fuccefs of the league of Cambray, though he had turned fends Henry aconfectated it to his advantage, made him very unealy. He faw the rofe, French more firmly fettled in Italy than ever, and Lewis XII. better able to protect the duke of Ferrara. To accomplifh his projects against France, he doubtless wanted affiftance; and to that end, tried to excite all the flates of Europe against that kingdom, as will be feen prefently. So, Ib. p. 275. to infinuate himfelf into the king of England's favour, he April 9. tent him this year the golden role, which the popes, after folemnly confectating it, were wont to prefent to fome prince *. Probably alfo, the king of Arragon, in concert with the pope, began now to take measures to engage Henry his fon-in-law, in a league against France.

It was dipped in chrifm and perfumed with mufk, and fo fent to archbishop Warham, with instructions to prefentit to the king at high mafs, with the pope's benediction. Julius's letter to Warham, in Burnet's collection is dated April 5, 1510.

Burnet.

The

I 510. Ferdinand falls off from the league,

The fuccess of the last campaign made the king of Arragon, no lefs uneafy than the pope. He was fenfible, Lewis never loved him, nor had any reafon to love him, and faw this enemy, fince the ruin of the Venetians, in a condition to diffurb him in the poffeffion of Naples. On the other hand, the league of Cambray could not procure him any further advantages, whereas the offers made him to leave it were very confiderable. The Venetians agreed to reftore him the cities they poffeffed in the kingdom of Naples, and the pope was willing to depart from his claim of forty thoufand crowns, and give him the investiture of that kingdom for a Spanish genet only. This was sufficient to induce him to break his engagements at Cambray. In all appearance, ever fince the end of the laft year, he had taken measures with the pope to form a new league against France. But as he never acted openly, he defired these measures to be kept private, in order to attack Lewis the more irrefiftibly. To that purpose, on the 6th of January this year 1510, he commiffioned Lewis de Caroz, of Villaragud, his ambaffador at London, to treat with Henry VIII. about a stricter alliance than had yet been concluded between the crowns of England and Spain.

New treaty of alliance between Henry and Ferdinand. Act. Pub. XIII.p.284.

Remark on that treaty.

Whether Henry could not fo foon refolve to conclude this new alliance with Ferdinand, or was willing first to finish his affairs with Lewis XII. it was not till the 24th of May, that the new treaty was figned. It was only a defensive alliance between the two kings, with a promife of mutual aid upon occafion. But Ferdinand, who had his views, caufed these words to be inferted : that in case one of the two kings was attacked by any prince whatfoever, the other fhould be obliged to proclaim and wage war against the aggressor, though he should be his ally: that if one was attacked by the king of France, the other fhould be obliged to go against him in perfon with a powerful army. This treaty fecured to Ferdinand the kingdom of Naples, because if Lewis XII. had intended to undertake the conquest, the diversion he would have been threatened with from England, would have infallibly kept him from his purpofe. But it is hard to conceive what advantage Henry could reap from fuch a treaty, fince it was not likely, Lewis defigned to attack him; fo that all the advantage was on Ferdinand's fide. It must be either that Henry's ministers were not very clear fighted, or he, from a motive of generofity for a father-in-law, whom he did not yet fufficiently know, was imprudently perfuaded to to this proceeding, the more firange, as he had lately renewed the peace with France.

But it must not be thought that Henry was then a compleat Henry minds politician. He was still young, and minded his diversions only his dimore than the publick affairs. There was nothing every day versions. but tournaments, balls, entertainments, concerts of mulick, Hall. which confumed by degrees the eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling, found in the king his father's coffers y. He' used likewife to play at tennis and dice with certain strangers who cheated him of his money, which he difcovered at laft, and though a little too late, fhamefully chafed them from court. He was to paffionately fond of mulick, that it devoured great part of his time; which, added to the hours he' spent in his studies and other diversions, left him but little leifure to apply himfelf to the affairs of the government, the management whereof he willingly left to his minifters. And therefore it may be affirmed, that in matter of policy, never prince committed groffer faults, or was more-impoled upon than himfelf, especially in the first years of his reign.

Whilft Henry was wholly addicted to his pleafures, there Wolfey rifes was a perfon gradually rifing at court, who was one day to at court. have an abfolute power over him, and to manage all his affairs as well foreign as domeftick. I mean Thomas Wolfey, who was made the king's almoner laft year, and in the beginning of this dean of Lincoln ². It appears in the collection Act. Pub. of the publick acts, that on the 30th of January, the king XIII.p.267, gave him a houfe in London ², formerly Empfon's, no iny The reader may fee a large account of the king's jufts, pageants, and other cofily devices, in Hall and Hollingshead, who have many particulars worth perufing, by fuch as delight in fuch matters.

² Burnet fays, he not only ferved the king in all his fecret pleafures, but was leud and vicious himfelf; io that his having the French pox (which in those days was a matter of great infamy) was so publick, that it was brought against him in parliament when he fell into difgrace. He had also the art of attaching so effectually those to his interests, in whose company the king did most delight, that they were always ready to forward his views. Being of a gay, facetious, azd open temper, he would divert himfelf with them in fuch exercifes (fays Polydore Virgil) as were most agreeable to the levity and passions of youth, and which did not perfectly fuit with character of a dean in the church. He would descend to fing, laugh, rally, and even dance with them, as if for the time he had quite laid aside that feverity of behaviour which became his fation. Hift, Ref. vol. 1. p. 3.

^a A meffuage, called the parfonage, lying in the parifn of St. Bride's, in Fleet-ftreet; which Empfon held by leafe from the abbot and convent of Weftminfter. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 269. The king gave him alfo in February the next year, a prebend of Windfor. Ibid. p. 293.

confiderable

1510.

The pope's defigns.

He abfolves and leagues with the Venetians.

Ib. p. 294.

He quarrels with

Lewis XII.

Bembo.

confiderable prefent, fince the patent mentions thirteen gardens belonging thereto. We must now return to the affairs of Italy, which will afford us matter for feveral years.

> Julius II. had two grand defigns in his head. The first was to feize the duchy of Ferrara; the fecond to expel the French and Germans out of Italy. His forces alone not being capable to execute these projects, it was necessary to use the affiftance of fome other princes, and try to engage them in his defigns. His scheme was to league with the Venetians ; to take off Ferdinand and Maximilian from the interefts of France; to break the league of Cambray, to perfuade the king of England to make a diversion in France; to excite the Switzers to invade the duchy of Milan. He executed all thefe projects, but not without encountering fuch difficulties, as would have difcouraged any man lefs refolute than himfelf. First, he made a private league with the Venetians, after which, he folemnly gave them abfolution the 24th of January. Then, he fecretly agreed with Ferdinand, by promifing him the investiture of Naples. That done, he quarrelled with Lewis XII. by filling a bifhoprick in Provence, without afking his confent, contrary to his own promife. Lewis complained of it, the pope denied he had promifed any fuch thing; and in fhort, they came at last to give one another the lie in form. This was precifely what the pope wanted, in order to have caufe to break with him.

and with the duke of Ferrara. Sardi. Mezerai.

His league with the Venetians being publickly known, he imperiously commanded the duke of Ferrara to renounce the league of Cambray, and join his arms with those of the church. The duke not believing his being vafial to the holy fee obliged him to be thus blindly devoted to all the pope's humours, refused to break his alliance with France, and fo gave his holinefs the pretence he had long been feeking. When the duke offered to pay him the tribute due to the church for the fief of Ferrara, the pope refused it, plainly intimating by that refufal, he intended to confifcate the duchy.

Ferdinand acts, underhand to gain Henry. Herbert.

Mean while, Ferdinand was privately acting with Henry VIII. his fon-in-law, to draw him into the pope's intereft, which was become his own, in confequence of the projects they had formed in common. But his practices were fo fecret, that Lewis XII. never mistrusted him. On the contrary, he entirely confided in the affurances given him by his ambaflador, that his defign was to continue firmly attached to the league of Cambray. On

On the other hand, Julius II. gained the bishop of Sion b, 1510. who having great credit among the Switzers, found means u to fet them at variance with France, by perfuading them to The popefets demand an augmentation of their penfions. Their alliance the Switzers with that crown being about to expire, they required to re- with France. new it, that their penfions fhould be increased. Lewis re- Guicciard. fuling it, the bishop of Sion effectually used that refusal to Mezerai. ftir them up against France, to which the king himself also contributed by making an alliance with the Grifons. He thereby fo provoked the Switzers, that in a diet at Lucern they declared for the pope, and refolved to fend an army into the duchy of Milan.

In fine, the pope forgot nothing that he thought capable of He tries to perfuading the Venetians to agree with the emperor at any reconcile the rate, even to the advising them to deliver him Treviso and the emperor. Padua. He intimated to them, that the most effectual means Guicciard. to drive the French out of the Milanefe, was to difengage Mezerai. the emperor from their interefts, and when once they were out of Italy, it would be eafy to wreft from the emperor not only Trevifo and Padua, but all his other conquests too. But the Venetians durft not run fuch a hazard.

Such were the vaft projects of the pope. He was fo pri- Lewis XII. vate in his negotiations, that Lewis XII. imagining he had beginstofufno other delign than to feize Ferrara, contented himfelf with pope. ordering Chaumont, governor of Milan, to aid the duke in Mezerai, cafe he was attacked. But shortly after, a Venetian fleet Guicciard. and papal army commanded by Fabricius' Colonna attempting, though unfuccessfully, to surprise Genoa, Lewis had but too much reafon to fuspect, there was fome grand defign formed against him, and therefore, fent Chaumont orders to have an eye to the pope's proceedings.

These orders came to Milan very seasonably. Julius II. Julius II. is really intended to befiege Ferrara, and for that purpole was fuprifed at come to Bologna, till an army, prepared on fome pretence Bologna. by Raymond of Cardona at Naples, was ready to join his and the Venetian troops. But Chaumont did not allow him time to execute his projects. Hearing the pope was, arrived at Bologna, he departed from Milan'at the head of an army, and made fuch fpeed that he would have furpriled the pope there, had he not fuffered himfelf to be amufed with parleys. Whilft he was treating with the pope's envoys, fome Venetian troops in the neighbourhood entering the city, fecured it from

Dr Valais, lying between Switzerland, the Milanefe, the valley of Aoft, and Savoy.

29

THE HISTORY

He excommunicates the French tries to fur-Bizarro. Mezerai. The Switzers cannot enter the Milanefe.

Lewis XII. joins in a league with

He calls a allows his going to war with the pope, Mezerai.

Maximilian to fummon Pifa. Guicciard. Mezerai.

5 ma

from the danger of being infulted. Whereupon Chaumont being wholly unprepared for fo important a fiege, was obliged to retire.

Julius II. made great noife at this infult of the French. and filled all Europe, and particularly the court of England, generals, and with his clamours. He excommunicated all the generals of the French army, and prefently after, his and the Venetian prife Genca. gallies made a fecond attempt upon Genoa, but with no better fuccess than before.

At the fame time, twelve thoufand Switzers began their march in order to enter the Milanefe, under the conduct of the bifhop of Sion. But he found the paffages fo well guarded, that they defpaired of fucceeding in their defign. So, not receiving belides from the pope the money promifed them, they returned into their own country.

War being thus proclaimed between Lewis XII. and the pope, Lewis thought himfelf under no farther restraint. He the emperor, had done his utmost to be reconciled with him, even to the offering to abandon the duke of Ferrara. But the pope, depending upon Ferdinand, and expecting greet matters from England, had evaded all his propofals. Wherefore, to stop the fury of this impetuous old man, Lewis made a new league with the emperor, promifing to put him in poffeffion of all Italy, except Genoa and Florence. Maximilian had the good fortune, that in all his leagues he had always great advantages, though he contributed the least. On this occasion, Lewis XII. could hardly proceed without him, becaufe it was abfolutely neceffary to continue the war in the state of Venice, otherwife the Venetians would have been able to give the pope too great an affistance. The fynod, which league being concluded at Blois in August, Lewis called a fynod at Tours, to confult how he ought to behave to the pope. The fynod were of opinion, that the king fhould once more offer the pope a reasonable agreement, and in case of refufal, might with a fafe confcience wage even an offenfive war with him. Lewis wanted no more to juftify his in-Prefently after, he concluded with Treaty with tended proceedings. Maximilian a new treaty, whereby they agreed to caufe a gea council at neral council to be fummoned to Pifa to depose Julius II. To that end, they gained nine cardinals, who readily undertook to call the council in their own name. Some of these cardinals were now with the pope, but found means to leave him under divers pretences, and when he would have recalled them refused to obey.

Such

OF ENGLAND.

Such was the fituation of the affairs of Italy during the 1510. year 1510. I have faid nothing of the events of the war which continued all the while between the emperor . affifted by the French king, and the Venetians, becaufe these particulars are of little service to this history. It will Chaumont fuffice to obferve, that Chaumont feeing Genoa and Milan retires to in danger, had withdrawn the French troops from the emperor's army to keep them at Milan. The departure of thefe troops gave the Venetians fome respite, who thereby were enabled to repair fome loffes fuftained in the beginning of the campaign, and to affift the pope who ftill deligned to befiege Ferrara.

Chaumont's attempt to furprize the pope in Bologna, The pope's afforded Raymond of Cardona, Viceroy of Naples, a forces and Spaniards pretence to march to the relief of his holinefs. The join, pope's troops and the Venetians were in December joined by the Spanish army near Modena, which Fabricius Colonna had taken in his return from his Genoa expedition. Though the feafon was not very proper to enter Siege of upon action, the pope was abfolutely bent to, befiege Mirandola, Mirandola. That town belonged to the heirs of Joannes Picus of Miranda, with whom he had no quarrel. But as it lay convenient to favour the fiege of Ferrara, he would not leave it in his rear, but ordered it to be vigoroufly attacked. In fpite of his age, and the rigour of the feason, he came himself to the fiege to animate the troops by his prefence, and the town furrendering at last on the 20th of January, was pleafed to enter through the breach.

Lewis XII. complained to Ferdinand of his affifting the pope. But Ferdinand calling that a trifle, replied, that as vallal of the holy fee he could not help defending his holinefs's perfon and ftate : that befides, he was not concerned in the quarrels of the pope and the king of France, but his intention was to keep to the articles of the league of Cambray. I THE DOLLAR AND AND AND

Hitherto Henry does not feem to be concerned with the affairs of Italy, though the pope, Ferdinand, and the Venetians had formed a defign to engage him therein. He peaceably led a life of pleafure, without much regarding what paffed abroad. On the 1st of January 1511, he had the fatisfaction to fee his queen delivered of a prince, at whole birth there was great rejoicing over all Milan.

Guicciard.

THEHISTORY

1511. Birth of a prince ; Herbert. and his death. Hall. Stow. Defigns of Ferdinand.

with the Moors.

Act. Pub.

March 8.

all the kingdom. But the joy lafted not long, fince the young prince died before the end of February .

Mean while, Ferdinand was feeking means to engage Henry in the league he intended to make with the pope against France. Henry was rich and powerful, and confequently his acceffion to the league would be of great weight, and extremely incommode France. On the other hand, his youth and fmall experience made his father-in-law hope, it would not be impracticable to engage him by degrees, into projects which a king of England ought not to concern himfelf with. It is certain, Ferdinand was now in agreement with the pope. All his proceedings render it fo evident that it cannot be doubted. However, he used a profound diffimulation in this respect. He feigned to intend only the peace of Europe, that all the princes of Christendom might join together in a war against the Infidels. But as he wanted an army and fleet to execute his defigns, he pretended to have very much at heart the continuance of the war he had undertaken against the Moors. He had fent last year upon the coafts of Africa a fleet commanded by Peter of Navarre. Shortly after, he reinforced it with fome troops under the conduct of a fon of the duke of Alva, who attempting to land at Gelves, was flain, and all his men cut in pieces. Ferdinand made use of this ill success to cover his preparations against France. Under colour of being revenged on the Moors, he affembled an army and equipped at fleet, which he pretended to fend into Africa, but was however defigned He demands for Italy. As it was not yet time to discover his intentions, aid of Henry he carried his diffimulation fo far, as to demand of the king for his pre-tended war his fon-in-law a thousand English archers to ferve in the present expedition. Weak aid! to be sent for so far, and at fo great an expence, if he had really intended to use them. Henry not perceiving his defigns readily complied with his re-XIII.p.294. queft; and appointed Sir Thomas Darcy, on whom, at the fame time, he conferred the title of baron 4, to command that fmall body . We find in the collection of the publick acts.

c He was born at Richmond, and christened Henry. He was prefented to the king by his queen as a new year's gift, but died this fame year, on February 22, and was buried at Weftminster. Herbert, p. 7. Hall, fol. 11. d He was captain of the town and caftle of Berwick. Rymer, tom. XIII. p. 294.-Dugdale fays, the title of baron, which had ceafed (6 Hen, V.)

in the daughters and heirs of Philip, lord Darcy, was revived to this fir Thomas, by writ of fummons to parliament. (1 Hen. VIII.) Baron. vol. I. p. 374.

e There went over with him the lord Anthony Grey, brother of the marquis of Dorfet; Henry Guildford, Wefton, Brown, William Sydney, efquires; fir Robert Conftable, fir Roget acts, Ferdinand's letter of thanks to Henry f for this aid, ISII. and for his advice not to hazard his perfon in the undertaking : advice, continued he, that he could not follow, be- Ib. p. 297. cause religion was concerned. And yet it soon appeared, he Herbert. had never intended any fuch thing, fince he employed against Hall. France the very forces which feemed to be defigned againft Stow. the Moors g.

32

Nothing more was wanting to conclude the projected They try to league againft Lewis XII. but to gain the king of England, into the This was ftrenuoufly endeavoured during the beginning of league the year 1511. The Venetians fent him an ambaffador under against colour of thanking him for his care to reconcile them to France. the pope, defiring him withal, in their credentials dated the 2d of March to give credit to what their ambaffador fhould impart to him, which could relate only to the intended league. About the fame time it was that the pope conferred the dig-Bambridge nity of cardinal upon Chriftopher Bambridge archbifhop of made cardi-York, and ambaflador at Rome, in a promotion the 11th Herbert. of March at Ravenna. All the hiftorians unanimoufly affirm, Bambridge was made cardinal purely for labouring to fet Henry at variance with France. Matthew Skinner bifhop of Sion was promoted to the fame honour for his paft and future fervices of the like nature. In those days, it was neither learning nor virtue that raifed clergymen to the cardinalate, but folely their abilities in temporal affairs; joined to an entire fubmiffion to the pope.

The endeavours that were used to engage Henry in the Henry en-Italian league, had at length the expected fuccefs. In all ap- gages with pearance, it was reprefented to him that he was highly concerned to oppose the progress of the king of France, who was already become too powerful by the conquest of the duchy of Milan, and the ruin of the Venetians. However this be, it appears that about the middle of the year ger Haftings, fir Ralph Elderkare, &c. They embarked at Plymouth about the middle of May, and landed at Cadiz, June 1. Hall, fol. 11, 12. Sir Henry Guildford, and - Weston, and - Brown, knights, were knighted by king Ferdinand, who gave fir H. Guildford, a canton of Granada, and - Weston, and - Brown, an eagle of Sicily, for the augmentation of their arms. This body of troops returned to England about August. Idem, fol. 13. Stow, p. 488. f By this letter, (writ in a most religious firain) it appears that all our historians, and Dugdale himfelf, is mistaken in the number of the archers fent into Spain, Ferdinand's letters calling them a thoufand, whereas they are faid to be in our histories fifteen hundred. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII.

VOL. VI.

P. 297. g King Henry fent alfo, in July this year, fifteen hundred men into Flanders, under the command of fir Edward Poynings, to affift the duke of. Burgundy, against the duke of Gueldres. Ibid. p. 302. Hall, fol. 13, 14. Henry С the alies.

ISII. 5 Act. Pub.

34

Henry was now determined to follow the fuggestions of the pope and Ferdinand. For in June he appointed commissioners to take care that the militia of the kingdom were pro-XIII.p. 300. vided with good arms, and ready to ferve upon the first notice, which it was not cuftomary to order, but when a war was forefeen. The reafon alledged by the king for thefe orders, plainly fhew what was his defign. He faid, though the kingdom was in perfect tranquillity, neverthelefs, as the arms were commonly suffered to rust in time of peace, he wished that his fubjects would be in a readinefs to ferve him as well against invalions, if any were intended, as in defence of his allies. These last words could respect only the pope, the king of Arragon, and the Venetians, from whence it may be inferred, that the king had now given his word. But the fequel will fhow it still more clearly.

He guards againft Scotland,

Ib. p. 301.

Caufe of quarrel between England and Scotland. Buchanan. Herbert. Hall. Stow.

The antient and firict union between France and Scotland gave Henry just cause to fear, that as foon as the war with France was begun, the king of Scotland as ally of Lewis XII. would interpose in the quarrel. And therefore, to remove all pretence of rupture, he took care to appoint commiffioners h with power to repair all the outrages committed fince the late peace. But his precautions proved ineffectual. An accident this year afforded the king of Scotland that pretence of breach which Henry would have prevented.

Andrew Breton a Scotch merchant, complaining to the king of Scotland that the Portuguese had killed his father and feized his fhip, the king gave him letters of mart, after having in vain fought redrefs from the court of Portugal, Whereupon, Breton equipped two flout fhips, and found means to make himfelf ample amends for his loffes, by falling upon all the Portugal ships trading to Flanders and England. The Portugal ambaffador refiding at London, complained to the council, and reprefented that fince the king of England pretended to the fovereignty of the narrow feas, it was but reasonable he should protect the foreign ships that came into the channel. Upon this complaint, the king equipped two large men of war, and appointed the two fons of the earl of Surrey 1 to command them, with orders to take the Scotch pirate. These two lords watched him fo narrowly that they met with him at laft, as he was returning from Flanders to Scotland. Breton fought desperately,

h Sir Thomas Dacre, and fir Robert Drury. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. P. 301.

i Thomas and Edward, which laft was lord admiral, Herbert, p. 7. Hall, fol. 15.

but was killed in the fight, and his two fhips taken and 1511. brought into England ^k. The king of Scotland hearing of this, fent and demanded the two fhips, with fpeedy reparation of the outrage committed against the peace. The am- Hollingsh. baffadors were told, that pirates were not included in the peace, and that to punish such people according to their deferts was no breach of treaty. Probably, Breton had made himfelf more than amends for the damage he had fuftained, as it too frequently happens on fuch occafions. But however king James not being able to obtain any thing from the court of England, protested against the injustice, being determined to refent it the first opportunity.

I left Julius II. after the taking of Mirandola, bent upon The pope the fiege of Ferrara, and only waiting the return of good rejects the weather. Though Lewis XII. was in part ignorant of what king's offers, paffed in Spain and England, he knew however enough not Guicciard, to doubt that the pope was endeavouring to raife him enemies Mezerai. on all fides. He was even fatisfied, that though he feemed P. Daniel, to have no other defign than to become mafter of Ferrara. yet that was only the first step to some greater project. Mean while, he was very much embarrassed. He had properly nothing to gain upon the pope, unlefs he would feize the church's patrimony. But he had a great deal to lofe, befides the troubles which the obftinate and haughty temper of the pope might create him. Wherefore he refolved to try all poffible ways to be reconciled with him. To that end, whilft the pope was employed in the fiege of Mirandola, he made him fome overtures by Chaumont, but it was to no purpole. The pope would hearken to nothing, and continued the fiege till he forced the town to capitulate. At last, Lewis seeing there was no hopes of a reconcilia- Lewis retion, ordered Chaumont to regard him no longer, and at any folves to regard the rate to support the duke of Ferrara. Chaumont receiving pope no these orders takes the field in the midst of winter. His ar-longer. my, joined by the duke of Ferrara, was not fo numerous as Sardi. the forces of the pope, Ferdinand, and the Venetians, but composed of fo good troops, that the allies durft never hazard a battle, though it was offered them more than once. Mean while, the pope was greatly perplexed. Inftead of quietly preparing for the fiege of Ferrara, he was forced to keep the field during the winter, without knowing even how to fave Modena, which was in danger of a fiege. Ferdinand, k Though he was grievoully wound- king pardoned the men, and fent them ed, he encouraged his men, with his whiftle, even to his last breath. The out of the kingdom. Herbert, ibid.

35

C 2

who

THEHISTORY

who forefaw what trouble that place would give the pope, had advised him to refign it to the emperor. Nay, that af-----fair had been negotiated but without fuccefs, becaufe Maximilian would receive it only as a place held of the empire, to which the pope would not confent. At laft, upon Chaumont's approach to befiege it, the pope was willing to deliver it as the emperor defired, becaufe it was not to be faved without venturing a battle. The terms of the bargain are not precifely known. But from thenceforward all the emperor's proceedings gave occasion to suspect, Modena was acquired upon conditions very prejudicial to the king of. France his ally.

The king of Arragon pretended to be in alliance with France. He would not declare against her till he had. fecured the king of England, with whom he was privately negotiating a treaty which required a long difcuffion. Indeed, his troops which were to ferve the pope but three months, according to the terms of the inveftiture of Naples, were still joined with those of the allies. But he pretended, the viceroy of Naples acted contrary to his orders, in remaining in the pope's army longer than he was commanded. Mean while, the army was prefied by Chaumont and the duke of Ferrara, who followed them clofe, and deavoured to provoke them to a battle. So, to gain time, Manma in- Ferdinand, who would ftill pais for a neutral prince, and well affected to the repose of Italy, proposed a congress at Mantua for a peace. The pope immediately accepted the overture. The emperor agreed to it likewife, and Lewis XII durft not reject it, left he fhould be charged with being the fole author of the troubles of Italy. It is certain, if, in this juncture, instead of fuffering himself to be amused by a negotiation, the fole aim whereof was to rob him of the opportunity of pushing his enemies, he had ordered his troops to advance, he would have over-run the whole ec-" clefiastical state; with fo great a terror had his arms inspired the allies. But he had to manage his subjects as well as his queen, who confidered a war with the head of the church as a crime, though there was but too much provocation. He had himfelf likewife fcruples upon that account, which he could not eafily furmount. But however, he was willing to try once more, whether the propofed congress of Mantua would produce some good effect. He hoped at least, that the breaking off the negotiation, in cafe it was not fuccessful, would fully justify him. The congress produced the effect expected by the allies, that is, it caufed

Julius II. gives up Modena to the emperor. Guicciard. Mezerai.

36

1511.

Ferdinand's diffimulation.

Congress of effectual. Guicciard.

caufed the French to lofe a great deal of time to no pur- 1511. pofe.

A few days before the congress of Mantua, the bishop Theemperor of Gurck, who was to be there from the emperor, had fides privatea conference at Bologna with the pope, after which they ly with the pretended to part in great difcontent. But what followed Guicciard. plainly shewed the contrary, fince the emperor never after did any thing agreeable to his alliance with Lewis XII. He A council confented however, that the council of Pifa fhould be called fummoned to Pifa in the in his name, and the fummons fet up at Modena, and fe- emperor's veral other places belonging to him, becaufe it was not yet and French time to declare himfelf. The fummons ran, that Julius king's name. II. having refufed to call a council, purfuant to the decree of Constance, the cardinals were empowered by the fame decree to fummon a council in their own name. And therefore with the confent of the emperor and the king of France they ordered the council to meet on the 1st of September, in the city of Pifa, to endeavour the reformation of the church, in the head and members.

The bifhop of Gurck's conference with the pope, and the breaking up of the congress of Mantua, made the Lewis fulking of France greatly fuspect the emperor. On the other pects the emperor and hand, he could not help fearing the king of Arragon, king of knowing by experience what was to be expected from him. Arragon, He faw him making great preparations under colour of the African war, and knew withal, that notwithstanding his daily affurances that he would not concern himfelf with the troubles of Italy, he was using his utmost endeavours to procure a peace between the emperor and the Venetians. That is, properly speaking, he was labouring to dilengage Maximilian from the intereft of France. In fhort, Ferdinand fent him brotherly admonitions to make his peace with the pope, and not draw on himfelf the just reproach of waging an unnatural war with the common father of Chriftians: Lewis could not but confider these remonstrances as a fort of protestation to affift the pope in case of need. At the fame time, he could not believe he would engage in fuch an undertaking without being fecure of the emperor. These things made him uneafy, and apprehenfive that he fhould at last be the dupe of the pope, the emperor, and Ferdinand. So, for fear of being prevented, he gave express orders to Triulzi, who commanded his army in the room of Chau- He orders mont lately deceased, to take all the advantages of the al- Triulzi to pufli the war Ţriulzi vigoroufly. lies that lay in his power. C 3 the allies takesto flight of their own accord.

THE HISTORY

Guicciard. Mezerai. Triulzi takes Concordia. He approaches Bologna.

of Pavia stabbed by the duke of Urbino. Guicciard.

The pope retires to Rome.

Triulzi upon this order affaulted and took Concordia in the beginning of May, at the time the calling of the council of Pifa was every where posted up. Then he endeavoured by feveral marches to oblige the allies to a battle, without being able to fucceed. At last, he refolved to approach Bologna; not that he believed himfelf in condition to befiege the city, but to draw the allies from their advantageous posts, and give the Bolonnois opportunity to rife in favour of the Bentivoglios whom he brought with him. The pope had now done his utmost to perfuade the generals of the allies to hazard a battle without being able to prevail, fo much did they dread engaging with the French. Wherefore, knowing how the army flood difposed, and diffrusting the Bolonnois, who loved him not, he retired to Ravenna, leaving in Bologna the cardinal of Pavia his prime minister. He was no sooner gone, but a tumult arofe in the city, during which the inhabitants called in their old mafters the Bentivoglios, and put them in poffeffion of the government. The cardinal of Pavia had taken to flight the moment he perceived their refolution. The army of On the other hand, the army of the allies advancing to one of the gates of Bologna, and hearing the Bentivoglios were admitted, and the legate withdrawn, ran away in confusion, leaving in the camp their artillery, baggage, and ammuni-Whereupon the inhabitants fallying out, and jointion. ing with the peafants, completely ftripped the fcattered army, and rendered it entirely unferviceable for feveral months. The duke of Ferrara improving the opportunity, very eafily recovered the places lately taken from him by the allies.

Amidst all these mortifications, the pope still met with The cardinal another which fenfibly touched him. The cardinal of Pavia was stabbed by the duke of Urbino, who taxed him with being the caule of the lofs of Bologna. The pope's concern was the greater as he durft not punish, in the perfon of his nephew, a crime he would have thought worthy of the fevereft treatment, had it been committed by any other hand. His army being dispersed, and his designs upon Ferrara vanished, he quitted Ravenna and retired to Rome. In his way, he had the frequent mortification to fee the papers posted up for the calling of the council of Pifa, wherein he was himfelf fummoned to appear in perfon.

It was univerfally expected that Lewis XII. would per-Lewis orders fue his fucceffes, and certainly in the then fituation of Italy, his army to it was his own fault that he was not mafter of Rome, retire to The pope had no remedy speedy enough to free himself Milan. from from his fad condition. The king of Arragon was too re-1511. mote. The Venetians were unable to lend him a fufficient aid, and the emperor was not powerful enough to fave him, Guicciard, had he been willing to attempt it. Genoa, Bologna, Florence, Milan, were in the hands of his enemies. But Lewis, either through fcruple, or fome other motive, instead of pushing his point, ordered Triulzi to retire to Milan with the army, and difband part of the troops. Probably, he was willing to deprive the pope of the pretence of exciting all chriftendom against him, and publishing, that he in-tended to feize Rome and all Italy. He was justly apprehen-five of this from the pope, fince it was in effect the foundation, or rather the pretence of the league formed fome months after against France. Triulzi was no fooner at Milan, but Ferdinand's fleet arrived at Naples, with about three thousand men, who were foon to be followed by a more confiderable body.

It was not difficult to perceive, that the king of Arragon had fent his fleet to Naples to fupport the pope's interest, Julius II. and give jealousy to the Ling of France. Julius II. who agree with was better informed than any man, revived at the news, Lewis XII. and the rather, as he rightly judged that Ferdinand would not have been altogether affured of the king of England. Since the lofs of Bologna, and the rout of his army, he had feemed willing to confent to an agreement with France, and though he had made overtures more like a conqueror than one conquered, Lewis had accepted them on condition they were approved by the emperor. But when the pope found, the Spanish fleet was at Naples, and Ferdinand He falls out began to declare himfelf, he added new terms to those he again. had already propofed, and plainly fhewed he was no longer for peace. This conduct put Lewis XII. beyond all patience. So, defpairing to agree with fo obstinate an enemy, he ordered Triulzi to fend fupplies to Bentivoglio to guard Lewis takes Bologna, and fome time after, took Bologna and the Ben-der his protivoglios under his protection. On the other hand, tection, though he was not obliged to affift the emperor, unlefs he Act. Pub. came into Italy in perfon, he added however to the German June 30. troops in the ftate of Venice a ftrong reinforcement com- He aids the manded by la Palifie. Mean while, the pope having cer- emperor. tain advice of the good inclination of the kings of Arragon calls a counand England in his favour, refolved to fummon a general cil at the council in opposition to that of Pifa. To that end, he Lateran published a bull, wherein, having first excused the neglect church. the schismatic cardinals laid to his charge, and inveighed Guiceiard. C 4 againft 1511. against their infolence, he called a council to be held at I the Lateran in Rome, the 19th of April 1512.

THE HISTORY

Since the bifhop of Gurck's conference with the pope, Doubtfulbe- Maximilian's conduct was fo doubtful, that it was difficult haviour of to judge certainly of it. He had agreed to the calling of the council of Pifa, which was done with his express confent. But he had not yet appointed ambaffadors, neither was it known that any German bishop was preparing to go thither. Moreover, he had promifed to command in perfon in Italy, and led thither a ftrong reinforcement. But he remained unactive at Infpruck, without fhewing any thoughts either of the council of Pifa, or the war of Italy. Mean while, the conquests that were expected to be made upon the Venetians were to be all his. Thus, in the prefent posture of the affairs of Italy, Lewis XII. faw the burden of the war laid upon him alone, without his daring almost to complain to the emperor, for fear he fhould join with his enemies. And indeed, Maximilian was ftrongly follicited by the pope, the king of Arragon, and the Venetians themfelves, who offered him a good fum to induce him to defift from his pretenfions to their dominions. Very probably, he was yet unrefolved, and knowing the league that was forming against France, was willing, according to cuftom, to let the two parties proceed, in order to take afterwards that fide which best fuited with his interest. This doubtlefs was the reafon of his preferving a good understanding with Lewis XII. in confenting to the calling of the council of Pifa, and withal, of referving a means to be reconciled to the pope, in fending neither bifhops nor ambaffadors to the council. Thus remaining almost equally fuspected by both parties, he waited till the fuccess of the war, or the offers from both fides, fhould engage him to declare for one or other.

of Italy."

Mean while, affairs continued still in the fame fitua-Uncertainty tion. The pope and the Venetians were alone in open of the affairs war with France. The emperor feemed to float between both fides. The king of Arragon had hitherto done nothing more than afforded hopes that he would join the league when concluded. But it was not fo yet, every one fearing to engage in it unfeafonably. Julius II. and Ferdinand knew one another too well to confide in each other. Each ftrove to make the other fubfervient to his defigns, and was afraid at the fame time of being deceived. Ferdinand had still in France an ambassador, who endeavoured to perfuade the king, that the preparations in Spain concerned

40

Guicciard,

OF ENGLAND.

cerned only the Moors. On the other hand, the pope had not fo guarrelled with Lewis XII. but that he had still left him fome hopes, and continued a fort of negotiation with him, by means of the bifhop of Murray the Scotch ambaffador, who did the office of mediator. Ferdinand was afraid, in cafe the pope made a feparate peace with France, the kingdom of Naples would be in danger. The pope had no lefs reason to fear, that to secure the quiet possession of the kingdom of Naples, Ferdinand would forfake the interefts of the church, and leave him exposed to the mercy of the king of France. In that cafe, the pope would have nothing to expect from England. Thus, affairs were come to that pass, that it was necessary, either that each should quickly make a feparate treaty, or both jointly declare themfelves, not to remain in this flate of uncertainty. And Ferdinand therefore, Ferdinand began at last to pull off the mask a fends an arlittle more, by fending to Naples, the troops he pretended my to Nato defign for Africa, in order to hinder the pope from thinking of a feparate agreement with France.

Whilft the pope and the king of Arragon were thus Opening of founding each other, the cardinals, who had fummoned the the council council to Pifa and were come to Milan, thought fit to Guicciard, open it by commissioners. But this was only for form's fake, to keep to the day appointed. Never was general council fo thin. The bifhops of France were not yet arrived, and there was no likelihood of any from Germany. The pope was if enraged when he heard the council was The pope opened at Pifa. In his paffion with the Florentines, for puts Pifa and fuffering the council to meet in one of their towns, he ex-der an intercommunicated them as well as the Pifans, and put both dift. the cities under an interdict. But the Florentines forced Guicciard. the priefts to celebrate divine fervice, leaving to private the state make a perfons the liberty to observe or reject the interdict. jeft of it.

It was difficult for Julius II. and Ferdinand, to continue Henry prolong in their prefent fituation, without caufing mutual fuf- miles to enpicions, capable of changing the face of affairs. The rea- ter into the league. fon which had hitherto with-held Ferdinand, namely, his Herbert. uncertainty with respect to the king of England, was now Pol. Virg. vanished, Henry, after long suspence, had at last positively promifed to enter into the league against France. Whereupon the negotiation of the league advanced more in one month than in a whole year before. It was a conftant rule with Ferdinand, to cover all his defigns with the cloke of religion, little caring, that after the execution, his artifices were discovered. The fleet and army he had prepared in Spain, had for pretence a war with the infidels. When Henry's and Ferdinand's embaffy to Lewis XII.

Rome.

Guicciard.

Articles of the league. Act. Pub.

Guicciard.

When he was going to declare openly against France, he failed not to use the pretence of protecting the church against the outrages of Lewis. As foon as he had gained the king of England, they jointly fent ambaffadors to Lewis, to require him to leave the pope unmolefted, intimating that as chriftian princes they could not difpenfe with protecting the church, diffurbed by his ambition. Lewis faw plainly, that their measures being now taken, it would be too late to justify his conduct, and therefore chose to return a haughty answer, which was precisely what his encmies wanted.

League a- Shortly after, on the 4th of October, the pope, the king gainft France of Arragon, and the Venetians concluded a league at concluded at Rome, leaving a place for the king of England, who had fhewn his defire to be included. Indeed, Cardinal Bambridge was concerned in the negotiation as ambaffador of England. But he was ordered not to fign the treaty, because Henry expected to make a private one, more agreeable to the interefts of England than that which concerned Italy only. By this treaty the pope promifed to find for the fervice of the league fix hundred men at arms, five hur dred light horfe, fix thousand foot 1, and twenty thou-XIII.p. 747. fand ducats a month. The Venetians were to furnish eight hundred men at arms, a thousand light horse, eight thoufand foot, and to pay monthly twenty thousand ducats. Ferdinand was to provide twelve hundred men at arms, a thoufand light horfe, ten thousand foot, and twenty thoufand ducats a month. It is true, neither the king of France, nor the duke of Ferrara, were named in the treaty as enemies of the allies. But it was easy to perceive it, fince the intent of the league was to reftore to the pope the city of Bologna, and whatever belonged to the holy fee, and to make war upon all perfons that fhould offer to hinder it. A place was left for the emperor in cafe he would enter into it, and Raymond of Cardona, Viceroy of Naples, was declared general of the league.

Whilft the world was in expectation of the event of this league, the council of Pifa was folemnly opened in that

I In the treaty, as it flands in Rymer, it is only faid, that the pope was to furnish fix hundred men at arms, without any mention of light horfe and foot : neither is the number of troops that was to be fent by the Venetians specified, but it is faid, they were to find a fleet flrong enough to beat the enemy's ; and on the day of the publi. cation of the league, the pope and the Venetians were to pay eighty thousand ducats of gold for two months wages for their forces. Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 307. See Guicciardin, 1. 10.

city,

42 ISII.

city, by the cardinals who had convened it, and fome 1511. bifhops of France and Milan. The first fession was held the 4th of November, though the pope had excommu- A more fo-nicated the cardinals, and deprived them of their dignity. ing of the The fecond was held the 11th of the fame month. But council of because there was a commotion that day in the city, the Pifa. cardinals and bishops were fo terrified, that on the mor- The council row they removed the council to Milan, where they ex- removes to pected to be more out of danger. Indeed, the inhabitants Milan. of Pifa could not look with a good eye upon a council, which exposed them to an excommunication and interdict, though it was not in their power to oppofe the orders of the Florentines their fovercigns.

I observed that the Switzers were at variance with The Swit-Lewis XII. by the practices of the cardinal of Sion, or zers march rather of the pope himfelf, who fet him to work. Their Milanete. first attempt to enter the Milanese proving unfuccessful, Guicciard, they refolved this year to levy fixteen thousand men, the cardinal of Sion having politively promifed them money at their entrance into Italy, and that the army of the allies would employ the French in la Romagna. As this levy could not be ready till the beginning of the winter, they began their march in November, and penetrated as far as Varefe. Gafton de Foix, nephew of Lewis XII. governor of Milan, was fo defitute of troops, that he knew not how to oppose their passage. However, with the few men he had, he took the field, to annoy them and obftruct the march. But it was not poffible for him to hinder them from coming to the very gates of Milan. The They retire French had now begun to furnish the caftle with ammuni- fuddenly, tion in order to quit the city, when fuddenly the Switzers hearing no news of the pope, nor the army of the allies which they thought to be affembled in la Romagna, retired to their own country, after burning fome villages. If the pope had not difappointed them of the money he had promifed, and if the army of the allies had acted in la Romagna, Milan, Bologna, and Ferrara, would have been in great danger, fince the French were at that time very weak in those parts. La Palisse was then in the emperor's army with a large detachment of the king's beft troops.

Nothing could be more advantageous to England, than Fallepolicy to fee the forces of France turned against Italy. The con- of Henry quest of the duchy of Milan was lefs beneficial to Lewis meddle with XII. than to England. For it procured England a fettled the affairs of tranquillity, whereas it exposed France to perpetual trou. Italy.

43

bles.

bles, and an immenfe expence. It was therefore policy in Henry to fuffer the French, Germans, Italians, and Spaniards to battle it in Italy, without involving himself in a war which could never procure him any advantage. To the time I am speaking of, the kings of England, had taken care not to meddle with the affairs of Italy, if we except Henry III. who being unfortunately defirous of making his fecond fon king of Sicily, ruined his own kingdom to execute that extravagant project. But he was not a prince to be imitated by his fucceffors. The advantages of this policy were fo manifest to all the English, that it required no lefs than a Ferdinand, the ableft and most fubtle prince of his age, to make them fwerve from it.

> This prince had joined with the pope ever fince the beginning of the year 1510, or perhaps the end of the foregoing, and yet had been near two years without declaring himfelf. This delay proceeded only from his defire to fecure England first, that Henry might make a diversion in France, which would oblige Lewis XII. to neglect the affairs of Italy. This diversion must have been advantageous to the king of Arragon, fince it would remove from Italy, or at least weaken, a very formidable rival. But it is hard to conceive wherein it could be ferviceable to England. On the contrary, there feemed to be feveral very ftrong reasons to divert Henry from fuch a defign, without mentioning the peace he had lately renewed with France, and confirmed by a folemn oath. This probably was the caufe of his fo long deferring the conclusion of the league I shall speak of hereafter. Indeed it was not poffible, but that fome of the king's council were clear fighted enough to fee that this league was no ways advantageous to England, what colour foever was given thereto.

The pope excommunicates all the adherents of the council of Pifa.

defigns to feize Navarre,

Whilf the negotiation languished in England, new occurrences put Ferdinand upon taking fresh measures, and contriving all forts of ways to fucceed with Henry. Lewis XII. perfifted in his defign to hold the council of Pifa, as was faid, and that cauled Julius II. to convene another at the Lateran, and excommunicate by the fame bull all princes and others The king of who adhered to the first. Among these princes, was John Navarre is of d'Albret, king of Navarre, who being allied to Lewis XII. the number. blindly followed the directions of the court of France. The king of Navarre, had no fooner declared for the council of Pifa, but Ferdinand upon that pretence, formed the defign to feize his whole kingdom, and make Henry his fon-in-law the inftrument to execute it. To that end, he gave Henry ţq to understand, that a fair opportunity offered to recover Gui-ISII. enne, taken by France from one of his predeceffors, fince the L league that was going to be concluded in Italy would find He makes a Lewis XII. fo much employment, that probably, he would cautious pronot be able to defend his own country. But as the diftance Henry. of Guienne might deter Henry from attempting that conqueft, Ferdinand out of affection, very willingly promifed . to fupply him with troops, transport ships, artillery, provifions, ammunition, without flipulating any thing for himfelf, but the fole pleafure of procuring his fon-in-law fo great an This offer opened the eyes of Henry and his advantage. council^m. The acquifition of Guienne feemed to them a Henry rething fo advantageous, and withal, fo glorious in the begin- folves upon carrying war ning of this reign, that the king, without any farther diffi- into Guiculty, entered into the league proposed by the pope, Ferdi- enne. nand, and the Venetians. Such was the real motive " that Herbert. induced the court of England to break the peace lately renewed with France, without alledging other reason than the protection granted by Lewis to the Bentivoglios, and the calling of the unlawful affembly at Pifa. As if England was concerned to help the pope to Bologna, and oppofe with arms a council, confifting of a fcore of French bifhops, without power and credit even in the very place where they were affembled. We fhall fee prefently, how Henry was the dupe of his affectionate father-in-law, and how Ferdinand, politickly made use of him to ferve his own ends, without giving himfelf the leaft trouble about his fon-in-law's affairs.

44 ISII.

OF ENGLAND.

When Ferdinand had gained Henry, he concluded at Rome, with the pope and the Venetians, the fore-mentioned league. In this treaty of Rome, it was exprelly faid that all the articles were negotiated and fettled with the king of England's knowledge, the cardinal of York acting for him, and daily expecting orders to fign it, but that for certain reafons the conclusion of it could be no longer delayed.

m The lord Herbert fays, fome of the council who more ferioufly weighed the business, were against a war with France, and more particularly for a reafon which England fhould never forget. Let us therefore (fays one of the council) leave off our attempts againft the terra firma. The natural fituation of iflands feems not to fort with conquests in that kind. England alone is a just empire : or when we would enlarge ourfelves, let it be that way we can, and to which it feems the eternal providence hath deftined us; and that is by fea. Herbert, p. S.

n Another inducement to Henry was the pope's promife to take away the title of most christian from the king of France, and confer it on him. Which he thought would be a perpetual glory to the nation. Ibid.

45

About

THEHISTORY

~ League bedinand for Nov. 17. of Rome.

46

ISII.

About fix weeks after, Henry and Ferdinand concluded at London, a private league for the conquest of Guienne . This was a confequence of the first, on the supposition that tween Hen-ty and Fer- the depriving the king of France of that province was a good means to ferve and protect the church of God, the great the conquest and principal aim of the allies. If ever God's holy name was of Guienne. openly and fhamelefly taken in vain, it is in the preambles of XIII.p.311. these two treaties. In the first, the pope protested that his fole aim in defiring Bologna, and the other states which be-Fallemotives longed to the church, was, to reftore Italy to her former tranquillity, that all chriftians might join their forces against the infidels, as he had ever wifhed, and still did wifh most fincerely. Thus, to make war upon the infidels, it was neceffary that Italy should be free from troubles, which could not be hoped till the pope had executed his ambitious projects, without which Italy was not to expect to enjoy any quiet.

Articles of London between Henry and Ferdinand,

In the fecond treaty, Henry and Ferdinand fet forth, the league of ce That they had made alliances with all chriftian princes, " folely to be enabled to wage war with the enemies of " Chrift ; and for that purpole, were now employed in pre-" paring powerful armies by land and fea; but that fud-" denly, when they least expected it, they were told, the " king of France's troops were belieging Bologna, where " the pope, old and infirm, lay feized with a grievous dif-" temper, and attended by all his cardinals : that being ex-" tremely afflicted at this news, they had befought the king " of France by letters and ambaffadors, to give over his de-" fign: that the pope had offered him the pardon of all his " fins, provided only he would abstain from the patrimony " of the church, ceafe to inflame the fchifm, and adhere to " the council of Lateran : but that all this had been to no " purpose. On the contrary, he had made himself master " of Bologna, by the treachery of fome of the inhabitants ; " twice routed the army of the holy church of Rome, and " in contempt of the holy fee, called a council, after having " bribed fome of the cardinals. That fince, the pope had " fent a legate to him to demand only that he would forbear " to attack the church. That the legate not prevailing, " the kings of England and Spain had fent ambaffadors to "advife him amicably to defift from his attempts and be " reconciled with the pope, or elfe they could do no lefs

> · The English commissioners were, Thomas Howard, earl of Surrey, and

George Talbot, carl of Shrewfbury. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 312. ce than

OF ENGLAND.

"than undertake the protection of the church ; but that their dvice had been flighted. That upon all these confiderations, the two kings perfectly knowing how detrimental fuch an ambition might prove to the catholick faith, the church of God, and the welfare of Christendom, had thought proper to agree upon the following articles, to the praise and glory of almighty God, our lord Jefus Christ, and the whole triumphant court of heaven, for the defence, exaltation, increase of the catholick faith, the christian religion, the holy Roman church, which was unjustly oppressed, and upon the frequent instances, exhortations, and admonitions of the pope, the head thereof." The fubstance of this pious treaty was as follows :

I. The two kings took upon them the defence and protection of the holy Roman church, against all perfons that should attack her ^p.

II. Ferdinand, as catholick king, and to difcharge his duty to God and the church, promifed to take up arms in her defence in Italy.

In the IIId article it was faid, that the pope and the facred college of cardinals had judged, that in order to deliver the church from the opprefion fhe groaned under, it was neceffary to wage war upon the king of France, not only in Italy, but in fuch of his provinces alfo as bordered upon the two allies. And therefore it was agreed, that they fhould carry their arms into Guienne, and conquer that province for the crown of England, and that Henry, in affifting the church, might at the fame time recover what belonged to him. To that purpofe, as foon as Ferdinand fhould have actually declared againft the kingdom of France, and taken up arms in defence of the church, Henry, at a proper feafon, fhould proclaim war againft the fame prince in defence of the fame church.

To perform this article, Henry promifed to fend into Guienne fome time in April 1512, fix thousand foot ⁹ commanded by a good general: to maintain them at his own expence, and not recall them without the confent of the king of Arragon. Ferdinand bound himfelf, on his part, to find five hundred men at arms, fifteen hundred light horfe, and

P —Contra omnes illam invadentes feu oppugnantes. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 313.

XIII. p. 313. 9 By an additional article, dated March 16, it was agreed, that Henry fhould fend five hundred men more; and Ferdinand find in all two thousand men at arms, and three thousand light horfe. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 324.

four-

four thouland foot, on the fame terms. Moreover, he engaged to furnifh the Englifh troops with provisions and ammunition at a moderate price. It was farther agreed, that each of the two kings fhould fend a fleet to fea with three thousand good foldiers, for fix months besides the mariners, and that neither should recall his fleet without the other's confent.

IV. That Ferdinand fhould find forty fhips, at a reafonable rate, to transport the English forces.

V. That in cafe the allies fhould take any places in Guienne and elfewhere, they fhould be delivered to him of the two kings, who had a prior title to the fame.

VI. That if either of the two kings fhould be attacked out of Guienne, they fhould jointly take care of the defence of the country, of him who wanted affiftance, fincerely and with all their power.

VII. That the two kings confidering that the pope had called at Rome a council, which all chriftian princes ought to obey, and fend ambaffadors to, and it was affirmed that the king of France perfifted in his defign to continue the council fummoned to Pifa, they agreed to adhere to whatever fhould be decreed by the council of Lateran, and oppofe that of Pifa, with all its favourers and adherents.

VIII. That neither of the two kings fhould make peace or truce without a mutual confent.

IX. That by this, the former treaties fhould not be deemed void, but, on the contrary, remain in full force.

X. That it fhould be ratified within four months by Henry, and Ferdinand, in his own and the name of queen Jane his daughter.

Imprudence of Henry and his council. Henry and his council thought, without doubt, they had made a very advantageous treaty, fince it was to procure them the duchy of Guienne, and Ferdinand demanded nothing for himfelf, as if he had acted purely from a motive of religion, and out of affection to his fon-in-law, though in reality, he had confulted only his own intereft. As for the pope's affairs, about which both kings feemed to be fo greatly concerned, it may be affirmed, they did not fo much as think of them, as it afterwards appeared. But they wanted that pretence to dazzle the publick, though, in all appearance, the world was not fo blind, as to imagine that two great kings fhould take up arms on purpofe to diffolve a council which called itfelf general, composed of a fmall number of bifhops, of one nation only, and fo little regarded, that that even at Milan, where it was removed, the government 1511. was forced to make use of their whole authority to procure its reception.

During these transactions, the emperor gave the king of Lewis's fuf-France fo much caufe to fuspect his fincerity, that neceffity picionsofthe only obliged him to feign any further confidence in him. Guicciard, There was no German bishop come to the council, and when the emperor was preffed upon that fubject, he replied, it was neceffary first to have the approbation of the diet of the empire, which he did not doubt of obtaining : that though he should fend bishops from his hereditary dominions to Pifa, it would be more prejudicial than advantageous to the council, fince it would give occafion to imagine, he despaired to obtain the diet's confent. On the other hand, instead of commanding in perfon his army in the ftate of Venice, as he had promifed, he left all to the French troops, who were come to his aid. In fhort, whilft he liftened to the offers of the pope, Ferdinand, and the Venetians, he told the French ambaflador, he was ready to march to Rome, at the head of an army, provided his mafter would fend him a ftrong reinforcement, and a fum of money, proportionable to the greatness of the undertaking. Amidst these uncertainties, Lewis knew not what to truft to. He could not look upon Maximilian but as an ally ready to abandon him, if he found it more for his interest to join with his enemies. In that cafe, all the emperor's conquests upon the Venetians would be fo many loffes to France. Mean while, the fupplies he lent him were very expensive, and yet, he durst not afford him a pretence to change fides. Thus Lewis faw himfelf upon the point of being attacked by all the forces of the pope, the king of Spain, and the Venetians, without any hope of affiftance from the emperor. As for England, though Lewis fufhe was yet ignorant of the treaty of London, and Henry's pects Henry. ambaffador politively denied that his mafter intended to be concerned, all Henry's proceedings were plain indications that he would foon declare against him.

Mean while, the pope, who had ever in view the taking The king of of Bologna and Ferrara, was very preffing with the viceroy Arragon's army joins of Naples to advance with his troops, and take the command the pope and of the confederate army. But notwithftanding all his folici- Venetians. tations, the junction could not be till the middle of Decem-Guicciard, ber, and even then, the Naples artillery not being yet arrived, the army could be only employed in fome trifling expeditions in la Romagna, with which ended the year 1511. It is time now to return to the affairs of England. Vol. VI. D Though

49

THE HISTORY

1511. Hall. Herbert. Hollingfh.

50.

Lewis has league of London.

1512.

Henry acquaints the parliament tains an aid of money. Herbert. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

ion of Ed. mund Dudley reftored. Herbert.

Though Henry had not yet proclaimed war with France. Lewis XII. knew what he was to expect. He had good intelligence by means of one Buonvilo, a merchant of Lucca, who being a bankrupt, was retired into England, where he had obtained fo much favour from the pope as to be made a kind of agent '. This man being corrupted by France, difcovered to Lewis the fecrets, the pope was fometimes forced to truft him with; and hence it was that the court of France was informed of many things which the English would have concealed from them. It was probably by this means notice of the that the king of France had the first notice of the league concluded at London, though it was made a great fecret. But fhortly after, he had no more occasion for fpies to know Henry's intentions.

The parliament being met the fourth of February ', the king communicated his defign of making war with France. He protefted, his fole aim was to free the pope from the king of France's oppression, and especially to cause the schismatiwith his de- cal council of Pifa, now removed to Milan, to be diffolved. fign, and ob- Though this war, undertaken as the king himfelf affirmed, folely to oblige the pope, was little agreeable to the intereft of England, the parliament however gave the king a large fubfidy t. In all appearance, the leading members of the house of commons being informed of the true reasons, fo ordered it, that the reft came into their opinion. Otherwife, it would have been difficult to make them perceive the neceffity of England's engaging in a war with France, to reftore Bologna to the pope, and diffolve a council fo inconfiderable John Dudley as that of Pifa. Before the parliament broke up, the king was pleafed to reftore John Dudley, fon of Edmund Dudley, to the rank and honours his family had been deprived of by the father's attainder. From that time, he had always an > r His collector and proctor in England, fays Hall, fol. 16.

3 Hall fays, it met January 15. fol. 16; and Hollingshead, the 25th, p. 812.

* Two fifteenths from the commons, and two tenths from the clergy. Hall, fol. 16. Stow, p. 490-The most remarkable flatutes enacted in this parliament, were thefe : 1. That every captain fhall have his whole and perfect number of men and foldiers, and give them their full wages, upon pain of imprisonment, and forfeiting all his goods and chattels. 2. That no cloth shall be exported out of the realm, till it is barbed, rowed, and fhorn, upon pain of forfeiting the fame. 3. Several ignorant pretenders and quacks having taken upon them to practife phyfick, it was now ordained, that no perfon fhould take upon him to exercife the profession of a physician and furgeon, unless he is first examined and approved by the bishop of the diocese where he resides, or his vicar general, upon pain of forfeiting fix pounds a month. See Statut, affection for him, and at length, towards the end of his reign, made him lord admiral of England.

1. C. J. S.

affection

The war Henry intended to undertake against France, ha- Henry fends ving for pretence the diffolving of the council of Pifa, he ambailadors could not difpense with acknowledging that of Lateran, and to the counfending thither ambaffadors. He made choice of Silvester, ran. bifhop of Worcefter, with fir Robert Wingfield, and com- Act. Pub. miffioned them to agree in his name to whatever fhould be February 9. deemed neceffary for the reformation of the church, as well Herbert, in the head as in the members. This claufe was only to caft a mift before people's eyes, fince nothing certainly was farther from the pope's thoughts, than to endeavour in this council, either his own or the church's reformation.

The time being come to execute the projects agreed by The marquis Henry and Ferdinand in the treaty of London, Henry gave of Dorfet the command of his fleet to fir Edward Howard, fon and army into heir to the earl of Surrey ", and of his army, which was to Spain. act on land, to Thomas Grey, marquis of Dorfet ". All Act. Pub. the troops that were to ferve in the Guienne expedition, being Hall. embarked about the middle of May, in Spanish vessels, ar- Stow. rived the 8th of June, at Paffage, in the province of Gui-Herbert. pufcoa, where the marquis of Dorfet landed those he was to Hollingsh. command. The lord Herbert fays, these troops confisted of ten thousand men, but probably, he included in that number the three thousand that were to ferve at lea according to the treaty x.

The admiral having convoyed the marquifs of Dorfet to Hall. Spain, put to fea again, and arriving on the coaft of Bre-Stow. tagne, landed fome troops, and plundered the country y. Hollingfh. Henry hearing, the king of France was preparing a great naval armainent, fent a reinforcement 2 to his admiral,

The king, by an indenture dated April 8, granted fir Edward the following allowance. For his own maintenance, diet, wages, and rewards, ten shillings a day. For each of the captains, for their diet, wages, and re-wards, eighteen pence a day. For every foldier, mariner, and gunner, five shillings a month for his wages, and five shillings for his victuals, reckoning twenty eight days in the month. See Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 327.

w He was accompanied by his three brothers, John, Anthony, and Leonard; and by the lords Brocke, Wil-loughby, Ferrers, the baron of Bur-ford, fir Richard Cornwall, fir Maurice Barkley, fir William Sandes, &c. Hall, fol. 17.

x He fays farther, that it appears by the Spanish history, that there were among them five thousand archers, who carried, befides their bows, halberts, which they pitched in the ground till their arrows were shot, and then took up again to do execution on the enemy. An excellent part (fays he) of military difcipline, and yet not remarked by our English chronicles, p. 9.

Y About Conquet, and Breft. Hall, fol. 20.

z Of twenty five thips which the king came and viewed at Portfmouth. Idem. fol. 21.

D 2

which

engagement, which ended in great lofs on both fides. The regent a first rate ship * and the Cordeliere, commanded by * Primauget b, being grappled, were both blown up, with two fleets meeting the roth of August, came to a furious lofs of all their men. This accident happened by the defperate courage of Primauget, who finding he could not fave Ferdinand's private defign to conquer Navarre.

his fhip, fet fire to the powder c. The treaty of league concluded at London, feemed to be made only to pave the way for Henry to the conquest of Guienne. But Ferdinand had never any fuch thought. His fole aim was to conquer Navarre for himfelf, and employ to that end the English troops he had fent for into Spain. But as it was by no means proper to inform Henry of fuch-a project, he had been obliged to allure him with the hopes of recovering Guienne, in order to induce him to fend his troops. This is the true reason why Ferdinand fhowed in the treaty fo much difinterestedness, that all the advantage feemed to be on the fide of England. But the performance was very far from answering the engagement.

The marquifs of Dorfet being arrived in Guipufcoa, found a commissioner of the king, who paid him great refpect, and told him, the duke d'Alva was taking the field, in order to join him. And indeed, the duke immediately put himfelf at the head of the Spanish army. But instead of joining the English who were encamped near Fontarabia with defign to befiege with him the city of Bayonne, as was refolved, he kept at Logrogno on the borders of Navarre. He intimated to the English general, that the king of Navarre being in alliance with France, it would be very dangerous to attack Bayonne with Navarre behind them: that whilft they fhould be employed in the fiege, the king of Navarre might introduce the French into his dominions, join with them, and by encamping a Commanded by fir Thomas Knevet, maßer of the king's horfe. The other captains of note were, fir John Carew, fir Charles Brandon, fir Henry Guildford. This engagement happened in August. Ibid.

b Barbaroufly called by our chronicles, fir Piers Morgan, fays my lord Herbert, p. 11. In this fea fight the English had forty five, and the French thirty nine fhips. Hall, and Hollingfhead, give a large defcription of the battle, fol. 21. 22. p. 815.

c Upon the lofs of the regent, the king built a fhip the greateft ever known before, and called it Henry grace de Dieu. Hall, fol. 22. Though Buchanan, and Lesle fay, he imitated James IV. king of Scotland, in one he had made, but built it fo, that they could not make it fteer. Herbert, p. II.

His many artifices to compass his ends. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

52 1512. between the mountains of Navarre and the fea, cut off the provisions which should be brought to the camp before Bayonne, without being obliged to give battle, if he thought proper: that therefore it was neceffary, before they engaged in the fiege, to try to gain the king of Navarre to the interests of their masters.

These reasons were so plausible, that the marquis of Dorfet was eafily perfuaded to fend an English officer to the king of Navarre, to require him to join with the allies. Ferdinand fummoned him likewife, but more haughtily, to forfake the king of France, and come into the league 4. The king of Navarre replied, he was refolved to ftand neutral. But the English and Spaniards not being fatisfied with this answer, jointly pressed him to declare himself, or deliver four of his towns for their fecurity, which that prince would not grant. During these negotiations, a French army commanded by the duke of Longueville, approached the frontiers of Bearn. Whereupon the marquifs of Dorfet complained to Ferdinand, that the time loft in folliciting the king of Navarre, had ferved only to give the French opportunity to come and defend their borders, and withall prefled him to declare, whether he would attack Guienne purfuant to the treaty of London. Ferdinand answered, prudence would not fuffer him to fend his army to Fontarabia to befiege Bayonne, and leave his dominions exposed to the invalions of the French and Navarrois: that it was much more convenient to pass through Navarre, and fecure three or four places, in order to hinder his enemies from making use of that kingdom against him: that therefore he wished the English would join the duke of Alva, and his army fhould make the vanguard, to be exposed to the first dangers: that however the fiege of Bayonne would not be retarded, becaufe there was no queftion, the king of Navarre would be glad to be preffed, in order to justify himself to the king of France, when he should enter into the league. The marquils of Dorfet, who did not yet fee into his defigns, having held a council of war replied, that by his inftructions he could undertake nothing against the king of Navarre; but if the duke of Alva would pass through that kingdom, he might if he pleafed, but for his part, being already near Bayonne, he could not think of taking fo great a compass to join him.

d It was called the Holy League. Herbert, p. 9.

53.

D 3

Ferdinand

1512. Alva befieges Pampeluna. Guicciard. Hall. Herbert.

54

Navarre retires to France.

Pampeluna taken.

Ferdinand his artifices.

Alva overruns Navarre.

The marquis of Dorfet perceives Ferdinand's artifices. Ferdinand gets an order for the marquis to obey him. Hall. Herbert. Hollingfh.

He has a mind to attack Bearn. Herbert,

Ferdinand was not content with this answer. He ftrongly infifted upon what he had proposed, that the English The duke of troops should come and join his army, and in the mean while, gave orders to the duke of Alva to befiege Pampeluna, metropolis of Navarre. During the fiege, he continually amused the marquifs of Dorfet with politive promifes, that immediately after the taking of Pampeluna, the duke of Alva should join him to beliege Bayonne. Mean The king of while, the king of Navarre being unable to defend himfelf, was retired into France, where he made a treaty with Lewis XII. for their common defence. But it coft him the town of Salvatierra, and all Bearn, which he was forced to deliver to the French.

Pampeluna having furrendered by capitulation the 25th of July, Ferdinand, according to his promife fhould have ordered the duke of Alva to join the English. But the reft of the fortified towns in Navarre ferved him for pretence to delay the junction. So the duke of Alva contigoes on with nued his conquests; whilst the English troops, though without flirring from their camp, ferved as a countenance to his defigns. And indeed, though the French, who daily received fresh supplies, faw themselves sufficiently strong to withstand the duke of Alva, they never dared to enter Navarre, for fear of coming between the English and Spa-The duke of niards. Wherefore, being contented to remain encamped between Bayonne and Salvatierra, they gave the duke of Alva all the leifure he wanted to fubdue almost all Navarre.

> Then it was that the marquifs of Dorfet plainly perceived the king of Arragon, acted with infincerity, and that his defign from the very first was not to invade Guienne, but conquer Navarre. Ferdinand was very fenfible, his artifice would at last be discovered. So, to prevent the complaints the English general might make to the king his master, he fends an express to England, to give Henry an account, after his manner, of the affairs of that country, and to defire him to order his general to act in concert with him. Henry who had received nothing to the contrary from the marguifs, readily fent Windfor herald with the defired orders to the general.

> Whilft the Herald was on his journey, the duke of Alva became master of St. Juan de Pie del Puerto. Presently after the taking of that place, Ferdinand acquainted the marquifs of Dorfet, that his army was ready to march into Guienne, and defired him to join the duke of Alva without delay.

OF ENGLAND.

delay. But the marquifs was no longer willing to be de-1512. ceived. He knew, the French army was intrenched between Bayonne and Salvatierra, with the river Bidaffoa in The marfront, which must be passed within view, and besides Bay-quis refuses onne was so well provided, that there was no likelihood of befieging it. What Ferdinand therefore propofed was impracticable, and only a continuation of his artifices. From St. Juan de Pie del Puerto, the right-hand road led into Bearn, and the left to Bayonne, fo the duke of Alva's intent was to engage the English to enter Bearn with him, under colour there was no other way to draw the enemies from their advantageous post, or at least to beliege Salvatierra. But the English general having no orders to make war upon the king of Navarre, either in Bearn or elfewhere, refused to join the Spaniards. Ferdinand reaped this advantage from his refufal, that he caft the whole blame upon him, of their not invading Guienne according to the treaty. After that the duke of Alva turning back, laid fiege to Effella, the only place that remained to the king of Navarre.

The marquifs of Dorfet, full of indignation at these He prepares proceedings, and confidering that his army was daily weak- to return to England. ned by ficknefs and want of provisions, which were grown Hall. fcarce fince the war in Navarre, defired Ferdinand to fur-Herbert. nish him with ships for his return. It was with great dif- Hollingsh. ficulty that he obtained his requeft, Ferdinand still protesting against his departure, as directly contrary to the treaty. Mean while, he was not forry for it, fince the English were almost become useles, after the conquest of Navarre. In the mean while, the Marquifs of Dorfet falling fick, the lord Thomas Howard took the command of the army. At He arrives the fame time, as the troops were going to embark, the in England. herald arrived from England; with politive orders to the general, to obey the commands of king Ferdinand e. But the army mutinying it was impoffible to detain the foldiers any longer in Spain, and the embarkation being made, they arrived in England in November f. Henry was at first Henry pervery angry with his general, but being informed of all par- ceives he had ticulars during the campaign, plainly faw, Ferdinand had upon. deceived him, and that his affected difinterestedness in the treaty of league, was only to draw him more eafily into e King Henry promifed at the fame time to fend a new fupply of troops, under the command of the lord Herbert, his chamberlain. Hall, fol.

20, Heibert, p. 10. f In the beginning of December. Hall, fo]. 20.

D4

the

THE HISTORY

1512.

the fnare. He thought proper however to diffemble, for fear of giving Ferdinand a pretence to join with France, and leave him embarraffed.

Before the year was expired, Ferdinand faw himfelf in had full poffeffion of Navarre, though the king of France used fome endeavours to wrest that conquest out of his hands. In December, the king of Navarre, and Francis duke of Angoulême befieged Pampeluna; but not being able to take the place, were forced to abandon the reft of the kingdom to the Spaniards. After Ferdinand was in polfeffion of Navarre, he fought pretences to keep it, but found no better than a bull of pope Julius II. who excommuni-cated John d'Albret king of Navarre, and gave his kingdom in prey to the conqueror. Mezerai affirms, this bull never appeared, but the lord Herbert fays, it was dated March 1. 1512.

We must now see what passed in Italy whilst Ferdinand was conquerring Navarre. The confederate army of the pope, the king of Arragon, and the Venetians, under the command of the viceroy of Naples, taking the field in December, the pope caufed the viceroy to be continually preffed by cardinal John de Medici, his legate to befiege Bologna. At length, notwithftanding the opposition of the viceroy, and the Venetian general, who forefaw great difficulties in the execution of that defign, the pope's infrances were to be complied with, and the fiege of Bologna being refolved, the army of the allies g appeared before the city. But Gafton de Foix duke of Nemours, and governor of Milan, coming to its relief, compelled the allies to raise the siege. Some days after, he defeated a Venetian army at Brefcia, and flew eight thousand men.

He routs the At laft, on the 11th of April finding means to give the allies, but is allies battle near Ravenna, he put them to rout, and took killed himfelf.

Guicciard.

the legate prifoner; but was himfelf flain after the battle, in too warmly purfuing a body of Spaniards, who were re-La Paliffe is treating in good order. After that prince's death, la Paliffe mafter of all took the command of the army, and the next day became la Romagna. mafter of Ravenna. Whereupon all the towns of la Romagna, taken by the pope after the battle of Agnadel, voluntarily furrendered to the cardinal of St. Severin, who was in the French army as legate of the council of Pifa, transferred to Milan.

> g It confisted of eighteen hundred men at arms, and about ten thousand foot. Guicciard, l. 10.

> > The

56

Ferdinand' keeps Na-

Affairs of Italy. Guicciard.

Bembo.

Siege of Bologna, raifed by

Bembo.

Gafton de Foix.

varre.

OF ENGLAND.

The confernation at Rome was fo great, that the car-1 1512. dinals went into a body to petition the pope to make peace with France. But Julius II. had refources unknown per- The pope haps to the cardinals. So, all they could obtain was to time. engage him to make fome feigned advances, in order to gain time, and hinder the French from marching to Rome, as they might eafily have done, without fear of meeting any obstacle.

Whilft Lewis's affairs feemed to be in the most flou- Lewis's afrifhing condition, they were in reality upon the decline. The fairs decline. Switzers, encouraged by the cardinal of Sion, preparing to zers march exert their utmost to invade the duchy of Milan, la Palisse to Milan, thought it more for his mafter's intereft to relieve that coun- La Palifie try which was destitute of troops, than make conquests in Guicciard, the ecclefiaffical flate. So, leaving the cardinal of St. Severin in la Romagna, with five or fix thousand men, he hastily marched into Milan. The retreat of the French, when it lay in their power to march to Rome, infpired Julius II. with fresh courage. From thenceforward he would no Thepoperemore hear of peace, though Lewis XII offered him the fules a peace. fame terms as before his victory. At this juncture it was Opening of that the council of Lateran was opened the 3d of May, the council which had been delayed by reason of the battle of Ra- of Lateran." venna.

All hope of peace vanishing, the pope excommunicated Lewis XII. Lewis XII. and put France under an interdict h. He used is excommu-for pretence the continuity of his boots which have a set of the for pretence the captivity of his legate, who was detained Bembo. at Milan, where, though a prifoner, he performed how- Guicciard. ever the functions of the pope's legate, the inhabitants of Milan refufing to own the authority of the council held in their city. It was a great mortification to Lewis, to fee The council his council contemned by his own fubjects, but this was only iscontemned a fmall part of the misfortunes to which he was exposed the fame year. After la Paliffe had quitted la Romagna, all La Romagthe towns of that country fubmitted to the pope. At the the pope. fame time, Ferdinand became master of Navarre, and Lewis was forced to fend an army into Bearn to hinder the English and Spaniards from invading Guienne. On the The empeother hand, the emperor concluded a truce with Venice, and ror's truce fecretly promifed to withdraw from the French army a Venetians. body of German troops, lent the king for the defence of Bembo.

h It is faid, Lewis caufed feveral medals to be coined with this infeription, Perdam Babylonem, I will defroy Babylon. Which if true, flews that Rome was not called Babylon firft by protestants, relieves it.

the

the Milanefe. And yet upon the affurance of this aid it 1512. was that Lewis recalled from Milan part of his own troops, not doubting that with those he left there, and the Germans fent him by the emperor, he fhould be able to refift his enemies. Thus, the French finding themfelves weak in the duchy of Milan, la Paliffe was obliged to recall the cardinal of St. Severin, with his troops, which was the caufe of the lofs of la Romagna.

Theemperor zers pafs through Trent. Guicciard.

58

They approach Milan.

his troops from the French, Guicciard. who return home. removed to Lyons. Cardinal makes his efcape.

mercy. Guicciard,

Mean while, the Switzers, to the number of fixteen thouletstheSwit-fand, began their march about the End of August, or the beginning of September. But inftead of taking the direct road to the Milanefe, the paffes whereof, they did not queftion, were firongly guarded, they marched to Trent, with Maximilian's permiffion. Though this, if any, was an enemy's act, he was still defirous to hide his intentions, by telling the French ambaffador, that his alliance with the Switzers fuffered him not to refuse them a passage through his dominions, as if his treaty with Lewis XII. was to be lefs obferved. The Switzers having paffed unmolefted through Trent, proceeded to Verona, and joining the Venetians, they marched together towards Milan. Whereupon the French entirely difconcerted, and not having above ten thousand men, refolved to retire into the fortified towns, in order to wafte the enemy's army by fieges, till the king fent them fupplies, or the approaching winter ftopped the progress of Theemperor the allies. But they were foon deprived of this refuge, withdraws by the emperor's orders for his troops to, retire immediately. These orders being punctually obeyed, la Palisse found himfelf fo weak, that despairing to fave the Milanefe, he refolved to repais the mountains, and return into France. The prelates of the council feeing Milan was going to be aban-The council doned, by a fudden decree, removed the council to Lyons, and followed the French troops. They would have carried the cardinal de Medici with them, but went away in fuch de Medici ' confusion, that his friends found means to fecure him. After the French were retired, all the towns of the dutchy readily furrendered to the Switzers and Venetians, except Parma, Bologna left Placentia, and Reggio, which fubmitted to the pope. On to the pope's the other hand, Alexander Bentivoglio, not thinking himfelf fafe in Bologna, departed from thence with all his family, leaving the city to the pope's mercy. Thus Julius II. who, about a month before, faw himfelf in a very ill fituation, was arrived at the height of his wifnes by this furprizing revolution, which reftored him Ravenna, Bologna, all la Romagna, and drove the French out of Italy.

There

There remained still four things to do to complete the 1512. pope's happinels, namely, to difposses the duke of Ferrara, to reftore the Sforzas to Milan, and the Medici to Florence, The duke of Ferrara goes and laftly, to expel the Germans and Spaniards out of Italy. to Rome, As for the duke of Ferrara, he voluntarily delivered him- and efcapes, felf to the pope, upon the faith of a fafe conduct. An im- Guicciard. prudence which would have cost him dear, had he not been freed by Fabricius Colonna his friend, who forced the guard, fet at the gates of Rome to hinder his departure.

The French were no fooner out of Italy, than the allies Congress of began to discover their different ends in acting against France. Mantua be-Upon this occasion they judged proper to meet at Mantua, allies, where they could agree but upon two articles, namely, that Ibid. Maximilian Sforza eldeft fon of Lodovico the Moor, fhould be reftored to Milan, and the House of de Medici to Florence. In confequence of this laft refolution, the army of Florence the allies approaching Florence compelled the Florentines fubmits to to confent to a treaty, whereby the Medici were reftored to Guicciard, their country as citizens only, and not as governors. But the cardinal de Medici entering the city by virtue of the treaty, whilft the army of the allies was at the gates, found means to introduce many officers and foldiers, and raise a fedition which made him master of the city. Whereupon, the government was fettled upon the fame foot, as before the banishment of the Medici.

- It was a great matter for the pope to have reftored the Another Medici to Florence, and Sforza to Milan. But this did not congress at fuffice to content him. The duke of Ferrara was still maf-Rome, ter of his duchy, and the council of Pifa fitting at Lyons. Guicciard. The allies therefore must be brought to turn their arms against Ferrara, and procure a peace between the emperor and the Venetians, that the emperor might without difficulty abandon his council. To that purpose, the pope obtained. a fecond meeting at Rome, where he could gain nothing with respect to Ferrara, because the duke was protected by the king of Arragon. Befides, the Venetians could not agree to find men and money to render the pope mafter of that duchy. As for the peace between the emperor and Venice, he found still greater difficulties, though he passionately wished to accomplish that project, for fear one or other of the two powers should recall the French into Italy. But the intolerable terms proposed by the emperor to the Venetians hindered him from fucceeding. In fhort, the pope feeing his I labour

59

THE HISTORY

The pope's league with the emperor nice. Guicciard. Articles of the league.

60

1512.

renounces the council of Pifa. Guicciard.

Sforza is put of Milan.

the year 1512.

labour was in vain, and defiring at any rate to diffolve the council of Pifa, and prevent the return of the French into Italy, concluded with the emperor a league offenfive and defenfive against Venice. By this treaty, the emperor enagainst Ve- gaged to become a principal party in the league of Rome, and agreed, that the pope should keep Parma, Placentia, and Reggio, faving however the rights of the empire. He promiled to renounce the council of Pifa, and forfake the duke of Ferrara and the Bentivoglios. The pope engaged on his part to aid the emperor with all his power, thunder his cenfures against the Venetians, declare them excluded out of the league of Rome, and drop the profecution of the Colonnas for aiding the duke of Ferrara to make his escape. Theemperor The treaty being figned and ratified, the bilhop of Gurck, as the emperor's lieutenant renounced in the next feffion of the council of Lateran the affembly of Pifa, and revoked whatever had been done by the emperor towards the calling and fupporting it.

About the end of December, Maximilian Sforza, eldeft in pofferfion fon of Lodovico the Moor, was put in pofferfion of the duchy of Milan, purfuant to the agreement of the allies at Mantua.

Remarks on I have now run over the occurrences of the year 1512, a year very remarkable for the feveral changes in the affairs of Italy, and still more, for the conduct of the princes concerned, which discovers their different characters. Lewis XII. was the dupe of his fcruples, which made him lofe the opportunity of difabling the pope to hurt him, and in the end occafioned the lofs of the Milanefe. Julius II. made religion fubservient to his immoderate ambition, by using the glory of God and the good of the church for a cloak to gratify his paffions. Having formed a league to reftore the Venetians to their dominions, to the glory of God and exaltation of the christian faith, he concluded another, on the same pretence, to disposses them of all they had recovered. Ferdinand drew Henry VIII. into a war for the pope's defence, and to procure Guienne for the crown of England, but artfully made it fubfervient to the conquest of Navarre for himfelf. The emperor Maximilian acted with no more fincerity. His conduct was the more extraordinary, as he was folely indebted to Lewis XII. for all he had conquered in Italy after the league of Cambray. Nay, the very prefervation of his conquests was wholly owing to that prince's continual supplies. And yet, he no sooner faw him upon the decline, but he most ungratefully helped to hurl him down the

the precipice. It is faid he had a book wherein he marked in red letters the injuries received from the king of France. But I do not know in what colour Lewis XII. fhould have writ in his bock the wrong done him by Maximilian on this occasion. As for Henry VIII. he was certainly the dupe of the king of Arragon and the pope. But what is more ftrange, after Ferdinand and Julius II. by their artifices had engaged that prince in a league against France, as foon as affairs had taken fuch a turn that they no longer wanted his affiftance, they thought no more of him than if there had been no fuch perfon in the world. In all the negotiations between the allies, whether at Mantua or Rome, after the retreat of the French, cardinal Bambridge was never called to them, neither was there any mention of the king of England. The pope and the king of Arragon, fatisfied with expelling the French, forfook Henry without troubling them-, felves about his concerns. It even appears that he was not informed of these negotiations. We see in the collection of Act. Pub. the publick acts, that the 10th of November he still gave XIII.p. 341. full powers to his ambaffadors i at feveral courts, to treat of a league in favour of the pope, at the very time the pope was entirely neglecting the interefts of England. About the Ib. p. 342. fame time, Henry figned letters patents, declaring he entered into the league concluded at Rome a year before, though fince that Julius II. was in possession of Ravenna, all la Romagna, Parma, Placentia, Reggio, and his defires had been accomplished by Lewis's loss of Genoa and Milan, and by the emperor's renouncing the affembly of Pifa. Thus, he was evidently the dupe of all these intrigues. He lent, without knowing it, his troops to Ferdinand to conquer Navarre. On the other hand, the terror of his arms was greatly fubfervient to the pope's defigns, as it hindered Lewis XII. from keeping in Italy troops, which he believed neceffary for the defence of his kingdom against the English. This was the real aim of Julius and Ferdinand, and Henry was fo blind as to engage, without neceffity, in a war with France for their interest, imagining he was acting for his own.

Who would not have thought that Henry's experience Henry fuffhould have rendered him wifer and more circumfpect ? And fers himfelf yet, he was farther amused by these very princes, who told to be farther imposed uphim that having nothing more to fear in Italy, they were on, going to join all their forces to invade France, and if he would

i Thomas Howard, earl of Surrey, bury. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. and George Talbot, earl of Shrewf-341.

61 1512.

would likewise act, he might eafily recover Guienne and Normandy. Henry being perfuaded of their fincerity, immediately fent ambafladors to Bruffels k, to conclude a league against France with the pope, the emperor, the king of Arragon, Charles of Austria fovereign of the Low Countries, and Margaret duchess dowager of Savoy his aunt, who governed his dominions during his minority. Henry reckoned that the execution of the treaty would immediately follow the conclusion. But it will hereafter be seen, that if they concluded the league, it was only to draw money from him, and leave him to make war all alone. He was young and unexperienced, but withal fo felf-conceited as to think himfelf wifer than his council. Befides, he had plenty of ready money in his coffers. What could perfons to fubtle as Julius, Maximilian, and Ferdinand, defire better than to have to deal with fuch a prince as Henry? We have already feen this year 1512, how artfully they improved fo favourable a disposition, and we shall fee in the following years, how very little he himfelf profited by what he might have learnt by experience, during the course of the prefent. However this be, being refolved to carry war into France, he affeinbled a parliament the 4th of November, to demand an aid The parlia- of money. Shortly after, the commons, without examining too closely the reasons which induced him to take up arms, granted him a fubfidy 1, and a poll tax m upon all his fubjects, for the expences of the war n.

ment gives the king money. Herbert. Stow. Hollingfh.

During the feffion of the parliament, Henry received a bull from the pope, who to encourage him to push the war

k Sir Edward Poynings, controller of the houshold, fir Thomas Boleyn, fir Richard Wingfield, and John Yonge, doctor of laws, and mafter of the rolls. Ibid. p. 344.

1 Two fifteenths and four demies. A fifteenth or quinzime, is a tax of money laid upon a city, borough, or other town through the realm, and fo called, becaufe it amounted to a fifteenth part of that which the city or town had been valued at of old; and therefore every town knew what a fifteenth for themfelves did amount to, which was in proportion to the land or circuit belonging to it. Thus Camden fays of Bath, geldabat pro viginti hidis. Whereas a fubfidy was raifed upon every particular man's goods or lands, and therefore was uncertain, because the effate of every particular man is uncertain; Cowel's Dict.

m Every duke was to pay ten marks, an earl five pounds, a lord four pounds, a knight four marks; every man valued at eight hundred pounds in goods, four marks; and fo after that rate down to him who had forty shillings in wages, who paid twelve pence; after which every one above fifteen years of age, paid four pence. Herbert, p. IZ.

n In this parliament, the benefit of clergy was taken away from perfons committing murder or felony in any church, chapel, or hallowed place ; and from those that rob or murder any perfons in the king's highway, or in their houfes. See Statut.

vigoroufly

62 1512.

Ib: p. 344.

vigoroufly against France, granted a plenary indulgence to all his fubjects that fhould aid him with their perfon or purfes. This was all the affiftance he had from the pope for Bull in faa war, the fole motive whereof, as it was pretended, was the king. defence of the church.

Nothing more remains to finish the account of the occur- XIII.p. 343. rences of this year, but briefly to mention the measures taken by Henry with regard to Scotland.

Whilft Henry refolved to carry war into France, he used Henry tries his utmost endeavours to preferve a good understanding with prevent a the king of Scotland. But it was almost impossible that rupture with England fhould be in war with France, and Scotland not Scotland. interpose. However, Henry imagined that by the affurances Herbert. he gave the king of Scotland of his intention to obferve punctually the treaty of peace, he fhould prevent him from being concerned in the quarrel. James fuffered him to think what he pleafed, and in the mean time was preparing to affift France by a powerful diversion, in cafe that kingdom was attacked. Upon the first report that the king of Herbert. England was going to quarrel with Lewis XII. James took care to be provided with pretences to break with him. 'The affair of Breton furnished him with one, and he moreover fought others. But the true reason of his acting was, that for some ages past the kings of England were grown fo powerful, and had shown fo great a delire to unite all Great Britain under their dominion, that the Scots could little expect to relift them but by the affiftance of France, which had ever protected them. It was therefore more neceffary than just for Scotland to continue firm to the interests of France, and not fuffer that crown to be difabled to affift her allies. So, not to fwerve from this maxim, James IV. The king of who had determined to go to Jerufalem, laid afide his defign Scotland prepares to when he heard there was like to be a rupture between aid France. France and England. He equipped a fleet, which he intended to fend into France, under colour of prefenting it to queen Anne, wife of Lewis XII. But the fleet, in which was the largeft fhip that had yet been feen on the fea, was loft or difabled by a ftorm, and the admiral's ill conduct.

At last, Henry having proclaimed war with Lewis XII. James con-James concluded a league against him with France the 22d cludes a league with of May this year. Shortly after, he prepared an army, LewisXII. but without divulging for what it was defigned. His intent was to make an inroad into England, as foon as Henry had fent his forces into France. Henry having notice of this armament.

1512. Act. Pub.

1512. Act Pub. XIII.p. 332, 333. 347. Herbert, Pol. Virg.

Act Pub. Herbert.

1513.

----Views and interefts of the princes.

Of Ferdinand.

mament, sent two ambaffadors • into Scotland, under colour of adjusting fome little differences, but in reality to found the king's intentions. The ambaffadors acquainting king James that their master suspected this armament was made in favour of France, James replied, That being equally an ally of both crowns, his defign was to obferve an exact neutrality. The ambaffadors prayed him to give that answer in writing, but he refused, on pretence it would breed a fufpicion in the king of France. Shortly after, Henry learnt by his fpies that a league was concluded between France and Scotland, and he even procured a copy of the treaty P. So, perceiving that a war with Scotland was unavoidable, he XIII.p.339 fent the earl of Surrey into the northern parts, with power to levy an army, and act against Scotland in cafe of neceffity 9.

> The occurrences of the year 1512 made great alterationsin the interefts of the princes concerned, and confequently in their defigns and measures.

Julius II. pleafed with having expelled the French out of of Julius II. Italy, and fo greatly increased his power by the acquisition of fo many places, was thinking however of feizing Ferrara. After that, he hoped, with the affiftance of the Venetians and Florentines, to be able to drive the emperor out of Venice, though he had lately leagued with him. As for the reft, he had no thought of making conquefts in France, his fole aim was to find Lewis XII. employment at home, and entirely diffolve the remains of the council of Pifa, which however was not very formidable to him, fince the emperor's difingagement.

The king of Arragon's fole view was to preferve his late conquest of Navarre. To enjoy it in peace, the only way was to keep Lewis XII. elfewhere employed, or prevail with him not to difturb him. To that purpose it was necessary to ufe the terror of the arms of the allies, and particularly of the king of England, that the king of France being attacked from feveral quarters, might be induced of himfelf to defire a peace, and leave him in poffeffion of Navarre. Ferdinand would not have fcrupled to abandon his allies, provided he could obtain fuch a peace as he wanted.

· Thomas, lord Dacre, of Greistok, and dr. Nicolas Weft, dean of Windfon. Rymer's Ford.

p See the articles in my lord Herhert, p. 12, of the Compl. Hift.

9 This year, a great part of the king's palace at Weltminster, and the chapel in the Tower of London were buint. Stow, p. 490.

The

64

The emperor fought only to draw money both from his 1513. friends and enemies. He was very fenfible, that with his own forces alone it would be difficult to make conquefts up- Of the emon the Venetians, and that the pope, though his ally, did peror. not wifh it. But he was extremely referved to them, in order to procure the larger fums in making a peace. On the other hand, he endeavoured to embroil matters as much as poffible, and make new leagues, becaufe in all the treaties of that kind, money was still given him to maintain imaginary troops, which he never raifed, at least not fo many as he promised.

The Venetians were extremely defirous to end a deftruc- Of the Vetive war, by which they were drained. Their fole aim was netians. to induce the emperor to be fatisfied with a good fum of money for the restitution of their towns, and thereby put their state upon the fame foot as before the league of Cambray. But as the emperor could not think of depriving himfelf of an entrance into Italy by the reflitution of these places, it was their business to compel him in some measure by new leagues, which might make him apprehenfive of lofing them without any advantage. But as this was the fenate's fole view, they were always ready to break all their engagements, as foon as the emperor would hearken to realon.

The Switzers thought only of fupporting Sforza at Milan, of the to have always in that duchy a prince who fhould rely on Switzers. their assistance. Confequently, it was their interest to keep the king of France at a diffance, and oppofe all his attempts to recover it.

Lewis XII. extremely mortified at the fuccels of his ene- Of the king mies in Italy, ardently defired to recover Genoa and Milan. of France. To fucceed, the aid of the Venetians, the emperor, or the Switzers was neceffary. It was also requisite fo to haften the conclusion with one or other of the two last powers, that the expedition of the Milanefe might be made in the fpring, for fear it fhould be prevented by the war, the king of England was preparing against him in Picardy.

Of all Lewis's enemies Henry alone thought of making Of Henry conquefts in France, preposterously imagining, his allies VIII. would make diversions in feveral places to facilitate the execution of his defigns. But he did not yet fufficiently know them. The Venetians had been excluded out of the late league. The pope and king of Arragon had no defire to attack France, but only to create Lewis troubles, which might hinder him from thinking of Italy. It was folely with VOL. VI. this 1513. this view that they feigned a willingness to fecond the king of England. As for Maximilian, Henry and his council must have voluntarily deceived themselves, to hope for any affiftance from him.

Of the king James IV, king of Scotland, feeing France upon the point of Scotland. of being attacked by the king of England, was preparing to affift her, decining his own and that kingdom's interefts to be infeparable. He cafily perceived, Henry courted him. only to hinder his interpoling in the quarrel, and was willing to feed him with hopes of fucceeding in his defign. But he was however determined to break the peace, rather than leave a kingdom in danger, from which alone he could expect a fpeedy and powerful protection in cafe of need. It is true, he had made a peace with Henry VII. and renewed it with Henry VIII. But it was when these princes had no quarrel with France, his antient and conftant ally. In his opinion, Henry by wantonly attacking France on frivolcus pretences, violated indirectly the peace made with Scotland. At least, James pretended that in figning a peace with England, he was not bound to forfake France whenever the king of England fhould think of attacking her.

Such were the difpolitions of all these potentates in the beginning of the year 1513. We must fee now by what means each endeavoured to attain his ends. This new scene will discover to us no less variety, artful managements, devices and artifices than the former, fince the actors and perfonages will still be the fame.

Whill Henry was ferioufly preparing for the war with France, his pretended allies were minding their own affairs, without regarding his interefts. Since he had entered into the league of Rome, the allies, it feemed, should have done nothing without his knowledge. And yet Julius II. had leagued with Maximilian, and excluded the Venetians, without informing him of it.

In the beginning of the year 1513, the emperor had no farther regard for his new allies, fince he fent and proposed a fresh league to Lewis XII. upon new terms. He offered to affift him in recovering the Milanele, provided Lewis would aid him against the Venetians. Moreover, he demanded René, Lewis's fecond daughter, for Charles of Auftria his grandson, and that for her dower Lewis should affign him all his pretenfions to Milan and the kingdom of Naples. But that the performance of the treaty might not entirely depend upon the faith of the King of France, he required that the princess should be immediately fent to him, him, and Cremona and all Gierradadda delivered to him as foon as the duchy of Milan was recovered. Certainly, one cannot but admire the emperor's affurance in making thefe propofals. He had not hitherto been able to continue the war against Venice, without the affistance of Lewis XII. nay, he thought he ftill wanted it, and yet made him an offer of his aid to recover the Milanefe. But upon what terms? Why, after Lewis should have been at a vast expence to recover that duchy, he was to refign it to the emperor's grandfon, with his pretenfions to Naples. This is called using people like true dupes. But after the ill turn Maximilian had lately ferved Lewis XII. it is not very likely that he believed his propofals would be accepted. Probably, he made them only to hinder Lewis from joining with the Venetians. At the fame time he intended to infpire thefe with jealoufy, and a fear of his uniting with France, that this fear might induce them to offer him more advantageous conditions.

The emperor offers a league to Lewis XII. in order to deceive them. Guicciard.

Lewis XII. hearkened to these proposals, as if he had fome Lewis tries defign to accept them, because he thereby hoped to create in vain to fuspicions in the Switzers and Venetians, and incline them Switzers. the fooner to join with him. As for the Venetians, they de- Guicciard, fired nothing more than a ftrict union with France, and if any thing retarded the negotiation, it was only the hope of an agreement with the emperor, in which cafe they would have gladly renounced all forts of leagues. As for the Switzers, it was not possible for Lewis XII. to gain them to his fide, though he offered them more than at first was demanded. Besides, their hatred of him, the face of their affairs was altered, fince the reftoration of Sforza to Milan. Whilft that prince was in exile, it was doubtful, whether in good policy they ought to engage in a war with France for his fake. But fince he was by their affiftance in poffeffion of the duchy, their honour and interest required their utmost endeavours to support him r. However this be, Lewis's negotiation with the Switzers not fucceeding, he was under a neceffity to join in a league either with the emperor or with Venice, otherwife he could little expect to recover Milan.

In the mean time, the Venetians fent and proposed a lea- Proposals of gue to him upon the fame terms with that of the year 1498, the Vene-namely, that they would affift him to recover Milanefe, pro-Lewis XII, r He had promifed to pay them one hundred and fifty thousand ducats up. on his reftoration to Milan, and forty thousand yearly, for five and twenty years. Guicciard, l. II.

win the

67

1513.

vided

1513.

vided he would refign Cremona, and Gierradadda. Lewis readily liftened to their offers, but the Venetians themfelves did not haften the conclusion, by reafon of their circumftances prefently after.

Guicciard.

Death of Julius II. Guicciard.

Parma and Placentia fubmit to the duke of Milan.

1 . .

Leo X, pope, Act. Pub. XIII.p. 349. Guicciard.

Truce for one-year between Lewis and Ferdinand. Guicciatd.

 prefently after. The king of Arragon having good intelligence of what paffed between Lewis XII. and the Venetians, informed the emperor, and advifed him to offer Verona to the Venetians, for a fum of money. This was the fubject of a long, though fruitlefs negotiation.

Whilft the affairs of Italy were in this flate of uncertainty, Julius II. who was preparing to befiege Ferrara, in the beginning of the fpring, died the 21ft of February, having kindled a flame which his death could not extinguifh⁵. As foon as the news reached the viceroy of Naples, who was ftill with his army in Lombardy, he approached Placentia, and entering without oppofition, reftored that place to the duke of Milan. Parma quickly followed the example of Placentia, and was likewife delivered to the fame prince. No one was in hafte to fend affiftance to the future pope to preferve thefe places for him. On the contrary, the princes of Italy could not fee without uncafinefs, that the popes had footing in Lombardy, under a pretence which might upon occafion, be ufed againft moft of them.

e. On the 11th of March, cardinal John de Medici, who eleven months before was taken prifoner at the battle of Ravenna, was elected pope, and allumed the name of Leo X. He was but thirty feven years old, but had however great experience, having been employed in divers important affairs in the late pontificate. He was neither fo hot nor fo haughty as Julius II. his predeceffor, but was much more artful and politick. I fhall have occasion hereafter to add to his portraiture fome ftrokes, which will more fully fhow his genius and character.

Before the death of Julius II. Ferdinand was employed in framing a fehrme perfectly anfwering the name he had in the world. The beginning of the year he had fent two monks into France to make fome overtures to Lewis XII. by means of queen Ann, to whom they had accefs. But as Lewis perceived it was not possible to make a peace, or even a truce with Ferdinand, without leaving him in possession of Navarre, he had appeared at first very cold. But at length, ^s He took the name of Julius from his inclination to war, in memory of Julius Cæfar. He commanded his army in perion againft the French; and, it is faid, as he marched over a bridge on the Tiber, he threw St. Peter's keys into the river, and called for St. Paul's fword.

confidering

confidering that he could hardly expect to recover the duchy of Milan, whilft the king of Arragon was his enemy, becaufe it was he that excited the king of England his fon-inlaw, he determined, though unwillingly to conclude with him a truce, for a year, on condition the king of England was included, and Italy excepted. He reckoned, that during this truce he fhould with eafe be able to re-conquer the duchy of Milan, after which, he fhould be fufficiently ftrong to defend his own kingdom against the English. Nothing was Ferdinand farther from Henry's thoughts than such a truce, which includes would have broke all his measures, and yet, Ferdinand without his doubted not to act in his name, as if he were fure of his knowledge. confent. The affair was began in January, and the 8th of Guicciard. February, Lewis impowered Odet de Foix, lord of Lautrec, to treat with Ferdinand's commissioners. In short, the treaty A&. Pub. was concluded at Orthez in Bearn, the 1st of April. The XIII p.350. treaty ran, that there fhould be a truce for a year, out of Italy, between the king of France, the king of Scotland, the duke of Guelders on the one part; and on the other the emperor, the king of Arragon, the queen of Castile, and the king of England. Lewis XII. undertook to procure the king of Scotland's and the duke of Guelders's confent, and Ferdinand engaged for the king of England. But as Ferdinand knew he fhould not cafily obtain Henry's confent, he cauled it to be inferted in the treaty, that it should be ratified within a month by himfelf and Lewis XII. but that the other parties fhould be allowed two months, with express declaration, that with regard to the emperor, the king of England, the king of Scotland, and the duke of Guelders, the truce fhould take place, but from the day of the exchange to the ratifications. Never perhaps was feen any thing fo bold as what Ferdinand did on this occasion. He perfectly knew that Henry would never agree to the truce, and yet took upon him to procure his confent, as if he had been fully impowered to that end. The last article, concerning the ratification, plainly difcovers his thoughts. But it is still more vifible, in that he not only took no ftep to perfuade Henry to do what he feemed to defire, but even concealed from him the truce as far as poffible.

As foon as the treaty was figned, Ferdinand took care to Ferdinand publish his complaints, that he had been very ill used by the complains of the allies. allies of the league, that the pope and Venetians had ac-Guicciard. quired many places, but for his part he had gained nothing at all, and yet the allies refused to continue the fupply to which they were bound, though the king of France still possesfed feveral

E3

1513. feveral towns in Italy, and the Spanish army was still in the fervice of the league. But this was only to prepare people to fee with lefs furprife and indignation, the private truce he had just made with France, without the participation of his allies.

> The eyes of the publick were fixed upon the new pope, to fee what course he would take. But he did not long leave the politicians in fuspence. Though whilft a cardinal, he did not entirely approve of Julius II's conduct, he purfued however his plan as foon as he was in his place. He was doubly concerned to keep the French out of Italy : first, as pope, fince neighbours fo powerful could not but be formidable to Secondly, as head of the houfe of the Medici, he had him. caufe to fear, that if Lewis XII. recovered the Milanefe, he would undertake to reftore the Florentines to their liberty. In a word, he wished to put an end to the council of Pifa, which could be done only by engaging Lewis XII. in wars, which fhould compel him to make his peace with the church. Ferdinand had likewife the fame views, to keep the king of France at a diftance from Navarre, Rouffillon, and the kingdom of Naples. As for the emperor, it was his interest to difable France to affift the Venetians. But they had none of them any defire to carry war into. France, but only fo to manage, that this diversion might be made at another's expence.

The allies Henry in a war with France.

-

To that purpose they unanimously cast their eyes upon try to engage Henry VIII. as a prince extremely proper to execute their defigns. He had ready money, warlike fubjects, and could with eafe transport troops into some part of France remote from the borders of Spain and Italy. In fine, he was very defirous to fignalize himfelf by illustrious actions, and fcrupled not to fhow it publickly. So, each of them laboured with all his power to confirm him in his defign, to wage war with France, by putting him in hopes of being vigoroufly fupported, though nothing was farther from their thoughts. Leo X. was no fooner in the papal chair, but under colour of notifying his promotion, fent him a letter, affuring him, that he was fully determined to adhere to the league formed by Julius II. his predecessor, and even to conclude a new one with England. But at the fame time, he preffed the emperor to make a peace with Venice, and negotiated with the Venetians to hinder their union with France, promifing to use all his interest with the emperor to procure them an honourable and advantageous peace. All these practices could not be managed to privately but the king of France had fome intelligence intelligence of them, fo that he foon grew very jealous of the 1513. new pope.

Henry did not want much follicitation to carry his arms League coninto France. His thoughts were already bent upon war. cluded at Mechlin be-So, finding, the pope, emperor, and king of Arragon, pro- tween the miled him to act vigoroufly, he did not queftion the favour- allies and ableness of the opportunity to recover good part of what his Henry. predeceffors had formerly loft. And therefore, he readily agreed to form a new league with them, not for the affairs of Italy, with which he was probably difgufted, but to attack France from feveral quarters. And that the league Act. Pub. might be the more fecret, it was agreed, that it fhould be &c. negotiated at Mechlin, between Margaret of Auftria, governels of the Low Countries, authorifed by the emperor her father, and the ambaffadors of England ^t, and that afterwards it should be approved and ratified by the pope, the emperor, and Ferdinand. This was another fnare laid for Henry, which he perceived not till it was too late to avoid it. Though Feidinand was then upon the point of concluding the truce with the king of France, he made himfelf however one of the principal parties in this league, as repugnant as it was to the truce. The fubftance of the new league concluded at Mechlin the 5th of April, about the fame time the truce was figned at Orthez, was as follows.

That within thirty days after the date of this treaty, each The terms of the confederates fhould proclaim war with the king of of the league, France, and within two months invade him, viz. the pope in Provence or Dauphiné: the emperor in fome place out of Italy : the king of Arragon in Bearn, Guienne, or Languedoc : the king of England, in Guienne, Normandy, or Picardy, and that their armies fhould be ftrong and well provided with all things.

That the emperor (if he had not yet done it) fhould revoke all his proceedings in favour of the council of Pifa. This flows how little Henry or his plenipotentiaries knew of what paffed at Rome, fince it was now three months or more, that the emperor had abandoned that council.]

That the pope fhould thunder his centures against all the oppofers of this league and abettors of the contrary party.

That towards the expences of the war, the king of England fhould give the emperor a hundred thousand crowns of t Which were fir Edward Poynings, and fir Richard Wyngfield. Rymer's controller of the houfhold, John Yonge, Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 354. mafter of the rolls, fir Thomas Boleyn, gold

71

E4

THE HISTORY

gold, at three payments, thirty five thousand prefently after 1513. the declaration of the war, as much more when the war was begun, and thirty thousand within three months after.

That the emperor meant not to enter into this league as guardian to Charles, his grandfon.

That the emperor and king of England fhould ratify the treaty within a month, and the pope and king of Arragon within two months, with this express declaration, that in cafe the pope and the king of Arragon, fhould not ratify the treaty by the time appointed, it fhould however be in force between the emperor and the king of England.

Laftly, the confederates renounced all exceptions whatever, and particularly that which might be made to another's flipulating for them.

Never perhaps was feen more infincerity than in this whole negotiation, fince of all the confederates Henry alone intended to keep his word. Leo X. ratified not the treaty, Ferdinand, as will be feen prefently, difavowed his ambaffador ; as for the emperor, he received the money from the king without troubling himfelf to perform his engagements. Thus Henry was the conftant dupe of these princes, who were a little too politick for him.

Ferdinand's ambaffador at London ratifies and fwears to Mechlin. Act. Pub.

P. 363.

The treaty being brought to London, Lewis Carroz de Villaragud, Ferdinand's ambaffador, approved and ratified it by letters patents of April 18th. He declared in these letters, that though he had a fufficient power from the king his the league of master, to conclude the league with the plenipotentiaries of the confederate princes he had not been able, for certain XIII.p.358. weighty reasons, to be present at the figning at Mechlin. But being very fure, the treaty contained only what was agreeable to the king his master, who defired nothing more earneftly than its execution, he approved and ratified, in the faid king's name, all the articles of the treaty. And to remove all occasion of disputing the validity of his ratification, he inferted the treaty word for word, in his letters of ratification, and concluded it again with the earl of Surrey, the king of England's commissioner, by virtue of a full power received for that purpose. Afterwards, the 25th of the fame month, he fwore to the observance of the articles upon the fouls of Ferdinand, king of Arragon, and Jane, queen of Castile. It is uncertain whether the ambassador was himfelf deceived, or whether knowing it, voluntarily helped to impose upon Henry. All that can be faid is, that the great precautions taken to hinder his being fufpected of infincerity infincerity, are not very common with those who intend to act fairly.

It must doubtless be thought strange, that a pope, an em- Henry isimperor, and a king of Spain, fhould thus join, to lay fuch a poled upon. fnare for a young prince of twenty one years of age, and who was even fon-in-law to one of them. And yet it is fcarce to be doubted, that the league concluded at Mechlin, in the absence of the pope's and king of Arragon's ambaffadors, was thus projected to entangle Henry, under colour of keeping it the more fecret. They fucceeded fo well, that Henry relying upon the diversions, his pretended allies would make in Guienne, Bearn, Provence, Dauphiné, Burgundy, flattered himfelf that he might eafily extend his conquefts in Picardy. To that end, he made extraordinary preparations by Act. Pub. fea and land, which put him to a vaft expence. But whilit XIII.p. 364we leave him employed in preparing, for the next campaign, it will be neceffary to relate what paffed in Italy.

The Venetians not being able to obtain a peace from the League beemperor, who pretended to fubject them to very unreafonable tween terms, follicited afresh the negotiation they had begun with and the Ve-France. On the other hand, Lewis XII. to whom time netians. was precious, readily accepted their propofals. Thus the Mezerai. league between that monarch and the Venetians was quickly concluded, upon the fame foot as that of the year 1498. This was transacted by Andrew Gritti, who being then pri- Guicciard, foner in France, was commiffioned to conclude it in the fenate's name. Prefently after he was releafed, as well as Alviano, who returning to Venice, was made general of the forces of the republick.

When Lewis XII. had concluded his treaty with the Ve- Lewis fends netians, he ordered his troops to march into Italy, where Trimouille they arrived in June. 'As, by the treaty of truce concluded with an at Orthez, Henry was allowed two months to fend his pre- army. tended ratification, and as that term was not yet expired, Guicciard, P. Daniel, very probably Lewis still flattered himself that Henry would perform what the king of Arragon had promifed for him, otherwife he would not doubtless have fent his best troops into Italy. Mean while, the preparations which were continued in England, and the hoftilities already begun at fea fince April, between the French and English, should have convinced him that Ferdinand had deceived him. However that was, the French army commanded by la Trimouille, being arrived upon the borders of the Milanefe, Maximilian Sforza quitted his capital, and retired among the Switzers, who were to the number of feven or eight thousand men, at Como

Lewis XII. P. Daniel.

74

1513.

Ferdinand's

Sforza lofes all Milan. except Como andNovarra. Guicciard.

Genoa is reftored to France. Guicciard. La Trimouille is re. pulfed by the Switzers at. Novarra.

army defeated by the Switzers. Guicciard.

Genoa is loft;

Como and Novarra, where they expected supplies from their own country.

Upon the approach of the French, Raymund de Cardona, general goes who was still in Lombardy with the Spanish army, retired from Milan. without making the least motion to affift the duke of Milan, though Italy was not included in the truce of Orthez. Very likely Ferdinand was not difpleafed, that the French should make fome progrefs in the Milanefe, to keep them employed there, whilft Henry carried war into Picardy. At leaft, any other reasons of his general's conduct can scarce be imagined. The duke of Milan having no other forces but the Switzers to oppose to the French, Milan and the rest of the towns of the duchy, except Como and Novarra, fubmitted to la Trimouille without offering to refift, whilft the Switzers, who were not ftrong enough to take the field, remained immured within the walls of these two places. Whilst the French were making these conquests, Alviano took for the Venetians, Peschiera, Brescia, Valeggio, and at last Cremona, after a fruitless attempt to become master of Verona by intelligence.

About this time the faction of the Adornos, who in Genoa fided with France, found means to become fuperior, and put the city again under the dominion of the king.

Lewis XII. was now in poffession of the whole Milanefe, except Como and Novarra. La Trimouille knowing, the Switzers expected a ftrong reinforcement from their own country, thought he fhould make hafte and befiege Novarra, before the arrival of those troops. He marched therefore to the town, and in the expectation of taking it immediately, furioufly formed it. But whatever bravery the French fhowed upon this occasion, they were repulsed with a very great lofs, which even obliged the general to retire to Riotta, The French a village about two miles from Novarra. Mean while, the Switzers proud of repulsing fo terrible an assault, and beginning to despise the French, before whom they had not yet dared to appear in the field, fuddenly refolved to fally out of Novarra, and attack the enemy in their camp. This refolution was immediately executed, to the affonishment of the French, who not being able to refift the unexpected The French attack, were entirely routed. But that was not all. Their retire home, confternation after the defeat was to great, that they thought it their only fafety to repafs the mountains, and with all poffible diligence return into France. The news of their flight reaching Genoa, the Adornos quitted the city to the Fregofas their enemies, who chose for doge Octavian Fregola, head of their family and faction. Thus, within the space of 1513. a month, Lewis XII. got and loft Genoa and Milan, and Maximilian Sforza, who had been expelled out of his duchy, and Sforza took possession. But it was the latter end of the year Milan. before he recovered the caffles of Milan and Cremona, kept by the French and Venetians.

head

The revolution in the king of France's affairs, occafioned Alviano the like in those of the Venetians. Alviano their general Guicciard. no fooner heard of the French army's misfortune, but he haftily retired into the territories of Venice, and befieged Verona. But Raymund de Cardona, who had affected a He is defeatfort of neutrality whilft the French were in the Milanefe, Spaniards. knowing they were out of Italy, turned his forces against Alviano. He not only forced him to raife the fiege of The Veneti-Verona, but even purfuing him from place to place, ob-tained over him a fignal victory, which obliged the Venetians to refer their differences to the pope, though he had declared against them by affisting the emperor. The neceffity of their affairs compelled them to take that flep in order to gain time. They had loft all their towns in the Milanefe, and their own country had been horribly ravaged by the Spanish troops, even within fight of Venice.

Whilft thefe things paffed in Italy, Henry was preparing to go into France with a numerous army. But before I fpeak of the fuccels of his first campaign, it will be neceffary briefly to mention what paffed at his own court, and which it will be worth while to infift upon a moment. Thomas Wolfey had been introduced to court by the bifhop of Winchefter. Prefently after, he was made privy-coun- Thomas fellor, and as fuch, had opportunity to make himfelf better comes prime known to the king, and gain his efteem, as well by his own minifter. qualifications, as by the interest of the bishop his benefac- Cavendish. tor, who ceafed not to caufe the king to admire the firength Fides. Burnet. of his genius, and obferve how fit he was for the greateft Pol. Virg. affairs. Wolfey on his part neglected not what he thought Stow. capable of increasing the king's good opinion of him. To an indefatigable application, and extreme diligence in all the affairs he was charged with, he added a blind condescenfion for all his mafter's paffions. The king was highly pleafed to fee in his court and council a churchman, lefs rigid and fcrupulous than the archbishop of Canterbury, or the old bifhop of Winchefter. Wolfey danced, fung, laughed, and played with the young courtiers who were most in favour; and if Polydore Virgil is to be credited, who loved him not, neither had reafon to love him, he carried his complaifance plaifance fo far as to lend the king his house for his most fecret pleasures. However that be, his condescension, joined to his talents for bufinefs, and to his knowledge in divinity which he had acquired, as well as the king, by reading the works of Thomas Aquinas, foon gave him the advantage over all the other courtiers, When he faw himfelf well fixed, he made it his particular business to shew the king his errors fince his acceffion to the throne, and how his youth had been abused. By this method he infinuated to him by degrees, that he was ill-ferved, and wanted an able minister, capable of easing him in the administration of the most weighty affairs, and of shewing him the confequences. In a word, he fo managed, that he became himfelf that minister which he advised the king to seek, and by degrees was intrusted with the care and conduct of the king's principal affairs. His credit rendered him haughty, proud, infolent, and ungrateful to his old friends. In thort, he was taxed with all the failings which favourites are usually charged with, and which indeed few favourites can avoid. Wolfey, like most others, grew extremely odious, chiefly becaufe his counfels were always felf-interested, which the event discovered to all but the king, who was blind in that respect. His favour and credit, caufed the most potent princes of Europe, to strive to gain him to their interests, and to glory, at least outwardly, in being of the number of his friends. The reason is, because during this reign, the affairs of Europe were in fuch a fituation, that England was capable of making the balance incline to the fide fhe efpoused. Wolfey knew how to improve this advantage, to render himfelf the richeft and most powerful subject that ever was, but laboured not with the fame ardour for his master's honour, as for his own interest. After he was declared prime minister, he managed, during the space of seventeen years, all the king's affairs both foreign and domeftick ".

THE HISTORY

Hall. Stow. Hollingfh. Herbert. Before the king was ready to pass into France, the war was begun at fea. In April, admiral Howard had put to fea with thirty two fhips of war ", whils the French fleet

^a In the prefent war, the king committed to him the direction of the fupplies and provisions to be made for the army; which Wolfey took care not to neglect the advantage of. The victualling of his army was not, without a farcafm to his birth, recommended to Wolfey, fays the lord Herbert, p. 15. ^w Hall, and the lord Herbert fay. forty two, fol. 22. p. 13. The admiral was accompanied by Walter Devreux, lord Ferrers, fir Wolftan Browne, fir Edward Ichyngham, fir Anthony Povntz, fir John Wallop, fir Thomas Wyndham, fir Stephen Bull, William Fitzwilliam, Arthur Plantagenet, fir Wulliam Sidney, efquires, &c. Hall, fol. 22, Stow, p. 491.

remained

OF ENGLAND.

remained at Breft, expecting fix gallies, which Pregent * was 1513. to bring from Marfeilles. The English admiral approaching Breft, refolved to attack the French ships as they lay at Sea fight . anchor. But upon notice that Pregent was arrived at Conquet, he failed that way, to endeavour to take the fix gal- ard is loft. lies, and attacked them indeed with great bravery. But during the fight, his fhip being grappled with Pregent's galley, he entered it fword in hand, and at first caufed great diforder. Unhappily, the galley being afterwards difingaged, he was left in the hands of his enemies, with a few attendants, and, being unknown, was knocked over-board with a half-pike. The lofs of the admiral caufed fuch a confternation in the English fleet, that they durst not continue the fight y. The news being carried to court, the king conferred Hall. the office of lord admiral upon Thomas Howard, brother of Stow. the deceased. Mean while, as the French fleet, by receiving a ftrong reinforcement, was become fuperior, the English returned to fome port in England, expecting the arrival of the new admiral. The French, encouraged by the retreat of the English, failed to the coast of England, and even made a defcent in Suffex, and carried away fome booty.

Mean time, Henry was preparing to carry war into France, Henry prethough none of his pretended allies had yet made the least into France. ftep towards performing the treaty of Mechlin. Leo X. had Hall. not ratified the treaty, and nothing was farther from his thoughts, than the fending of an army into Provence or Dauphiné. The emperor began to feek excuses not to enter Burgundy with an army, though he had politively promifed it. As for the king of Arragon, he had not only He comes concealed from Henry his one year's truce with France, but Ferdinand's was even trying to amufe him with hopes, that he was in- one year's fantly going to make a powerful diversion in Guienne. He truce with to artfully acted his part, that it was June before Henry France. was fully informed of the truce of Orthez. Provoked at fuch a fraud, he difpatched an ambaffador to the king his father-in-law, to upbraid him with breach of faith, and fummon him to execute the treaty of Mechlin, or rather, that figned by his ambaffador in his name at London. Where-

- x Called by our historians, prior John.

y This fir Edward Howard was not eldeft, but fecond fon of Thomas Howard, earl of Surrey, fon of the duke of Norfolk, flain at Bofworth field, and attainted in the parliament of Hen. VII. The faid Thomas was reftored

(4 Hen. VII.) to the title of earl of Surrey, and to the lands which were his wives inheritance. Sir Edward was conflituted admiral of England, Wales, Ireland, Normandy, Gascogne, and Aquitain, 4 Hen. VIII. March 19. Dugdale's Baron.

Ferdinand difowns his ambaffador.

upon Ferdinand, feeing he could no longer wear the mark, difavow'd his ambaffador, and faid, he had exceeded his instructions. He confessed however, he had concluded a truce for a year, with Lewis XII. being forced by the neceffity of his affairs, but promifed to do wonders when it was expired, and advifed his fon-in-law to accept of the truce, that they might afterwards unite their forces and jointly attack the common enemy. But Henry could no longer rely upon fuch promifes. Thus, by the artifices of the pope, the emperor, and Ferdinand, he faw himfelf engaged to carry war alone into the enemy's country, which was to have been invaded in four feveral quarters. He was not convinced of their infincerity till it was almost too late to recede, the greatest part of his army having already passed the fea, and just entring upon action. Happily for him, Lewis XII. deceived by the treaty of truce concluded at Orthez, had now fent his best troops into Italy, imagining Henry would accept of the truce according to the king of Arragon's engagement.

The empercr . breaks his word with Henry." Herbert.

Henry refolves upon the war alone.

11.17

army over to Calais. Herbert. Hall. Stow.

The earl of Suffolk beheaded. Hall. . Stow. Herbert, Du Bellay.

Shortly after Henry received a letter from the emperor, with many excuses, that it was impossible for him this year to lead an army into Burgundy, but he would punctually perform his engagement next year. Mean while, to fhew, he meant not to forfake him, he faid, he would come and ferve as volunteer in his army. Thus, of the four allies who were to act at once against France, Henry alone was charged with the burden of the war. Edward IV. his grandfather had been formerly in much the fame cafe, and thought it no difhonour to make a fpeedy peace with Lewis XI. when disappointed by his allies. If Henry had followed his example, he would have terribly embarraffed those by whom he was deceived, but being greedy of glory, would fhew he He paffes his had no occafion for them. He had fo relied on the fincerity of his allies, that though the treaty of Mechlin was not to be ratified by the pope and the king of Arragon, till the 5th of June, he had caufed the best part of his army to pass over to Calais in the middle of May. It is evident, the ratification of the treaty of Mechlin had been fo long retarded, only to engage Henry beyond a poffibility of receding.

Before the departure of the first troops 2, Henry had beheaded the earl of Suffolk, prifoner in the Tower ever fince the reign of Henry VII. who gave Philip I. king of Castile, a politive promile to fpare that lord's life. But probably, z On April 30. Stow, p. 491.

he

he gave the prince his fon orders like those given by king " David to Solomon with respect to Joab. The historians have L endeavoured to difcover Henry's inducement at fuch a juncture, to put the earl of Suffolk to death, who was not in condition to hurt him. But they have faid nothing fatisfactory ª.

The two bodies of troops transported to Calais departed The English thence the 17th of June ^b, under the command of the earl befiege Teof Shrewsbury e, and the lord Herbert d, in order to march Act, Pub. to Terouenne, to which they laid fiege . But the king de- XIII.p. 367, parted not from England till the 30th of the fame month, 372. having conflituted queen Catherine regent f. He arrived the Hall. fame day at Calais, being attended by Thomas Wolfey his Stow.

P. 370. Herbert. Hollingfh.

2 The chief reafon, as my lord Herbert and others fay, was for fear, in cafe of the king's death in France, the people being well affected to the house of York, should take him out of the Tower, and make him king. Edmund de la Pole, was fon of John. de la Pole, duke of Suffolk, by Elizabeth, fifter of Edward IV. But this reafon feems weak, fince Margaret, queen of Scotland, the king's fifter, was the undoubted heir of the houfe of York, in cafe the king died without iffue. The French writers fay, Richard, his younger brother commanded fix thoufand French at the fiege of Terouenne, which fome have thought haftened his brother's death. Dugdale's Baron. vol. II. p. 190. Hall, fol. 26.

b Thomas Grey, marquis of Dor-fet, was general of all the king's forces, both by fea and land, and Thomas, lord Howard, admiral. Rymer's Fæd. c George Talbot, high fleward of the talbot, high fleward of the king's houfhold, accompanied with Thomas Stanley, earl of Derby, Thomas Docwra, lord prior of the order of St. John, fir Robert Ratcliffe, lord Fitzwalter, the lord Haftings, the lord Cobham, fir Rice ap Thomas, captain of the light horfe, fir Thomas Blount, fir Richard Sachiverell, fir John Digby, fir John Askew, fir Lewis Bagot, Gr Thomas Cornwall, &c. This body confifted of above eight thousand. Herbert, p. 15. Rymer's Fæd, tom. XIII. p. 372. Stow, p. 491. 4 Charles Somerfet, natural fon by Joan Hill, of Henry duke of Somerfet (who loft his life in 3 Edward IV.) married Elizabeth, daughter and heir, of William Herbert, earl of Huntington, by reafon whereof he bore the title of lord Herbert, and as fuch had fummons to parliament, I Henry VIII. 3 Henry VIII. He was lord chamberlain to Henry VII. and continued in the fame office to king Henry VIII. From him are defcended the prefent Somerfets, dukes of Beaufort. He was attended by the earls of Northumberland, Kent, and Wiltshire, the lords Audley, and De la Ware, the barons Carow, and Curfon, fir Thomas Weft, fir Edward Husey, fir Robert Di-mocke, fir David Owen, &c. He commanded fix thousand men. The baron of Carow, mafter of the ordnance, was killed the first night before Terouenne, in the lord Herbert's tent, which came fo near him, that the French writ he was flain there. Herbert, p. 15. Rymer, tom. XIII. p. 372.

e June 22. There were within the town fix hundred horfe, and two thoufand five hundred foot, befides the inhabitants, Hall, fol. 24. Hollingfh. p. 817.

f She was also general of all the forces in England, and had power, with five noble perfonages, to take up money upon loan, as occasion should require, and to give fecurity of the fums for maintaining and raifing of forces, if need fhould require ; as it is more particularly fet forth in the patent rolls of these times, Bacon, p. 148,

prime

ferves in the English army. Hall. Stow. -Herbert.

The battle of fpurs. Herbert. Mezerai. Hall. Aug. 16.

prime minister, Charles Brandon another favorite lately made 1513. vifcount Lifle ^g, with many other lords ^h. Whilft the t oops continued the fiege of Terouenne, he remained at Calais with nine thousand men, ready to march upon the first occasion. Henrycomes At last, having certain advice that the duke of Longueville to the fiege- was approaching to relieve the town, he haftened from Calais to the fiege, where he arrived the 4th of August. On The emperor the 9th, the emperor came and conferred with him between Aire and Terouenne, and three days after repaired to the camp and ferved as volunteer under the king, making no fcruple to receive a hundred crowns a day for his pay. By this mark of effeem, and the imaginary honour he did the king, he meant to make amends for his breach of faith, and the hundred thousand crowns received for an expedition which he had never intended to make.

Mean time, the duke of Longueville who commanded the French army, approaching Terouenne, Henry paffed the Lys with the greatest part of his troops, in order to meet him. The two armies engaged, but not long. For the fight was hardly begun, when the French, by what accident is unknown, ran away in confusion without any poffibility of their being rallied. But the principal officers chofe rather to be taken prifoners than follow fo difhonorable an example. The duke of Longueville was of the number, with chevalier Bayard, la Fayette, Bussi d'Amboise, and fome others of the greatest distinction. This battle, if such a rout may be fo termed, was called, the battle of Guinegaste, and by some, the battle of spurs, because the French made more use of their spurs than their swords. Whilst the two armies were in view, before the engagement, a body of French attempted to introduce a convoy of provisions into the town, but were repulsed by the lord Herbert, who was left to guard the trenches. After the battle, the belieged

5 May 15th, 1513. His uncle William Brandon, ftandard bearer to . Henry VII. at Bofworth field, was flain by king Richard III. himfelf. Dugdale's Baion. vol. II. p. 299.

h The king divided his own forces into three bodies. The vanguard, confifting of three thousand men, was commanded by Charles Brandon, viicount Lifle ; the right wing by fir Richard Carew, and the left by Thomas, lord Darcy; Henry Bourchier, earl of Effex, was lieutenant general of the fpears, and fir John Pechy command-" ed the horfe. Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham, with fix hundred men, was on the king's left hand; and on the right, fir Edward Poynings, with the fame number. George Nevil, lord Abergavenny, fellowed with eight hundred men; and fir William Compton, with the retinue of Fox, bishop of Winchefter, and of Wolfey, which amounted to eight hundred men, brought up the rear. The king's forces were in all eleven thousand three hundred mon. Stow, p. 491.

despairing

despairing of relief, surrendered the city the 22d of August, 1513. and the king, in company with the emperor, entered the -24th

It feemed to be Henry's deftiny to be always the em- Hall, peror's dupe. After the taking of Terouenne, Maximilian, Stow. who had only ferved at the fiege as volunteer, found means Henry gives to have the place delivered to him, and immediately ordered the place to the emperor, it to be demolished. It is, hard to conceive what induced who razes it. Henry to this condefcention. All that can be conjectured Hall. is, that there was perhaps in the capitulation, fome article Herbert. against the razing of the place, but that altering his mind, Hollingth. he was willing to fave his honour by delivering it to the emperor. Though this were the cafe, there would be no lefs reason to be surprized at his management. 'Tis easy to perceive it was very advantageous to Charles of Auftria, grandfon of Maximilian, that Terouenne belonged neither to the French nor the English. But what interest could Henry have to lofe fo many men, and fo much time, to take a place in order to have it razed in favour of Maximilian, who had not merited fuch a condefcention i?

As the feafon was not yet far advanced, Henry refolv- Siege of ed, before the end of the campaign, to befiege Tournay, Mezenai, whether he heard the place was ill provided, or the empe-Hall, ror's intrigues had again influenced his council. For, the Stow. conquest of Tournay, which lies at some distance from Calais, Herbert. was much less advantageous to Henry than to the archduke Charles, whofe dominions it fecured; whereas Boulogne would have been, without doubt, much more convenient for the king, by reason of the neighbourhood of Calais. Nevertheless the fiege of Tournay was refolved, probably becaufe the emperor hoped the king would give him that place as he had done Terouenne. But he found againft him interests stronger than those of the king himself, which oppofed his defigns.

Whilft preparations were making for the fiege, Henry Henry vifits paid a visit to Margaret governess of the Low-Countries, Margaret of who was at Lisle, and staid three days with her. Then Hall. he returned to his army which was marching to Tournay k, Herbert. but i It bordered, it seems, upon his territories, which had been much infefted by irruptions from thence, and therefore by his intreaty, it was razed, fave only the cathedral, and religious houfes. But the French repaired it foon after. This could not but feem VOL. VI.

ftrange, fince it coft fo much, as Guicciardin doubts not to call it intolerable and infinite expence. Herbert, p. 16.

k The king, about a mile or two from Lifle, loit himfelf in a great mift, neither could he nor any of his train refolve which way to turn, till a victualler F coming Terouenne furrenders.

L Tournay taken. Act. Pub. Sept. 23. Herbert. Hall.

Henry keeps Tournay. Herbert.

but the emperor left the king upon fome difguft, the reafon whereof is unknown. Next day the 15th of September, the army arrived before Tournay, which held out but feven or eight days 1. Henry entered the city on the 24th 12, a XIII.p.377. month after his entry into Terouenne. By the capitulation, the inhabitants were to have their antient privileges, upon paying to Henry a finall annual acknowledgment of four thoufand livres Tournois, for ten years only ".

After the taking of Tournay, the king calling a council of war, it was debated, whether it was proper to keep the place, which feemed to be difficult, by reafon of its diftance from Calais. But after a long debate, it was refolved to keep it, and leave for governor fir Edward Poynings with a ftrong garrifon. The contrariety of the two refo-lutions with refpect to Terouenne and Tournay will, perhaps appear strange. The first of these places which was nearest Calais, and secured the road from Calais to Tournay, was demolifhed. The fecond, which could not without great difficulty be relieved, was deemed neceffary to be kept. This contrariety could proceed only from Wolfey's interest, who influenced the council as he pleased. He had caft his eyes on the bifhoprick of Tournay, as a thing very convenient for him, whereas that of Terouenne was nothing in comparison. Accordingly he afterwards found means to obtain the administration of that fee, under colour, that the bifhop refused to fwear fealty to the king. This is the true reafon why it was refolved to keep Tournay, and perhaps of undertaking the fiege °.

Margaret aud Charles Tournay.

Next day after the king's entry into Tournay, the princess Margaret duchess dowager of Savoy, and the archduke come and fee Charles her nephew, came to congratulate him upon his > coming by chance from his army, both informed him where his army lay, and conducted him thither, to the great joy of them all. Herbert, p. 16. Hall, > fol. 35. 1 Though the gates bore this in-feription, thou haft never loft thy virginity. Hall, fol. 44.

> m Hall fays, it was the 2d of October. The king knighted upon this occafion, Edward Guildford, William Fitzwilliam, John Dauncy, William Tiler, John Sharpe, William Hufey, John Savage, Chriftopher Garnyfhe, &c. -The number of inhabitants in that sity was eighty thousand. Hall, fol. 45.

* And prefent payment at fifty thou-fand crowns de soleil, (or ten thousand pounds sterling. Hall, fol, 44.) The city furrendered to the king by the name of Roy Tres Chreften, [moft chriftian king.] Herbert, p. 17. • Wolfey reprefented to the king, that it was fit Tournay fhould be kept as a trophy of his victories, and the rather, as Cæfar (in his commentaries) acknowledges he no where met with fo brave a refistance. However, it coft Wolfey no fmall trouble and opposition before he could obtain the pofferfion of this bishoprick. Herbert, p. 17. Strype's Mem, Eccl. Henry VIII. p. 15.

new

new conquest. The fortnight they staid with him, he took 1513. care to entertain them with all forts of diversions, as justs, tournaments, running at the ring, balls, malquerades, and Hall. the like. Mean while, amidst all these diversions, the mi- Herbert. Hollingth. nifters of the two courts began a treaty, which was concluded a few days after.

Margaret and Charles being returned to Lifle, Henry re- Henry repaid their vifit, and was received with all imaginable respect turns their vifit. and civility. Some days after, on the 15th of October they New treaty figned a treaty, importing, That though Henry had bound at Lifle. himfelf not to repais into England till the war was ended, Act. Pub. XIII.p.379. he should however have liberty to return thither with his October 154 army.

That during the winter, the emperor fhould keep in Artois and Hainault four thousand horse and fix thousand foot, for the defence as well of Tournay and the Tournaifis, as of the archduke's dominions.

That for the maintenance of these troops, Henry should pay the emperor two hundred thousand crowns at feveral payments.

That before the 1st of June the next year, Henry should carry war into Guienne, Normandy, or Picardy, and the emperor into fome other province of France.

That before the 15th of May, the emperor, the duchefs Margaret, the archduke Charles, the king of England, queen Catherine, the prince's Mary, fhould meet all together at Calais to celebrate the archduke's marriage with the princess Mary, purfuant to the treaty concluded between the emperor and the late king Henry VII.

Whatever was to be done, Henry must always find mo- Remarks on ney. Maximilian had already received a hundred thousand this treaty. crowns of gold, without having executed any of his engagements entered into by the treaty of Mechlin, and found means to procure two hundred thousand more by the present treaty, befides the advantage of razing Terouenne, which very much annoyed his grandfon the archduke's dominions. Nay, it is very probable, the difguft which made him quit the king's army, proceeded from his not being able to perfuade him to promife him Tournay alfo when taken. This manifeftly fhews, he looked upon Henry as a novice eafily to be infnared. Certainly Henry's many false steps in the beginning of his reign can only be excufed by his little knowledge of the character of the princes with whom he treated.

Herbert.

F 2

Ferdinand proposes a new league to Henry.

84

1513.

Henry returns to England. Herbert. Hall. Stow.

The Switzers enter Burgundy. Mezerai. Guicc:ard. P. Daniel.

Dijon.

It cannot be doubted, that the king of Arragon was of the fame opinion concerning Henry his fon-in-law. Notwithstanding the ill turn he had ferved him last year, he had still the affurance to fend him an ambaffador at Lise to propofe a new league, as if his word had been more to be relied on than fome months before. But it does not appear that Henry was then inclined to truft to his promifes.

Henry departed from Lifle the 17th of October, and on the 24th arrived at his palace at Richmond after a glorious campaign. I call it glorious, if the fuccefs of his arms be only confidered. But in another respect it was not very honourable, fince he had been the dupe of the pope, the emperor, and the king of Arragon, who had thrown upon him the whole burden of the war, which fhould have been common to all the four. It is true, he had taken Terouenne and Tournay. But the first of these places being given to the emperor and razed, was to him of no benefit. As for Tournay, he never reaped any confiderable advantage from it, by reason of its distance from Calais. Wolsey was the only gainer by it, the bishoprick of that city, which he obtained in the end, together with the abby of St. Amand, being of a much greater revenue than what the king himfelf received from Tournay and its territory.

The ill fuccels of the Italian campaign had put Lewis XII's affairs in a bad fituation, and the lofs of the battle of Guinegaste with the taking of Terouenne and Tournay, had entirely difordered them. But this was a trifle in comparifon of the danger France was in by a Swifs invation, after the French were driven out of the Milanefe. The warlike Switzers, excited against Lewis by the pope and the emperor, not being fatisfied with their advantages over him in Italy, refolved to attack him in his own kingdom. The opportunity was favourable, by reafon of the feveral forementioned junctures. To improve the opportunity therefore, the Switzers levied fifteen thousand men P, to whom the emperor joined all the nobility of Franche Comté, and fome German horfe under the command of Ulric duke of They befiege Wirtemberg. This army entering the duchy of Burgundy, encamped before Dijon, where la Trimouille lately returned from Italy, had thut himfelf up with fome troops 9; but that place was fo weak, that there was no likelihood of keeping a thousand horse and artilley, 1. 12.

> P Twenty five thousand, fays P. Daniel, tom. VII. p. 320. — Guicciardin fays, they had twenty thousand foot, and that the emperor fent them -

9 A thoufand lances, and fix thoufand foot, Guicciard.

• 3

it. He defended it however fix weeks. But at last, seeing 1513. that by the lofs of Dijon not only Burgundy, but all the reft of France would be in great danger, he thought he should prevent it without waiting the king's orders, which might come too late. By a capitulation with the Switzers, La Trimouhe bound himself to pay them four hundred thousand ille treats crowns r, of which he paid down twenty thousand, and king's promised in the king's name, that he would defift from all knowledge. his pretenfions to the duchy of Milan. The Switzers, Guicciard. Du Bellai. pleafed with their expedition, retired into their own country, carrying with them four hoftages, who found means to efcape when they knew the king refused to ratify the capitulation.

Lewis XII. finding himfelf attacked in fo many places, Lewismakes and not doubting that the pope and the king of Arragon crea-the pope. ted him all these troubles, resolved at last to be reconciled Guicciard. with the pope. This reconciliation was the more eafy, as Mezerai. Leo X. had not like Julius II. a perfonal enmity against him. Herbert. Since the French were out of Italy, he had nothing to demand of the king but the diffolving of the council of Pifa, without which indeed he could not confent to a peace. The council was grown fo thin, that Lewis in forfaking it made no great facrifice to the pope. It is true, the fubmitting in a point he had hitherto openly maintained, feemed to be a little dishonourable. But as the council of Pifa had been properly fummoned against Julius II. he thought he might without reproach yield to another pope. However, Lewis perceiving that by his reconciliation with Leo X. he fhould take from the kings of England and Arragon the pretence to make war upon him, was at length induced to renounce his council, and acknowledge that of Lateran. This renunciation was folemnly made in the tenth feffion, held about the end of December.

Leo X. in the beginning of his pontificate writ to Henry The pope as to all the reft of the princes, earneftly exhorting him to exhorts peace. In this manner he was to talk, in order to difcharge peace. the duty of the common father of christians. Henry, who Ad. Pub. faw plainly, and was afterwards ftill more fully convinced, XIII.p. 340. that this was only grimace, replied, he could not make peace Guicciard. without his allies, and that a feparate peace would be directly contrary to all his engagements. This answer difpleafed not the pope, who then fought only to raife enemies to France. But when he was fure of his agreement with Act. Pub.

85

XIII.p. 386.

J Six hundred thousand. Idem. F 3

Lewis

Lewis XII. he took occasion to fend another letter to Henry, telling him, he never intended to perfuade him to make a separate peace, but as he had taken up arms folely for the defence of the church and the holy fee, and had by his late victories attained the end he had proposed, it was reasonable he fhould lay them down, fince the prince who opprefied the church was returned to his obedience. The letter was dated December the 17th, about the time of the tenth feffion of the council of Lateran, wherein the French ambafladors made a folemn submission in their master's name.

Henry fees

Nothing contributed more to open Henry's eyes, than this he is abused, fecond letter. He imagined, when he protested that he took up arms in defence of the church, his allies knew, he did not mean for all that to neglect his own interest, that language being properly only to amufe the publick. He had the more reason to believe it, as even in the treaty of league each of the allies had evidently proposed to himfelf temporal advantages. And yet, he faw, the pope had no fooner obtained his defire, but he took the words of the preamble of the treaty in the literal fense, as if there had been indeed no other defign than to labour for the church, and under that colour, pretended to diffolve a league formed by himfelf. This convinced him, that the pope in drawing him into a war with Flance, had only his own interest in view. On the other hand, he was not better pleafed with the king of Arragon, nor had reafon to be fo. As for the emperor, he had performed nothing of what he had promifed. All these confiderations, having at last opened his eyes, produced a peace with France, which was concluded the next year. But before we clofe this, it will be neceffary to relate what paffed during the campaign between the English and Scots.

James IV. feeing Henry ready to carry war into France, called his parliament, and represented to them the indignities, Scotland had fuffered from the English fince the last peace. Breton's affair was not forgot in this enumeration. But the beft reafon, he alledged to induce the Scots to a war was, that France, the ancient and faithful ally of Scotland, being about to be invaded by the king of England, he could not difpense with affifting her. This reason, though very plaufible, was not however univerfally approved. Many thought it flrange that the king fhould thus wantonly, and without any urgent neceffity, break a peace advantageous to Scotland, folemnly fworn to, and even lately renewed. But the king's creatures and the penfioners of France, whom Lamothe the French ambaffador had now prepared to ferve the king

-

He refolves to make peace with France.

War between England and Scotland. Buchanan. Heibert.

king his mafter upon this occasion, carried it by a great ma- 1513. jority, fo that war was refolved.

Henry was in France, when James affembled his army to James IV. invade England, pursuant to the foregoing refolution. But enters Engto keep fome fort of formality, James writ him a letter, and He fends a fent it by a herald, who found him at the fiege of Terouenne. defiance to The letter dated the 26th of July contained the grievances, Henry. James believed to have caufe to complain of, and a declara-XIII p.382. tion of war in cafe he defitted not from his invation of Hall, France. Henry could not fend his answer till the 12th of August, the substance whereof was, " That he was not at Henry's " all furprifed to fee him break the peace upon frivolous pre- anfwer. " tences, fince he therein only imitated the infincerity of his " anceftors and progenitors. Then he upbraided him, that " whilft he knew him to be in England, he never showed, " either by letter or ambaffador, that he intended to efpouse " the king of France's quarrel, but waited for his departure " to execute his unjust designs. He added, that knowing " him perfectly, he had forefeen his breach of faith, and for " that reason, before he passed into France, had taken such " a courfe, and fo well provided for the defence of his " kingdom, that he did not queftion by God's help to fruf-" trate all the endeavours of fchifmaticks, excommunicated " by the pope and council of Lateran. That befides, he " hoped to have it very foon in his power to requite him, " and in the mean time would not fail to take the most ef-" fectual methods to deprive him and his pofterity of all " hopes of ever inheriting the kingdom, he was going fo " perfidiously to invade. After that, he fet before his eyes " the example of the king of Navarre, who for taking part " with France was dispossefield of his kingdom, without " hopes of being ever reftored. As for the pretended grie-" vances alledged in his letter, he faid, they had been " fo often answered, that all farther mention of them was " entirely needlefs. But for the king of Scotland's fum-" moning him to defift from the war with France, he told " him, he did not acknowledge him for competent judge " in his affairs with Lewis XII. and notwithstanding his " threats would continue the war. He concluded with " faying, that he might be affured he would omit no oppor-" tunity to be revenged, wherein he hoped to fucceed with " the help of God and St. George."

James staid not for an answer to his letter to take the James takes field. On the 22d of August, he entered Northumberland, Herbert, F4 and &c.

Hall.

The earl of Surrey marches towards him, and offers him battle. Hall. Stow. Herbert. Hollingfh.

It is endeavoured to divert James from fighting. Buchanan,

Hall

1513. and took feveral places, particularly Norham caftle 5. The English writers affirm his army to be fixty thousand strong; nay, fome mount the number to a hundred thousand, which is hardly credible. It cannot however be doubted it was very numerous, confidering the care Buchanan takes to fhow, it was extremely leffened by defertions, and by being kept unemployed for fome time. The earl of Surrey was then in Yorkfhire ' with twenty fix thousand men. But at the first news of the Scots entering England, he marched directly towards them, and the 4th of September came near enough to fend and offer them battle by a herald, who reported, that the king of Scotland accepted it for the Friday following. James was then encamped on the edge of mount Cheviot, where it was difficult to attack him ". And therefore, the earl of Surrey, feeing the Scots would fight only in fo advantageous a poft, refolved to ftay till they defcended on the plain. The English not appearing on the day appointed, an old Scotch lord " took occasion to represent to the king, that he had done enough to fave his honour: that it was not prudent to fight the English in their own country, but the best way would be to retire with his booty into Scotland, where it would be in his power to fight or avoid a battle as he pleafed: that as he had taken up arms only to make a diversion in favour of France, he no less employed the English forces without fighting, than by hazarding a battle : that upon this occasion he ought not to listen to the interested counfels of the French ambassador, who only wanted to hazard fome great action at another's expence, in order to free the king his mafter from his prefent streights : but in ferving France, Scotland was likewife to be regarded. This advice feemed too cautious to the king. As he had determined to give battle, he fiercely answered, he would fight the English were they a hundred thousand. Mean while, the earl of Surrey to draw him from his post, marched along a river * which parted the two armies, as if he intended to s Which yielded after a fix days fiege. Hall, fol. 38.

t The king had, at his departure, appointed him his lieutenant in the north of England; with orders, if the Scots made any incursions, to raise the militia of the counties of Chefter, Lancaster, Durham, Northumberland, Weftmoreland, and Cumberland, Hall, fol. 37. Rymer's Fæd. tom, XIII. P. 375.

u There was but one narrow field to get up to him, and at the bottom of the hill was placed all his ordnance. On one fide of his army was a great march, and the other parts of it were encompassed with Cheviot hills. Hall, fol. 40. w Archibald Douglafs, earl of Angus. Buchanan.

x The river Tyll, or elfe Sandyford, Hall, fol. 41.

enter

enter Scotland through Carlifle, the road to which place he 1513. feemed to take. James having notice of it fet fire to his camp, and marched along the fame river on the oppofite fide. But unhappily for him, the fmoak of his own camp hindered him from feeing the English, who forded the river unperceived. Then James halting about Floddon drew up Battle of his army. Here it was the earl of Surrey attacked him, where James having paffed with difficulty a fort of morals between the two is defeated armies. The particulars of this battle are fo varioufly re- and flain. lated by the historians of both nations, that the one cannot Hall. be followed without departing from the other. But as to Stow. the fuccefs it is not the fame. They all agree, the Scots loft Herbert. the day after valiantly fighting till night, which parted the combatants. The two armies retiring, the English knew not they were victorious till the morning, when they faw, their enemies had quitted the field of battle with all their artillery. The English own, they lost five thousand men in the battle, which was fought the oth of September. But they fay the Scots loft ten thoufand y. The Scots pretend, there were but five thousand flain on each fide, but confess their lofs was very confiderable, by the great number of lords and officers of their nation killed in the battle, whereas the Englifh loft not one perfon of diffinction z. King James was never more feen after the battle. The English imagined The English they found his body wounded in two places, and ordered it had found to be put into a leaden coffin, without daring however to his body. bury it, because he died excommunicate. But the Scots af- Buchanan. firmed it was not the body of their king. They faid that Hall. before the battle, he had caufed five men of his own stature to wear the fame arms with himfelf, and that the body which the English took for the king's was one Elphinston's, who greatly refembled him. However, they could not tell what was become of the king. One faid indeed, he faw him ride

y Hall fays, there were fifteen hundred English, and twelve thousand Scots flain, fol. 43. According to Buchanan, there fell above five thoufand Scots.

² In this battle the vanguard was led by the lord Thomas Howard, who had with him the lords Clifford, Conyers, Latimer, Scrope of Upfale, Lumley, Ogle; fir Nicolas Appleyard, fir William Sidney, fir William Gafcoyne, fir Stephen Bull, fir Henry Shirburne, Sc. The right wing was command d by fir Edmund Howard, and the left by fir Marmaduke Conftable, The rear was brought up by the earl of Surrey himfeif, who was attended by the lord Scrope of Bolton, fir Philip Tilney, fir George Darcy, fir Thomas Barkley, fir John Stanley, fir John Willoughby, &c; the lord Dacres, and fir Edward Stanley, with their horfe, being appointed as a referve. On the Scotch fide there fell one archbishop; two bifhops, four abbots, twelve earls, and feventeen barons, with eight or ten thousand common foldiers. See a defcription of the battle in my lord Herbert, p. 18. Hall, fol. 38, &c. Stow, p. 492.

THE HISTORY

90 1513.

Buchanan.

Henry defires the pope's leave to bary the corpfe. The pope's anfwer. Act. Pub. XHI.p.385. Nov. 29.

over the Tweed after the battle. But as the fight lasted till night, this evidence is not much to be relied on. It was however the foundation of the report of his not being dead. Some suspected, he was killed in retiring out of the battle by the lord Alexander Humes, or his vaffals. But this fact was never well proved. However this be, it was never known for certain, whether the body found by the English on the field of battle, was the king's or not a. Mean while, Henry supposing it to be the very corple of James IV. writ to the pope for a dispensation to inter it in St. Paul's church b. Leo X. answered by a brief, fignifying, " That " it was fet forth to him from the king of England, that in " a treaty concluded between the late king of Scotland and "Henry VII. and renewed by Henry VIII. the first had " fubmitted to an excommunication in cafe he acted in " breach of it, and yet had broken the peace : that there-" fore he had been pronounced excommunicate by the car-" dinal archbishop of York, by virtue of a power granted " by Julius II : that he died in a battle without having been " abfolved; but in confideration of his royal dignity and " nearnefs of blood, the king of England defired permiffion " to bury him in confecrated ground. Upon thefe accounts, " the pope was pleafed to grant his request, confidering, as " he was told and ought to believe, James in his last mo-" ments fhowed fome figns of contrition, fuch as his cir-" cumftances would admit. That therefore he appointed " the bifhop of London, or any other bifhop the king fhould " please to nominate, to enquire into the matter; and if it " was found, James had fhown any figns of repentance be-" fore his death, he gave him power to abfolve him : that " however, the abfolution fhould ferve for no other purpofe " than his interment in holy ground. Moreover, he or-" dered the bishop to enjoin the king of England to under-" go fome convenient or fuitable penance in the name of the " deceased king."

Remark upon this brief. Among many remarks that might be made on this brief, I fhall confine myfelf to this one. There was no declaration of war between James and Henry before James's letter dated ^a Hall affirms, that it was found by the lord Dacres, and flowed to fir William Scott, king James's chancellor, and to fit John Forman, his ferjeant porter, who knew him at firft fight, fol. 43.

Stow fays, it was conveyed to Shene monaftery in Surrey; and further adds, that he had feen it there, after the diffolution of that monaftery, wrapped in lead, thrown into a large room, amongft old timber, flone, lead, and other rubbifh, p. 494.

the

the 16th of July, and received the 12th of August, nor any hostility committed before the 22d of August, when James entered England. So the king of Scotland cannot be faid to have violated the truce till that time. Now, he died the 9th of September, excommunicated by the cardinal of York, who was then ambaffador at Rome. Hence I think it may be inferred, that the cardinal had excommunicated James without knowing the caufe, or hearing his reafons, and probably upon a bare letter fent him by Henry, that the king of Scotland intended to break the peace; I fay, he only intended to break the peace, fince there is no likelihood that from the 22d of August, when James entered England, to the oth of September, the day of his death, the cardinal, who was at Rome, could have been informed of the actual rupture, and proceeded to an excommunication. I fay nothing of the fuppolition that James, flain in the field, flowed any figns of contrition, especially as it was even uncertain whether the body they would have interred, was the king of Scotland's. I pass over likewise the limitation set to the absolution, that it fhould ferve only for burying the dead prince in holy ground. and the penance enjoined a living perfon in the name of a dead one. Every reader may make what reflections he thinks proper on these things.

Such being the fituation of the affairs of Europe, at the 1514. end of the year 1513, it is not furprifing that the defigns and interests of the princes should be different from what they were Interests and in the beginning of the fame year. It is therefore neceffary, views of before we enter upon the recital of the events of the year of Europe. 1514, to mention how the chief fovereigns flood affected.

Lewis XII. burned with defire to recover Genoa and Lewis XII. Milan. But he perceived, that to fucceed in that defign, the allies must be divided, otherwise there was not even a possibility of undertaking it. The pope, emperor, king of Arragon, and Switzers, were equally concerned to oppofe it. And yet, as they had also their separate interests, he thought it would not be impossible to divide them, by offering to each apart, or at leaft to fome of them, advantages as great as those they could naturally expect from their union. Befides, he hoped in treating with each in particular, to breed jealoufies and fufpicions among them, which would induce them to make hafte and treat with him for fear of being deferted. He had the more hopes of fucceeding this way, as most of the princes with whom he was in war, were not over fcrupulous, but rather very ready to facrifice their allies to their own private intereft, To this artifice therefore Lewis recurred to free himfelf from his present embarassiment. At the beginning of the year 1514, he took care to renew the negotiation concerning the marriage of the princefs René his fecond daughter with Charles, archduke of Auftria, knowing Maximilian and Ferdinand were equally defirous of it, efpecially upon the terms proposed by themselves. He started however difficulties capable of continuing the negotiation without entirely breaking it off. The pope could not look upon this project without uneafinefs. He was as much afraid of Milan's being in the hands of a grandfon of the emperor, and of the king of Arragon, as of feeing the French king reftored. His interest required that Milan should remain in the family of the Sforzas. The Switzers paffionately wilhed it alfo. The Venetians too would have therein found a great advantage, if another interest had not prevailed. And that was, to oblige the emperor to make peace with them on reasonable terms. But this they could not hope without the affistance of France, and this affistance could not be obtained without aiding Lewis XII. to recover the Milanefe. Maximilian found his account in his war with Venice, Maximilian. becaufe it coft him little. Since the league of Cambray, he had always been powerfully aided by France, or Spain, or rather, had never made war but at another's expence. His allies were neceffarily obliged to find him men or money, otherwife they might be fure he would quickly change fides. Since he had left France, the Spanish troops had done all in the war with Venice, and the king of Arragon, with all his policy, was not able to difpenfe with acting for him. It is not therefore furprifing that he was fo difficult, when a Arragon.

10

The king of As for king Ferdinand, fince he was become mafter of Navarre, it was his interest to embroil alfairs, and cherish in Italy, the hopes and fears of the feveral parties, to make himfelf neceffary, and that a peace might not be concluded without him. He thereby tried to hinder Lewis from thinking of Navarre, and hoped at laft to come to a treaty which fhould leave him in quiet posseffion of his conquest. For that reafon, he acted all forts of parts, in order to attain his ends. One while, he affifted the emperor against the Venetians, another while, he follicited him in their favour. Sometimes he excited the pope and Switzers not to fuffer the king of France to become mafter of Milan; and fometimes he offered to affift the fame prince to conquer that duchy. This was only deceit and artifice to preferve a diffention fo advantageous to peace was on foot, or used his endeavours to inflame the divisions among the princes.

to him. However, his policy began to fail him. He had fo forfeited his reputation with respect to fincerity, that he was no longer trufted. It was merely out of necessity, or from a defire to breed fuspicion in their enemies, that the reft of the fovereigns made any treaties with him, which, they were fenfible, they could not rely on.

Henry VIII. had with glory got clear of his first campaign, Henry VIII. but plainly faw himfelf indebted for his good fuccefs to Lewis's paffion, who had neglected the defence of his own kingdom, by fending his best troops to recover Milan. The truth is, Henry, depending upon the treaty of Mechlin, and the diverfions, his allies were to make in feveral provinces of France, had led into that kingdom not above five and twenty thousand men, too weak an army to give him hopes of great advantages, had he been to deal with all the forces of his enemy. Forfaken as he was by the pope, the emperor, the king of Arragon, how would he have difengaged himfelf, if Lewis XII. had refolved to defer his Milan expedition to another time, and march all his troops into Picardy? Thus Henry would have confidered, and in effect did confider, that he was more indebted for the victory of Guinegaste, and the taking of Terouenne and Tournay, to the circumstances of the time than to his prudence or valour. He was therefore inclined to get clear of an affair, he had indifcreetly embarked in, without flattering himfelf any longer with the imaginary affiftance of his allies. It was neceffary however to conceal his inclination, in order to draw from France advantageous conditions in a treaty. Such was the posture of affairs in the beginning of the year 1514. But before I speak of those of Affairs of England in particular, it is requifite to flow what fleps were Guicciard. taken by the princes concerned in the troubles of Italy, becaufe that was then the chief point, on which all the other affairs did depend.

Leo X. being alarmed at the negotiation, Lewis XII. had Leo X. tries, renewed with the emperor, concerning the marriage of René to reconcile his fecond daughter, used all poffible endeavours to reconcile and Switthe Switzers to France, that Lewis might be lefs inclined to zers. treat with the emperor and the king of Arragon. But he P. Daniel. wifhed that Lewis would ratify the capitulation of Dijon, as to what concerned the duchy of Milan, and on the other hand, exhorted the Switzers to be fatisfied with a lefs fum than was promifed by la Trimouille. This was the plan he had formed for that reconciliation. In fhort, he had fo far gained his point, that the king of France had offered a truce for three years, without however departing from his pretenficns.

fions to Milan, and many of the principal Switzers were fatisfied with it. But it was not possible to perfuade that people to abate any thing of the capitulation of Dijon. They even debated whether they fhould make a fecond incursion into France to revenge the breach of that treaty. Thus the pope's pains were fruitlefs, and the Switzers still remained mortal enemies to France.

Ferdinand prolongs the truce with Lewis XII. Guicciard. Act. Pub. XIII.p.395.

Ferdinand having advice of what was transacting in Switzerland, was afraid of being deferted, whether Lewis gave up his claim to Milan, or the Switzers accepted the truce he offered them. So, without communicating any thing to his allies, he speedily sent Quintana, his secretary to Paris, who renewed for a year the truce with France upon the fame foot with the former. Only by a fecret article, Lewis promifed not to invade the Milanefe this year. In the publication of the truce in France, there was no mention of Milan. Ferdinand published it in Spain with that article, so that the world was at a lofs to know what to think of the matter. Lewis made no fcruple to prolong the truce, becaufe he could not undertake to invade Milan and Navarre, before he had made a peace with England. Befides, he was very glad the world fhould think, the truce, he had prolonged with the king of Arragon, would be followed by a peace.

The pope ftrives to make peace Venetians, who make him umpire of their differences. Guicciard.

This was a very natural confequence, and probably, it inclined Henry ferioufly to think of a peace. But on the between the other hand, Lewis was going to receive a great prejudice by it, emperor and in that the pope to break his measures with respect to Milan, laboured with all his power to procure a peace between the emperor and the Venetians. He defired above all things, for the good of his fee, of all Italy, and of himfelf, that the French should never more set foot in Italy. Whilst the French were in possession of the Milanefe, Italy had never been free from troubles, the popes had been lefs regarded than before, and the Florentines had preferved their liberty. These were sufficient reasons to make the pope wish, they might never return. Besides, he had formed projects for raifing his family, which their neighbourhood might obstruct. One great means to attain his ends, was, to deprive Lewis XII. of the affiftance of the Venetians, which would infallibly happen, if it was possible to find fome expedient to make their peace with the emperor. The laft year the Venetians preffed by the Spanish army, had agreed to make the pope umpire, and the emperor had accepted him. But the affair had lain dormant ever fince. Prefently after Ferdinand's renewing of the truce with Lewis XII. the pope fearing a peace would be concluded 3 concluded between the two monarchs, at the expence of the duchy of Milan, ftrove to renew the negotiation between the emperor and the Venetians. He knew, if it fucceeded, the king of France would in vain expect the affiftance of the republick to conquer Milan. In fhort, with much follicitation, he obtained from both parties an engagement to fland to his arbitration, and to give him power to fettle the terms of the peace as he fhould think fit. However, by a writing under his own hand, he promifed not to pronounce fentence without both their confents.

It was very difficult to make this peace, becaufe the war Difficulties ftill continuing in the flate of Venice and Friuli, the leaft fuc- of the peace. cefs was fufficient to caufe the parties to rife or fall in their demands. When the Venetians found themfelves preffed, they very willingly agreed, that the emperor fhould keep Verona; but then Maximilian would have also Vicenza, Padua, and Trevifo. When his affairs were not profperous, he was ready to leave them these three places, but then they could not think of making peace without Verona. Thus the The pope's pope, finding the various fuccess of the war was a perpetual provisional obstacle to his projected agreement, passed a provisional fen- Guicciard, tence, ordering that both parties fhould lay down their arms: that the emperor fhould deposite in his hands, Vicenza, and whatever was poffeffed by the Spaniards in the territories of Padua, and Trevifo: that the Venetians should do the like, with regard to Crema, and pay down to the emperor fifty thousand ducats: that this provisional agreement should be deemed void, if the two parties should not think proper to ratify it; but in cafe they approved of it, he promifed to pronounce a definitive fentence within a year. The Vene- rejected by tians did not think proper to ratify the fentence, being perfua- the Veneded that, in their prefent circumstances, a truce was much more prejudicial than the continuation of the war. Thus the pope's pains were ineffectual. Such was the fituation of the affairs of Italy, during the year 1514. We must see now what paffed in England.

Henry, at his return from his glorious campaign, thought Parliament only of mirth and diversions. The parliament however met in England. the 3d of January, but there was nothing done of any moment with respect to the publick affairs c. Before the end of the feffion, the king gave the earl of Surrey, the title of duke

c In this parliament it was enacted, that furgeons should be discharged of constableship, ward, bearing of arms, and of inquests and juries; by reason of the continual fervice and attendance they give day and night, and at all hours, to their patients.

tians. -

Herbert.

of

1514. of Norfolk, which his father had enjoyed, and loft with his The earl of Surrey created duke of Norfolk. one of the king's favourites, was alfo created duke of Suffolk, Charles Brandon, duke of Sundok. The earl of Surrey. Charles Brandon, vifcount Lifle, one of the king's favourites, was alfo created duke of Suffolk, and Charles Somerfet, earl of Worcefter. Margaret of York, daughter of the duke of Clarence, brother of Edward IV. obtained likewife the title of countefs of Sarum, as heir Aft. Pub. to the earl of Warwick, her brother, beheaded by Henry XIII.p.389. VII e.

> Thomas Wolfey had now been fome months prime minister, without receiving other particular marks of his mafter's favour. But Wolfey was not forgetful of himfelf. The bishoprick of Lincoln being vacant, he fo ordered, that the king demanded it for him of the pope, who had ingroffed the collations of all the fees, by anticipated refervations. Shortly after, Lewis Guillard, bifhop of Tournay, neglecting to repair to his bifhoprick, fince the city was in the hands of the king of England, the pope readily supposed he had quitted his fee, and gave the administration thereof to Thomas Wolfey, both in temporals and fpirituals. This was fuddenly and almost at once a great addition to the new favourite's income. Leo X. not expecting much, either from the emperor, or the king of Arragon, eafily perceived, he might want the king of England. In order to gain his protection, he had difposed of the sees of Lincoln and Tournay, in favour of Wolfey, to win him to his intereft, by prefents which coft him nothing. But after having fatisfied the favourite, he must testify by some mark of distinction, his esteem for the master. To that purpose, he sent him a sword and a hat, ^d For his memorable victory over the Scots at Floddon, he had a fpecial grant from the king, to himfelf and the heirs male of his body, of an honourable augmentation to his arms; namely, to bear on the bend thereof the upper half of a red lyon, (painted as the arms of Scotland are) pierced through the mouth with an arrow. He was created duke of Norfolk, Feb. 1, 1513-14. His father derived his defcent (by the heirs male of Mowbray, and Seagrave) from Thomas Brotherton, sfon to king Edward I. Dugdale's Baron. vol. II. p. 268.

c She was wife of fir Richard Pole, defcended from an antient ftock of that name fomewhere in Wales. This fir Richard was made chief gentleman of the bedchamber to prince Arthur, and knight of the most noble order of the garter. He had four fons by the lady Margaret; Henry, afterwards lord Montague, Geffrey, Arthur, and Reginald, the famous cardinal Pole, archbishop of Canterbury, and one of the three that prefided at the council of Trent. Margaret petitioned to be countess of Salisbury, from her grand-father Richard Nevil, earl of Salisbury, for all whole caftles, manors and lands, fhe obtained a grant dated Octob. 14, which came to the crown by the attainder of her brother Edward, earl of Warwick. Idem. p. 292.

confecrated

confecrated on Christmas day, which the popes were wont 1514. to prefent to princes or generals who had obtained fome fignal victory over the enemies of the church.

Whilft the popé, emperor, and king of Arragon, were a confectated labouring to accomplish their projects, Lewis XII. was not fword and unmindful of his own affairs f. Among all his enemies, none hat. gave him fo much uneafinefs as the king of England, chiefly P. 393. for two reasons. First, Henry was young, greedy of glory, Lewis XII. rich in ready money, and moreover always fure of fupplies makes an offrom his parliament, especially in cafe of a war with France. fer of peace to Henry. Secondly, the diversion he could and did make in Picardy, Hall. by means of Calais, rendered all Lewis's projects in Italy Herbert. fruitlefs. He thereby kept the forces of France fo divided, Stow. that it was almost impossible to affist one another in case of Hollingsh. accident. Thus, it was the king of France's great interest to remove this thorn from his fide, otherwife he could not undertake to recover Genoa and Milan. Accordingly, he had been very ferioufly endeavouring it, ever fince the end of the laft campaign, by the means of Lewis of Orleans, duke of Longueville, taken prifoner at the battle of Guinegaste. It was this private ambaffador who, in his frequent converfations with Henry, laboured by degrees to open his eyes, by fhowing him how little he could depend upon his allies, and by clearly difcovering their artifices to draw him into their fnares. Henry was convinced, but, in all appearance, was told many things which he knew not before. However this be, these conversations had such an effect, that Henry told the duke he was inclined to a peace, provided it was upon reafonable terms. Lewis XII. having notice thereof, ordered the duke of Longueville privately to negotiate the affair, and try to difcover the king of England's real intentions. Probably, Henry infifted fome time upon his claim to the whole kingdom of France, and particularly to Guienne and Normandy, which made the duke apprehenfive, his negotiation would not be fuccessful. However, to induce Henry to abate fomething of his pretenfions, the duke had orders to demand the princess Mary his fister, for the king his master, who had loft Anne of Bretagne his queen, the beginning of the year. This private negotiation, to which only Thomas Wolfey, bifhop of Lincoln was admitted, continued fome time without making great progrefs, by reafon of Henry's exceffive demands. At last, at a secret conference which f This year Pregent landed on the coaft of Suffex, and burnt Brightelmflone ; whereupon fir John Wallop was fent to revenge this affront, who landed in Normandy, and burnt twenty one villages and towns. Stow, p. 495. G the The pope the king himfelf had with the duke of Longueville, he fuddenly defifted from the hardeft of his demands, and plainly told him, on what conditions the peace might be concluded, adding, he was fully refolved to reft there. Here is a letter from the king to Wolfey, under his own hand, after the conference, wherein appears what was his laft refolution ε .

VOL. VI.

THE HISTORY

The king's letter to Wolfey about the peace. Act. Pub. XIII.p.403. June.

98

1514.

⁶⁶ M Y lorde of Lynkecolne, I recommande me unto yow. And lette yow wyte that I have fpokyne with the duke; whyche in the begynnynge was as yll afrayde as ever he was in his lyffe left no good effecte fhulde comme to pas. Nevertheles, in farther communyng, we wente more rondly to oure matters; in fo moche that I fayde to hym, feinge that the kyng yowr mafter hathe foght fo gentely unto us for bothe amyte and marryage, I aftwre yow (oure honour favyd) we colde be well content to gyffe herkyne therto, and yff the offers wer refonable agre upon thos fame; but thes be nott refonable, excepte the amyte fhulde no lenger contynw then the payment off money: and yett natt fo, except ther wer a refonable fumme of mony to be payd in hand by and by :

"Yff his mafter wyll have the maryage, I can natt fee "how itt can be convenyently, exceptte the amyte be made "duryng our lyffes and on yer affter, to the intente that all "fupycyon off bothe fydes may be fett apart :

"Whyche maryage and amyte your mafter may have wnder thys maner; that is to fay, paynge erly on hundred thousand crownes and att hys request I nat to flyke for no redy mony in hande, but I to flande contente therwith for recompense off all thyngs.

"Whyche, yff your mafter confidere what herytaunce "he holdyth from me, and what good my amyte may do "to helpe forth hys mater in Italy, I thynke he wyll natt grettly flyke at :

⁶⁶ Thys forther more I fayde to the duke, furly I can natt ⁶⁶ fee how the amyte made for yers can any longer indure ⁶⁶ then the payment, whyche expryde fhulde be occafion off ⁶⁷ new breche and demans, wherby noder he nor we fhulde ⁶⁶ lyff quiettly, whiche, yff ther fall alyance, I wholde be ⁶⁶ lothe to fee; wherfor I fee no way to efchewe all dangers ⁶⁶ and parraylles, and to recompende me for withholdying

g The translator has thought fit to infert the original letter in the very words of king Henry, as it is to be found in Rymer's Fædera; and intends to do the fame by all the originalpapers, which Rapin hath translated.

« off

OF ENGLAND.

" off myne inheritance (which yff' I wolde be flake in, my " fubjectes wolde murmure att) but to make thys amyte un " duryng oure lyffs and on yere affter, paynge yerly as above " reherfed; whyche amyte wons grantyd the alyance shulde " natt be refulyde, nor non other thyng whyche with my " honour favyd I might do:

" Saying forther more to hyme that, yff I might demande " with my honour any leffe, or take any leffe offere (feyng " hys mafter is fo well mynded to the forfayd alyance and " amyte) I wolde be glad to do that att hys requeft, but lefs " then thys hit can nott ftonde with my honour, nor my " fubjectes wyll nat be content that I shulde take.

" My lord, I fhuyd him furthermore that, yff he thought " we myght truft to have thys ende, I wolde be cyntent that " yow and they shulde commune on all other artycylles, " concernyng the amyte and maryage, tyll we myght have " absolute assurance in that behalfe for lysyng off time.

" To whyche he answarde, that he colde natt assure me " theroff; but that he truftyde, feyng my demands wer fo " refonable, that hys mafter wholde agre therto.

" On truft hereon we woll that yow begyne to penne the " refodue off the artycylles as foone as yow can;

" And thus fare yow well."

Wryttyn with the hande off your lovying mafter,

HENRY R.

Though this letter has no date, it may by feveral circumftances be conjectured to be written in June 1514.

Lewis XII. being informed of the king of England's Lewis is not last refolution, entertained great hopes of a peace. There pleafed with were however two articles which troubled him. The first pofals. was to pay annually a hundred thousand crowns, as a compenfation for Henry's claim to the kingdom of France. This was in fome measure to own the justice of his title, and pay him a fort of tribute, which he could not refolve. The other article related to Tournay, which he defired to recover, and which however was not mentioned in the king's proposals. But as to this article, there was an obstacle which was not eafily to be furmounted, and that was, Wolfey was concerned. It was not fufficient to gain Henry by flatteries, or by giving him a fum of money in lieu of Tournay; the favourite must also be made amends for the loss of a see which brought him a confiderable income. To endeavour therefore therefore to agree upon thefe two articles, Lewis fent ambaffa-1514. dors to England. He chose for that purpose, Lewis d'Orleans duke of Longueville, John de Selve first president of Roan, and Thomas Bohier, to whom du Bellai gives the title of general of Normandy, and the king in his commif-XIII.p.405, fion that of chevalier general of France. Mean while, the two kings agreed upon a ceffation of arms during the treaty.

G 2

> It was eafier for the French ambaffadors to caufe Henry to alter his last resolution concerning the first article, than to obtain the reftitution of Tournay. The reason is evident. In the first article, the king alone was concerned, whereas in the fecond, the minister's interest was properly in question. Mean while, fince Henry was determined to make peace with France, Tournay could be of no farther use, and a fum of money would have been doubtlefs more advantageous than the prefervation of that place. But Wolfey perceived when Tournay fhould be in the hands of the king of France, he would infallibly lofe the administration of the fee. So, the negotiation of the ambaffadors upon that article was entirely fruitlefs. It was not the fame with respect to the penfion of the hundred thousand crowns demanded by Henry. They found means to perfuade him to be fatisfied with a million of crowns, in which were included the feven hundred forty five thousand contained in the treaty of Estaples, but whereof, indeed, an inconfiderable part had been paid. The Spanish ambaffador refiding at London, used all poffible endeavours to intervene in the negotiation. But Henry would never fuffer him; well knowing, he only intended to obstruct it. The commissioners of the two kings h having fettled all the articles, the treaties were figned the 7th of August.

There were three feparate treaties. The first concerned only the renewing of the alliance between France and England. The fecond was about the marriage of the princefs Mary with Lewis XII. The third, related to the payment XIII.p.413. of the million of crowns. As thefe treaties ferved for foundation to many others hereaster concluded, it is necessary to infert the substance, at least of the most material articles.

h The English commissioners were, Thomas, duke of Norfolk, Thomas bifhop of Lincoln, and Richard, bithop of Winchefter. Rymer, tom. XIII. p. 422.

I. TREATY,

He fends ambafladors to England. Act. Pub. 406. July 29. A truce agreed upon. Henry refules to reftore Tournay.

Henry would not fusier the Spanish ambaffador to have to do in the Treaty. Three feveral treaties figned at London. Act. Pub.

OF ENGLAND.

I. TREATY,

Of peace and amity between LEWIS XII. and HEN-RY VIII. concluded at London, August 7. 1514.

T HAT the amity between the two kings fhould laft till P. 413. a year after the death of the fhorteft liver. That the fucceffor of him that died first, fhould give notice within the year to the other, whether he would prolong this or make a new treaty.

That all impolitions laid, within fifty two years last past, by one king on the subjects of the other, should be abolished.

That the peace fhould not be deemed violated by the outrages committed on either fide.

That neither of the two kings fhould afford protection or refuge to the rebels of the other.

By the 14th, 15th, and 16th articles, the two kings bound themfelves to mutual affiftance in three cafes: 1. For defence of one another's dominions: 2. For recovery of the territories with-held by other princes: 3. In cafe one of the two kings fhould be attacked on account of the prefent treaty, and affirmed upon his honour, it was for that caufe. In each of thefe cafes the conditions were different ¹. But in the laft, they promifed mutual aid, though the affailant fhould be relation, friend, or ally of one only, or of both.

Lewis included in the treaty as his allies, the pope, the Switzers, and the king of Scotland ^k. On Henry's part were named the pope, Bologna, all the towns of St. Peter's patrimony, the archduke of Auffria, and the Switzers ¹.

Scotland was included in the treaty, but on condition that the Scots fhould commit no hoftilities against England after the 25th of November.

¹ In the firft cafe, Lewis was to furnifh twelve hundred lances by land, and five thoufand men by fea, with convenient fhipping; and Henry ten thoufand archers by land, and five thoufand men at fea, with fhipping. In the fecond, Lewis was to lend Henry fix hundred lances only, and Henry him but five thoufand archers, with the fame fea forces on both fides as before mentioned. In the third, one was to aid the other at his charge that was invaded.

k And the kings of Hungary, Portugal, Denmark, and Navarre; the dukes of Savoy, Gueldres, and Lorrain; Venice, Florence; the bifhop of Liege; the marquiffes of Mantua, Montferrat, and Saluzzo; and the lord of Sedan. Rymer, tom. XIII. p. 419.

¹ As also the dukes of Cleves, and Juliers; the Hanse Towns; and the lord de Ligny. Ibid.

That

THE HISTORY

to 514. That the treaty fhould be ratified and form by the two kings, and confirmed by the parliament of England, and the flates of France.

> That each of the two kings fhould endeavour to obtain of the pope a fentence of excommunication against the infractor of the peace.

II. TREATY,

Concerning the marriage of LEWIS XII. with the princefs MARY.

Act. Pub. T HAT matrimony fhould be contracted by proxies, and XIII.p.423. T per verba de præfenti within ten days after the date of this treaty.

That the king of England [within two months after the contract] fhould convey at his own charge, the princefs his fifter to Abbeville, where within four days after her arrival the king of France fhould folemnly marry her.

That Mary fhould have in dower four hundred thousand crowns, two hundred thousand whereof should be reckoned for jewels, &c. and in case of recovery, Lewis should be obliged to reftore only the jewels, &c. which should be valued at the sum of two hundred thousand crowns.

That the other half, amounting to two hundred thousand crowns, Henry should pay, by deducting the sum out of the million the king of France was bound to pay by a late treaty.

That the future queen's jointure fhould be as great as that affigned to Anne of Bretagne, or any other queen of France.

That in case of Lewis's death, Mary should enjoy her dower and jointure during life, whether she resided in France or England.

III. TREATY,

For the payment of a million of crowns.

p. 428, 439. B Y this treaty Lewis XII. acknowledged, that by the treaty of Eftaples, Charles VIII. was bound to pay Henry VII. or his fucceflors the fum of 745000 crowns, and that himfelf was obliged to pay the arrears of the fame. Moreover,

Moreover, that Charles duke of Orleans his father, by an obligation dated March the 7th, 1444, had owned himfelf u debtor in a certain fum to Margaret of Somerfet, grandmother of Henry VIII.

That these two fums not being yet paid, Lewis bound himfelf to pay to the king of England, or his fucceffors, a million of crowns, as well for the arrears of the faid two fums, as on account of the good affection he bore him, and to the end their amity might be the more lafting.

That this million should be paid by Lewis to the king of England, by half yearly payments of fifty thousand livres Tournois, till the whole was discharged.

Thus the war, which had been undertaken on pretence of religion, and for the glory of God, ended in a treaty, which mentions neither religion, nor the pope, nor the church.

On the other hand, though the prince fs Mary had been The prince fs folemnly affianced to Charles of Auffria, Lewis XII. and Mary pro-Henry VIII. made no difficulty concerning this fecond mar- her contract riage, neither did they fo much as vouchfafe to demand the with pope's dispensation to absolve Mary from her first contract. Charles of Austria. Only a few days before the figning of the treaty, Mary de- Act. Pub. clared in the prefence of a notary publick and other witneffes, XIII.p.409. that the had been forced to plight her faith to the prince of July 30. Castile, archduke of Austria. That moreover the archduke having promifed to efpouse her by proxy, and per verba de præfenti, as foon as he was fourteen years of age, had broken his word. She added further, that fhe was creditably informed, the counfellors and confidents of the prince of Caftile were inftilling into him, to the utmost of their power, an averfion for the king of England her brother. Upon thefe allegations, the two kings making themfelves judges in a caufe which doubtlefs belonged to the pope's cognizance, thought fit the marriage should be confummated.

I have still to remark upon the third treaty, That, though Remark on Henry had declared to the duke of Longueville, as appears the third treaty. in his letter to Wolfey, that he could not make peace unlefs the king of France would pay him a yearly penfion of a hundred thousand crowns, as a compensation for the inheritance he with-held from him, an expedient was found to fatisfy him with much lefs. The whole was reduced to Lewis's bond to pay him a million of crowns, two thirds of which were already due before the treaty. Befides, that this bond might not be confidered as a compensation of the king of England's title to France, according to Henry's intentions, it

G4

Herbert,

it was expressly faid in the treaty to be in payment of the arrears of the feven hundred forty five thousand crowns, due to the king of England by the treaty of Eftaples, of another fum due from the late duke of Orleans to Margaret the king's grandmother, and laftly, for Lewis's good affection to Henry. Hereby was funk the principal foundation, on which Henry had built his demand of a penfion of a hundred thousand crowns, a demand confidered by him as the bafis of the treaty according to his letter to Wolfey. It may therefore be affirmed, that Henry was no lefs over-reached by the king of France in the treaty of peace, than he had been by the pope, the emperor, and the king of Arragon, in that which had engaged him in the war. This proceeded not from his mifunderstanding his own interests, fince it appears in his letter, that he was very fenfible of the confequence of his demand. To what then can his eafinefs be ascribed but to the infinuations of his prime minister, who certainly erred not out of ignorance ? Probably, Lewis XII. found means to make Wolfey his friend. We shall fee still more plainly hereafter, that this minister was much more mindful of his own than his mafter's advantages when they came in competition, and that he loft no opportunity of enriching himfelf.

Death of cardinal Bambridge. Herbert. Act. Pub.

Wolfey is made archbifhop of York. p. 412, 450-455.

Whilft Wolfey was employed with the French ambaffadors in negotiating the peace, cardinal Bambridge archbishop of York died at Rome the 14th of July m. The fame day cardinal Julius de Medici, afterwards pope by the name of XIII.p.404. Clement VII. fent the king notice of his death, acquainting him withal that he had prevailed with the pope not to difpole of the fee of York before his pleafure was known. Whereupon the king demanded the archbishoprick for Thomas Wolfey, which was immediately granted. This minifter was then in fo great favour, that he abfolutely directed all the king's affairs, who had for him a very great effeem and affection. It may be prefumed that he was now doing p. 439, 455. Lewis XII. fome good fervices, fince there are in the collection of the publick acts, feveral letters from that monarch to him, beginning with these kind words, " My lord of " York, and very good friend."

> m He was poifoned by Rinaldo de Modena, his steward, or chaplain, an Italian prieft, to revenge a blow his master gave him, as Runaldo confessed at his execution. Wood, p. 104.

Stow, p. 496. There is a letter writ by one Pace, from Rome, charging Sylvefter (an Italian) bishop of Worceffer, with having a hand in his death. Fiddes.

August

104 1514.

1

August and September were spent in preparations for the 1514. new Queen of France's journey, in the celebration of the marriage by proxies in France and England. and in the ra- Lewis's tifications of the treaties. After which, Mary was con- with Mary ducted to Abbeville with a numerous train of lords and la- confumdies, where the marriage was confummated the 9th of Oc- mated. tober ".

Whilft the peace between France and England was treat- Stow. ing at London, the pope, Emperor, and king of Arragon Leo X. proomitted nothing, that they imagined would obstruct it. They poles a new league to the plainly perceived, it could not but turn to their prejudice, king of and that the burden of the war would fall upon them. They France. were even afraid that Henry would join against them with P. Daniel. France. Leo X. had fent to Henry to perfuade him to a peace, and yet, when he faw it upon the point of conclufion, would have been glad, his exhortations had not been regarded. So, to cross the negotiation at London as much as he could, he proposed a new league with the king of France, imagining it would be a means to abate his eagernels for a peace with England. But as Lewis took a He makes fortnight to give him his answer, he was afraid of being Ferdinand, left alone, and for that reason, made haste and concluded a defensive league with the king of Arragon for a year only.

On the other hand, Ferdinand fearing, Lewis, after Froitles enmaking a peace with England, would invade Navarre, of- deavours of fered him his affiftance to conquer Milan. But Lewis knew and Ferdihim too well to put any confidence in him. In fhort, the nand to hinemperor and Ferdinand, defiring at any rate to hinder him der the peace from concluding with England, fent him their confent in Lewis and n The king and queen conducted her to Dover, and then recommended her to the duke of Norfolk's care, who attended her to Abbeville. The other perfons of note that attended her, were, Thomas Grey, marquis of Dorfet, Thomas, bifliop of Durham, Thomas Howard, earl of Surrey, and admiral, Charles Somerset, earl of Worcester, Thomas Docwra, prior of St. John's of Jerusalem, dr. Nicolas West, dean of Windfor; the lords Delawar, Barners, Monteagle; fir Maurice Barkley, fir John Peche, fir William Sandes, fir Thomas Bulleyn, &c. Rymer, tom. XIII. p. 449. Hall, fol. 4S. She embarked October 2. After the ceremony was over, all her retinue were difmiffed, except a few officers and attendants, amongit whom, fuys the lord Heibert, was mrs. Ann Bulleyn, Guicciard. daughter to fir Thomas Bulleyn. Burnet's Ref. tom. I. p. 43, 44. Before the coronation was over, there were folemn jufts and tournaments held at Paris, by Francis de Valois, heir to the crown, at which the duke of Suffolk, and the marquis of Dorfet came off with honour. The king and queen of France were spectators; but the king was fo old and infirm, that he lay on a couch. The duke of Valois out of envy, caufed, it seems, a German or prodigious ftrength and fize, to be privately introduced into the field, in order to oppose the duke of Suffolk, who, though with great difficulty, got the better of the German. Herbert, p. 21. Hall, fol. 48, 49. Stow, p. 495.

105

p. 448. Hall.

Henry.

form,

form, for the marriage of René his fecond daughter with Charles of Auftria their grandfon, At the fame time, Maximilian ratified the one year's truce made by Ferdinand with France. But all would not do. They had even the mortification to hear, that they were neither of them included in the treaty of London; a clear evidence how little Henry valued their friendship. Notwithstanding all this, they both feigned to be extremely pleafed with the peace, though in their hearts they were exceedingly vexed.

It was expected that the king of France being freed from the war with England, would infallibly recover Genoa and Milan. The pope was fo perfuaded of it, that he writ to exhort him to that expedition, though at the fame time he used all his endeavours to break his measures, by an agreement between the emperor and the Venetians. He even difpatched to Venice, Peter Bembo, afterwards cardinal, to incline the Venetians to peace. But they fearing the pope was laying a fnare for them, to take off the king from their alliance, gave him immediate information, and thereby rendered him very jealous of his holinefs.

Leo X. was forming at that time grand projects in favour vast projects of Julian de Medici his brother. His defign was to become master of Ferrara and Urbino, and to join these two states to Parma, Placentia, Reggio, and the city of Modena, lately purchased of the emperor, in order to cast them into one state for this brother, of whom he had a mind to make a great prince. Nay, it is faid, he intended to add the kingdom of Naples; and to make that conquest, had joined in a league with the Venetians. But as he faw the king of France would quickly invade the Milanefe, he shewed great regard for him, left he fhould make an enemy of a prince, who, if he came to be poffeffed of Milan, would have it in his power to obstruct his defigns. Mean while, Lewis not being pleased with the pope, preffed him to declare himself, refolving to know for certain whether he was to confider him as a friend, or an enemy. Leo, who perceived his intent, amused him with fair words, without however being determined, becaufe his purpole was to regulate his conduct by the events of the war, he forefaw. This did not hinder Lewis from vigoroufly continuing the neceffary He loses the preparations for his expedition into Italy, where he intended Lanthorn at to go in perfon the next fpring. But whilft he was thinking of means to relieve the Lanthorn Tower, which he still held at Genoa, and by the help whereof, hoped to become mafter of the city, he received the news that it was furrendered

The pope tries to amule Lewis XII. Guicciard.

He forms for hishouse. Sardi. Guicciard.

Lewis prepares to pais Genoa, dered by capitulation, and immediately razed by the Ge- 1514. noefe. However, this was not capable to deter him from his defigns upon Italy.

Before I close the year 1514, it will not be unfervice- Affairs of able briefly to relate what paffed in Scotland this year. Scotland. Buchanan, James IV. left two fons, of whom the eldeft, called after Herbert, his own name, was not yet full two years old. By a will, made before he took the field, he left the regency of the kingdom after his death to his queen, fifter of Henry VIII. during her widowhood. The ftates being met the begining of the year 1514, immediately acknowledged for king, James V. fon and heir to the deceafed. As for the regency, there would doubtlefs have been great debates, if the lofs of the battle of Floddon had not made the Scots apprehenfive, that the king of England would improve the advantage he had over them. There had never been in Scotland a queen regent, and that would have been fufficient to reject the claufe of the late king's will. But it was hoped, the queen would prevail with the king her brother, to leave in peace a country whereof the had the government. This expectation was not difappointed. The queen being declared regent, and writing to the king her The queen brother, to entreat him not to difturb the minority of the dowager is regent. young king his nephew, Henry generoully answered, he was Herbert. equally inclined to peace or war, and left it to the Scots to Hall. chuse which they pleafed.

After this declaration, probably, Scotland would have She marries remained in quiet under the regency of the queen, if that and lofes the princefs had not married again fome months after. She regency. chofe for her confort Archibald Douglass earl of Angus, one of the greatest lords in Scotland, and by this fecond marriage filled the kingdom with confusion and trouble. As by the late king's will the was to be regent only during her widowhood, the queftion was to appoint another in her room. Douglass her husband used all his endeavours to have her continued in the regency. He affirmed, there was no other way to preferve peace with England; and befides, Henry would be obliged to fupport the queen his fifter in cafe any one fhould pretend to diffurb her. But this laft / confideration had a quite contrary effect to what the earl expected, upon those who dreaded his too great advancement. They knew, that being husband to the regent, he would always be countenanced by the king of England, and by his affiftance, enabled to ingross more authority than they wifhed him, Alexander Hume Governor of all the country north 5 north of the Frith, was the head of those that opposed the queen's regency. He was a proud and haughty man, who could not endure a superior. During the late king's life; he had been prefident of the marches bordering upon England, where he had committed fuch outrages, that as fome fay, for fear of being called to an account, he killed or caufed to be killed James IV. when he was retiring out of the battle The duke of of Floddon. However that be, Hume used all his interest to break Douglass's and the queen's measures, and proposed John Stewart duke of Albany for regent. This duke was fon of Alexander duke of Albany, brother of James III. who to avoid the perfecutions of the king his brother, was forced to fly into France, where he died. He left there this fon, who being married, and adhering to the fervice of Lewis XII. • had received many favours from that monarch, and acquired a great reputation. Though he had never been in Scotland, he was however the young king's nearest relation, and Hume had interest enough to have him declared regent. Whereupon the states fent deputies to offer him the regency, and to pray him to come inftantly and govern the realm in the king's name. Lewis XII. dying during these transactions, Francis I. his successor, having great reafons not to displease the king of England, would not suffer the duke of Albany to depart till he had finished his affairs with Henry. For this caufe the regent arrived not in Scotland before May 1515. During this interval, Scotland being without a governor, the diffensions among the great men much increased, every one having time to form his cabals against the regent's arrival.

Albany is elected regent.

108

1514.

1515.

in Death of Lewis XII. Francis I. king of France. Mezerai. Stow. Guicciard.

The first day of the year 1515 was the last of Lewis XII.'s life P. But the death of that prince made no alteration in the fituation of the affairs of the kingdom. The duke of Valois, who fucceeded him by the name of Francis I'. plainly discovered, by adding the title of duke of Milan to that of king of France, that he intended to purfue his predeceffor's defigns. Mean while, he did not think fit openly to declare his intentions, till he had fettled his affairs both abroad and at home.

o Lewis, when duke of Orleans, killed the cuke his father at a tournament. Rapin.

P He died (fays the lord Herbert) after eighty days poffession rather than apjoying of his queen, leaving behind him no iffue male, though otherwife of that effeem among his fubjects, for his care not to oppress them with impositions longer than his necessities required, that he was called father of his people, p. 22, Stew, p. 496.

By

By the death of Lewis XII. queen Mary his widow was 1515. at liberty to dispose of herfelf, and to follow her own inclinations rather than the politick views of the king her The queen brother. Before her marriage, fhe had conceived an af- Lewis XII. fection for Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk, a most accom- marries the plished lord. It is even faid, the king had promifed to duke of marry her to him. But as her marriage with Lewis XII. Suffolk, Hall, was to be the band of the peace between France and Eng- Stow. land, the was under a necessity to facrifice her love to the Herbert. good of both kingdoms. The duke of Suffolk however waited upon her into France, though he was not of the number of those who were appointed to conduct her. Mezerai fays, the duke of Valois, prefumptive heir to the crown of France, caufed that English lord to be narrowly watched, for fear he should give the king a successor. This shews that the queen's inclination was no fecret. The death of Lewis XII, happening within three months after his marriage, the queen Dowager was not willing to run a fecond hazard, of being given to another hufband not of her own chufing. Henry fuspecting her defign, writ to her the beginning of February, defiring her not to marry again without his confent. But the queen believed it would be eafier to obtain the king's pardon when the thing was done, than his permission to do it 9. So, in March, about two months after the death of Lewis XII. the was privately married to the duke of Suffolk. The next day, the fent word of it in a letter to the king her brother, and taking the whole blame upon herfelf, intimated to him that the had in fome measure forced the duke to this rafh action. Henry feemed difpleafed at first, but his anger was foon over. Their peace being made they returned to Henry, and were very well received r.

The parliament was then fitting s, and as England was Parliament in profound tranquillity, the houfes were only employed in in England.

9 The lord Heibert fays, the writ before her marriage to the king her brother, protesting, that if he would have her married in any place, fave where her mind was, fhe would fhut herfelf up in fome religious Houfe. She fet the duke of Suffolk but the space of four days to obtain her good will, and told him, if he could not do it in that time, he should be out of all hopes of enjoying her, p. 22. r He, with fir Richard Wingfield, and dr. Weft, were deputed to carry over Henry's letters of condelance to she queen, and had not been long at Paris, before he made his addreffes to her. They arrived the fecond of May, and were publickly married on the thirteenth at Greenwich. The queen (fay the French) carried with her in jewels, plate, and tapeftry, of Lewis XII. to the value of two hundred thoufand crowns: amongst which was a great diamond called le miroir de Naples, which Francis would fain have redcemed at a great price. Mrs Ann Bulleyn staid behind in the French court. Herbert, p. 22.

s It met February 5. See Statutebook.

domeflick

Divers ftatutes. Herbert, domeflick affairs, which are of little or no confequence to foreigners. There were however three statutes passed this feffion which deferve notice. It was provided by the first, that unwrought wool fhould not be exported out of the kingdom, for the encouragement of the woollen manufacture; This act has been often revived by reason of its importance, and yet even now, an effectual means is wanting to prevent the clandestine exportation of wool. The second statute declared all the king's fecond letters patents to be void unless mention was made of the first. This was to prevent the king from being furprized. The third was not lefs neceffary. It frequently happened that towards the end of a feffion feveral members went home, imagining, there was nothing more of moment to be done. Then the factious took advantage of their absence, to propose and pass fuch bills as probably would have been thrown out, had the house been more numerous. It was therefore enacted, that the members who absented themselves before the end of the feffion, without the speaker's and commons leave, to be entered in the clerk of the parliament's book, fhould lofe their wages t. I must now interrupt for fome time the recital of domeflick, to fpeak of foreign affairs, which are to ferve for foundation to what will hereafter be faid with refpect to England.

The alliance between France and newed. Du Bellai. Guicciard. Act. Pub.

Francis I. was too much concerned to renew the alliance between France and England, to fail of performing the England re- article of the treaty, whereby the fucceffor of him that died first, was to acquaint the other whether he defigned to prolong the time of the alliance. As he intended to pass into Italy to recover the duchy of Milan, it was abfolutely ne-XIII.p.473, ceffary to fecure the king of England. To that purpofe, about the middle of March, he fent to the first prefident of Roan, his ambafiador at London, a commission to renew > t Thefe wages were levied by the theriffs, and the most ancient write for knights wages extant are those of 28, 29, 32 of Edward I. The first statute concerning them is, that of 12 Richard II; namely, that the levying of the expences of knights shall be, as hath been used before this time. The wages in this reign were four fhillings a day for knights of the fhire, and two fhillings at leaft for burgeffes, befides the charges of going and coming, and fees for writs, &c.---In this parliament there was also another statute made, importing, that whereas divers felons and murderers did, upon feigned and untrue furmifes, get themfelves re-moved into the King's Bench, and could not by order of law be remitted and fent down to the justices of goal delivery : that therefore for the future, the justices of the King's Bench shall have full power and authority, to remand and fend down the bodies or indictments of all felons and murderers, into the counties, where the murders or felonies were committed, Stat. 6 Henry VIII., c. 6.

the

the alliance with Henry, as well as the bond for the pay- 1515. ment of the million, to which Lewis XII. was obliged. This was done by a new Treaty, figned the 5th of April, and P. 476. exactly like the former.

After all the frauds used by the king of Arragon to Henry, Ferdinand there was no room to hope for a perfect friendship between feeks Henry's them. However, Ferdinand, who was not eafily difcou- friendfhip, raged, fent to the king his fon-in-law a new ambaffador, to p. 494. propose the renewing of their alliance. It is likely, he did not believe, Henry had fo foon forgot his deceits, but it was for his interest that he should be known to have an ambasfador in England. The ambaffador arrived in May, but His ambafwas fuffered to wait in vain till October without being dif- fador is re-ceived very patched : nay, very probably he would never have fucceeded coldly. in his negotiation, if Wolfey's interefts had not caufed the king to alter his refolution, never to have any thing to do with the king his father in-law. I shall speak more fully of this affair in another place.

Whilft the Spanish ambaffador was waiting in vain at Henry tries London, Henry had two at Brufiels, who made no greater to be recon-progrefs. He had not dealt very gallantly with the young Charles the archduke, in giving the prince's his bride to Lewis XII. archduke. without any ceremony. Indeed, Charles had not repaired to Calais the 5th of May the laft year, as he was bound by the treaty of Lille: but it could not thence be inferred, he had renounced his marriage, at leaft before he was afked, whether he intended to confummate it. Henry was afraid therefore, the archduke, having lately affumed the government of the Low-Countries, and made a treaty with France, would think of revenging the affront. So, in order to found him, or prevent the effects of his refentment, he fent two ambaffadors " to propose the renewing of the former alliance between Henry VIII and Philip I. their fathers. But His ambifiathe ambaffadors were fuffered to wait a good while at Bruf- dors are ill fels, without being much regarded, or receiving any answer. p. 406.

The affairs of Europe were then in a fituation, which Francis I. would not allow the young archduke to engage in any par- prepares to ty. It was neceffary, in order to take just measures to Milan. wait the fuccess of the war, which Francis I. was preparing Guicciard. to carry into Italy. In all appearance, it would produce Mezerai. events capable of altering the interests and projects of most of the fovereigns. Since Francis's accession to the crown,

" Sir Edward Poynings, and dr. William Knight, Rymer's Fod, tom. XIII. p. 496.

he

Guicciard.

Ferdinand forms a league againft France. Guicciard.

he had plainly fhewn that he intended not to fuffer Maximilian Sforza peaceably to enjoy the duchy of Milan. On the other hand, the king of Arragon was under apprehenfions for Naples and Navarre. Francis I. was a young prince, full of courage and ambition, and it could not be doubted that he had formed great projects. So the eyes of all were upon him, to fee in what manner he would begin his reign. He was making preparations, which difcovered he had fome great defign in his thoughts, and did not take much pains to conceal that he had Milan in view. Mean while, he ufed for pretence of his armament, the invafion Burgundy was threatened with by the Switzers. But the league he had lately renewed with Venice, and his offer to Ferdinand to prolong the truce, provided the fecret article concerning the Milanese was annulled, were plain indications of his designs.

All this was not fufficient to make Ferdinand perfectly eafy. He was afraid of being deceived by Francis, and that his preparations were intended for Navarre. To prevent this danger, he rejected Francis's offer, and withal made use of it to induce the emperor and Switzers to join with him for the defence of the Milanefe, intimating there was no room to queftion, that the king of France, would turn his arms that way. As for the emperor, he did not want much folicitation. He readily entered into all forts of leagues, because he always found means to thrive at another's expence. There was more difficulty with regard to the Switzers, becaufe Francis had among them adherents, who endeavoured to diffuade them from the league. But his enemies prevailed in the end w, and the league was concluded between the emperor, the king of Arragon, the duke of Milan, and the Switzers. Ferdinand played one of his ufual artifices upon this occasion. He perfuaded the Switzers, that to defend the Milanese, the shortest way was to attack the king of France in his own kingdom. For that purpofe, he engaged to make a powerful diversion on the fide of Fontarabia, whilst the Switzers should invade Burgundy, and the emperor, by continuing the war in the flate of Venice, hinder the Venetians from affifting the common He deceives enemy. His chief aim was to defend Navarre, in cafe theSwitzers. Francis I. had thoughts of turning his arms that way, and then to hinder that prince from becoming malter of the duchy of Milan. His league with the Switzers was equally > w The reft of the confederates engaged to pay them thirty thousand ducats. a month. Guicciard. 1. 12.

> > fubservient

-

fubservient to both these ends. For if Francis I. invaded 1515. Navarre, the Switzers would divert him from his purpole, L by making an inroad into Burgundy. But if he really in-tended to conquer Milan, the Switzers, as next neighbours, and most concerned, could not dispense with affisting that duchy. What Ferdinand had forefeen, came to pafs. Francis Francis pafhaving ordered his forces to file off towards the Alps, the fesinto Italy. Switzers fent their troops into Italy, where they feized the two paffes, through which only it was thought poffible to enter the Milanefe. When Ferdinand was affured the king of France was marching towards Milan, he difbanded the army levied for the defence of Navarre, leaving the Milanefe to be taken care of by the Switzers. The very army The Swit-Ferdinand had in Italy, under the command of the viceroy zers are deof Naples, made no motion to join them. The empe-their allies, ror remained without acting at Infpruck. Leo X. who had also entered into the league, gave them no fort of affistance. Thus the whole burden of the war fell upon the Switzers, without even the other allies fending a penny of the money that was promifed them. But this was no wonder. The Switzers were no more exempted than the king of England, and fo many other princes, whom Maximilian. and Ferdinand had ferved in the fame manner.

Mean while, Francis I. having found means to march his Guicciard, army through a place which feemed impracticable x, the Switzers who guarded the paffes retired to Milan, and Francis advanced alfo towards the fame city. When he approached, he offered the Switzers a fum of money to return home. This negotiation was now in great forwardnefs, when they received a supply of fifteen thousand men of their nation. This aid rendering them more flout, they refolved, by the fuggeftions of the cardinal of Sion, immediately to attack Francis who lay encamped at Marignano, little expecting their coming. They were defeated, and ten thousand flain on the spot. After which, they retired into their country, leaving Francis Francis, mafter of all the Milanefe. Maximilian Sforza, gains the who had fhut himfelf up in the caffle of Milan, furrendered Marignano. it by capitulation, and was fent into France, to live as a private perfon.

Before Francis I began his expedition, Octavian Fregola, Genoa is " had brought Genoa under the dominion of France, and in- fubjected to ftead of Doge, stiled himself governor for the king. Guicciard.

* Between mount Vifo, and mount Cenis. Guieciard. 1. 12. Through Daniel, tom. VI. p. 351. the valley of Barcelonnete, Roque Spar-

VOL. VI.

Leo

-Leo X. makes his peace with Francis. Idem.

to enter Italy. He had joined in the league against him, but fo privately, that Francis knew nothing of it till he came to Verceil. During the time between the king's arrival in Italy, and the battle of Marignano, the pope was under great perplexities. He had fent an army into Lombardy, to support the duke of Milan. But when he heard Francis had furmounted the difficulties of the paffage, he fent orders to Lorenzo de Medici who commanded his army, to commit no hostilities against the French. At the fame time, he told the king, his army was there only to guard Parma and Pla-Mean while, as the affair of Milan was not yet decentia. cided, he durft not make too many advances to the king, for fear of displeasing the allies, who would have it in their power to be revenged, if the king happened to be vanquished. But, after the battle of Marignano, he was immediately reconciled with him, and though he had grievoully offended him, obtained however advantages which he could fcarce have expected, had he taken his part from the beginning. The popes make leagues, and undertake wars as temporal princes, and when their affairs do not prosper, difintangle themfelves as heads of the church, and vicars of Jefus Chrift. Though Leo X's behaviour to Francis was fuch, that he deferved no favour from that victorious prince, he obtained however whatever he pleafed, and among other things, the abolition of the Pragmatick Sanction, which the popes his predeceffors had hitherto in vain demanded of the kings of France y.

Henry is engaged in new troubles.

Guicciard. Burnet.

Though Henry had not been able entirely to avoid the fnares laid by the pope, the emperor, and the king of Arragon, he had happily got clear, but with a firm refolution never more to be thus over reached. His affecting not to mention them in his treaty with France, plainly flowed he did not much value their friendship. But he was not fo fortunate as to perfift in this refolution, fince it was his own fault that he engaged in a fresh war with France, not fo much Caufes of it. for his own, as the interest of others. His change may be afcribed to three feveral caufes. The first is, his jealoufy

> y The decrees of the council of Bafil were by them reduced into the form of an edict, and published under the title of the Pragmatic Sanction ; which Charles VII. king of France, declared he would have to be inviolably obferved. It was abrogated by Lewis XI, which was opposed by the parliament. Charles VIII. re-established it, but it was again annulled by Lewis XII. See a full account of these transactions in bishop Burnet's Hist. Ref. tom. HI. P. 8, 800, of the glorious success of Francis's arms in Italy. The fe- 1515. cond, to prevent the growing power of that neighbour. The third and principal, Wolfey his favourite's intereft, who thinking he had reason to complain of the king of France, had a mind to be revenged. The two first need no farther explanation. It is well known, that princes are fubject to paffions like other men, and that jealoufy may induce them to run counter to their intereft. It is known likewife, that policy is as the hinge on which almost all their actions turn. But on this occafion, Henry proceeded upon a very wrong policy, fince nothing was more capable of fecuring the peace of England, than the king of France's acquifitions in Italy. The third cause requires a more particular explanation.

0

Thomas Wolfey, archbishop of York, was prime minister, Wolfey's and chief favourite. But this does not fully express the thing. great credit. It must be added, that he fo absolutely governed the king, that he turned him which way he pleafed. But he managed fo artfully, that the king always fancied he took his own courfe, when he only followed the fuggestions of his minister. Wolfey had great talents for a perfon of his birth, but he had alfo great failings. He was exceffively revengeful, greedy of poffessions and honours, and intolerably proud. He no fooner faw himfelf fixed in his mafter's favour, but he fought means to remove from court all those that gave him any jealoufy by the king's efteem for them. Richard Fox, bifhop of Hall. Winchefter, the dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, who had Stow. been most in favour, received fo many mortifications from this imperious prelate, that at length they quitted the court, not to be exposed to his infults. Fox withdrew to his diocese the beginning of this year z. The two dukes quickly fol-lowed 2, and Warham, archbishop of Canterbury, retired alfo at the end of the fame year. These old ministers being thus removed, Wolfey became still more absolute over the king, who had only him to advife with in his most important affairs. The reft of the privy council were all the favourite's creatures. The historians unanimously agree, that Wolfey's intereft was the fole rule of the counfels he gave the king, and as this interest answered his reigning passions, revenge, gree-

H 2

E Upon his going away, he defired this only of the king, that he would not fuffer the fervant to be greater than the master. To which the king anfwered presently, that it should be his care, that those who were his subjects should obey, and not command. Herbert, p. 24.

* The duke of Suffolk had borrowed large fums of money of the king, which he hoped would have been forgiven him; but upon Wolfey's calling those that were indebted to the crown to an account, the duke withdrew from court, Hall, Hollingfh. p. 839.

diness,

II5

116

1515.

Francis I. wants to recover Tournay. Pol. Virg. Herbert. P. Daniel.

Wolicy is a raid of lofing his bithoprick. dinefs, ambition, and pride, the reader must not be furprifed, when he fees him hereafter inducing the king to make fo many falle fteps.

Ever fince Francis I. came to the crown, he had been thinking of recovering Tournay out of the hands of the Englifh. There had even paffed in the beginning of the year, a treaty upon that fubject, but to no purpose, because Henry demanded in exchange of Tournay, fome places in the neighbourhood of Calais b, which Francis did not think proper to grant him . But the greatest difficulty came from Wolfey, who was far from advifing the king his mafter to refign Tournay, because himself would have lost the administration of that bishoprick and the abby of St. Amand, which brought him a great revenue. On the contrary, he had been very urgent with Francis I. to beftow fome good benefice on Lewis Guillard, bilhop of Tournay, that he might fuffer him peaceably to enjoy his administration. Francis had promifed him, but without intending to perform his word. Instead of affifting him to keep the administration, he fecretly perfuaded the bifhop to fue to the pope for his reftoration, and feconded his petition to the utmost of his power. He was of opinion, that when Wolfey ceafed to be adminiftrator, the reftitution of Tournay would become much cafier.

The pope reftores the bishop of Tournay. Herbert.

Whilft Francis was still in France, employed in preparing for his Italian expedition, the pope, yet uncertain of the fuccefs of that enterprife, did not much regard the bifhop's follicitations. But when he faw that prince mafter of Genoa, and entered the Milanele at the head of a powerful army, he readily granted a bull to Guillard, reftoring him to his bishoprick, and even allowed him to make use of the fecular arm to obtain possession. This bull, which facrificed the king of England's and his minister's interest, to those of the French king and the bifhop of Tournay, would feem very ftrange, if the confideration of the time and circumstances did not make the wonder ceafe. Leo X. had given just caufe to Francis, to complain of his conduct, and faw that monarch ready to take poffession again of the Milanefe, and conclude a treaty with the Switzers, in order to fend them back into their own country. It was therefore his interest to appeafe him, by granting a favour he fo earneftly defired.

b The county of Guilnes or Ardres. Herbert, p. 23.

c In May this year, king Henry fent twelve hundred carpenters and mafons, and three hundred labourers, to build a caffle for the defence of Tournay. Stow, p. 497.

Mean

Mean while, Henry was extremely offended at the bull, 1515. which reftored to the bifhoprick of Tournay, a prelate, who refused to fwear fealty to him, and on which the king of Herbert. France, and the bishop of Tournay might proceed, to raife a fedition in the city. He therefore gave orders to his ambaffador at Rome, to expostulate with the pope, and reprefent to him the confequences of his partiality. Leo X. could not help owning it. But at that very time, Francis gaining the battle of Marignano, and preparing to make him feel the effects of his refentment, it was no proper feafon to incense him farther by revoking the bull. This convinced Wolfey, that Francis was the real author of the bifhop's restoration. Mean while, the pope, being embarrassied, chose upon the king of England's opposition, to leave the affair undecided, by referring it to the examination of two cardinals, who, probably, were ordered not to haften the conclusion. In the mean time, Wolfey was uncertain whether he fhould keep the bifhoprick of Tournay. And that was precifely what the king of France wanted, that this uncertainty might induce the felfish minister to find some expedient to make himself amends, after which it was apparent, he would no longer oppose the restitution of Tournay. At the same time, Francis proto preferve his friendship, which was very necessary, by rea miles to help fon of his credit with the king his master, he promised to al- Wolfey a fift him in procuring a cardinal's cap. Wolfey was extremely cardinal. ambitious of that dignity. After the death of cardinal Bam- Herbert. bridge, he was in hopes of fucceeding him in the cardinalate, as well as in the archbishoprick of York. He had even employed to follicit it in his name, cardinal Adrian de Corneto d, the pope's collector in England, under whom Polydore Virgil, ferved as fub-collector. But cardinal Adrian, inftead of Cardinal ferving him as he had promifed, had done him ill offices. Adrian betravs Wolfey being informed of it, was fo incenfed, that on fome wolfey. flight pretence he committed Polydore to the Tower. Then Who takes . he cauled the king to write to the pope with his own hand, revenge, and to define him to openint enother collector in cordinal A dring? fends Polyto defire him to appoint another collector in cardinal Adrian's dore Virgil room. The king's letter was fo ftrong and paffionate, that tothe Tower. the pope thought fit to comply with his request. However, in his brief of advice, he told him, he knew very well his anger against cardinal Adrian, was instilled into him by Wolfey. Mean while, Polydore Virgil continued in the Act. Pub. Tower, till at length cardinal Julius de Medici, and the XIII.p. 515.

d Called by our historians de Castello — bishop of Bath, and the king's orator at Rome.

H 3

117

pope himfelf, interceded for him, by letters of August the 30th, and September the 3d. As this was at the very time that Francis was folliciting a cardinal's cap for Wolfey, Wolfey did not think proper to refuse the pope a thing of fo little confequence. So Polydore came out of the Tower, where he had been about a year. This ill treatment was, doubtlefs, one of the reafons that induced him to remember all the ill qualities of cardinal Wolfey, in his hiftory of England.

Wolfey is made cardinal. Hall. Herbert. - his defign to be revenged upon the king of France. -Pol. Virg. Herbert.

> Walfey treats privately with the emperor. Heibert. Pol. Virg.

Henry reliance with Ferdinand.

Wolfey having at length obtained a cardinal's cap, was transported with joy when he received the news by an exprefs fent by the king of France . But though he was highly obliged to that monarch, his gratitude for the favour, did not He perfifts in equal his refentment for the injury done him, as he supposed, in the affair of Tournay. He refolved therefore, in order to be revenged, to endeavour to fet the king his mafter at variance with Francis, and caufe him to enter into a new league against France. Herein he gratified three of his predominant paffions, his pride, in letting Europe fee that fovereigns themselves offended him not with impunity : his revenge, in creating Francis great troubles; and his own interest, in securing the administration of the bishoprick of Tournay. Indeed, a rupture between the two kings was an effectual means to hinder Guillard's restoration to his fee, This is observed by historians as the principal cause of the alteration we are going to behold in Henry's conduct. Jealoufy and policy may have had fome influence too, but lefs as true caufes, than as motives ufed by Wolfey to inflame the king's mind. Probably, under colour that his honour was concerned, he reprefented to him the neceffity of humbling the pride of the French king, and infinuated, how dangerous it was for England that France fhould grow too powerful. When he had prepared Henry, he privately fent word to the emperor, that it would not be impoffible to difengage the king his mafter from the interefts of France. It may eafily be gueffed, Maximilian received the overture with joy. Befides that, being without aid and allies, he faw himfelf little able to preferve his conquests in Italy, he knew, which way foever he was treated with, he fhould always be furnished with money. Whilft Wolfey was projecting to negotiate with the news his al- emperor, the Spanish ambassador, who had heavily passed fome months at London, was looked upon at court with a > e In September. Hall, fol. 57. riaci in termis. Rymer's Fæd. tom, He was cardinal by the title of fanctie XIII. p. 529, 530. ezcilize trans Tiberim; or, fancti ci-

> > more

more favourable eye. Nay, a treaty was begun with him about renewing the alliance between England and Spain, about renewing the alliance between England and opever Act. Pub. which being ended the 19th of October, contained however Act. Pub. XIII.p.520 only a confirmation of the antient treaties of amity.

Mean while, the emperor, willing to improve the prefent Guicciard. opportunity, fent to the king a Milanefe ambaffador, to defire Embaffy of aid in the name of Francefeo Sforga, who was in Germany Francis aid in the name of Francesco Sforza, who was in Germany, Sforza to and had affumed the title of duke of Milan, ever fince Henry. Maximilian his brother had refigned his right to the king of Herbert. France. Though Wolfey had taken care to difpofe Henry Pol. Virg. to a rupture with France, he was not, it feems, fully determined. Francesco Sforza's request, or rather the emperor's, feemed to him fo important, that he defired to have the opinions of the bifhop of Winchefter, and the dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, who to that intent were fent for to court. The Henry calls council being met to debate upon the affair, cardinal Wolfey agreatcoun-cil upon it. speaking first, made a long speech full of refentment against Pol. Virg. France, labouring to demonstrate how much it was for the Herbert. intereft of England to oppose her growing power f. The bishop of Durham and all the new counfellors strenuously fupported the cardinal's opinion. But the old ones endeavoured to diffuade the king from breaking the peace lately concluded with France, fince the new king had given him no caufe, and advised him rather to turn him arms against Scotland. Henry, who was already prepoffeffed, took a Henry remiddle way, infinuated, doubtlefs, by his minifter : and folves to aid the emperor that was, privately to affift the emperor and Francesco privately. Sforza ^g. Whereupon, he fent orders to Pace ^h, his am- Pol. Virg. baffador to Maximilian, to treat with them, and, to pro- Stow. mote the treaty, returned him large fums of money i, Thus was he gradually engaged, without forefeeing that thefe. fectet proceedings must necessiarily end in an open war, as Wolfey defired.

f He likewife alledged, that Francis had broken the treaty by favouring Richard de la Pole, brother of the late duke of Suffolk, a fugitive and traitor; in affifting those Scots which opposed his fifter queen Margaret. Befides that, Francis with-held fome goods and jewels of queen Mary. Laftly, he faid, France might be hindered from growing more powerful, without effusion of English blood, only by privately affifting Maximilian. Herbert, p. 24. Pol. Virg.

g The lord Herbert fays, the king, after the debate was over, being in-clined to the cardinal, faid, he would hinder the defigns of Francis without coming yet to an open rupture, p. 25.

h Late fervant to cardinal Bambridge, who wrote the letter mention . ed before, concerning Silvester's having a hand in poifoning his mafter.

i They were put into the hands of fome Genoa merchants, who breaking, a great part of the money was lost. Hall, tol. 59.

H 4

There

1515.

-528.

Hollingfh.

1515: Milan's promife to Wolfey. Act. Pub. Herbert,

The emperor's embalfy to Henry. Hall. Stow.

Parliament meets. Herbert.

The clergy refuse the pope a fubfidy. Hall.

Cardinal Wolfey's pride. Herbert. Hall. Pol. Virg.

There is in the collection of the publick acts, a paper, fhewing that the cardinal did not forget himfelf in his nego-The duke of tiations. It is a promife from the duke of Milan's fecretary, who, by virtue of an express power from the duke his malter, engaged to pay the cardinal a yearly penfion of ten thoufand ducats, to commence from the day of his master's re-XIII.p. 525. ftoration. It is true, this paper being neither dated nor figned, may be confidered only as a draught of the contract;

> but it is however a proof of the cardinal's felfish temper. The emperor no fooner heard that Henry was inclined to affift him against France, than he dispatched to England, Matthew Skinner, cardinal of Sion, to negotiate a league This is the fame prelate, who, a little before, with him. had encouraged the Switzers to give battle to Francis I.

> The parliament met again the 12th of November. But as it was not yet time to lay before the houfes the king's refolution with regard to France, there was no mention of war, or any foreign affair. The clergy in a fynod held at the fame time, returned an answer to the pope concerning his demand of an extraordinary fubfidy, on pretence of an apparent war with the Turks. They alledged, that they were fo exhaufted by the late war with France,' undertaken at the instance of Julius II. for the defence of the church, that they were not in condition to grant a new fubfidy : that befides, by a decree of the council of Conftance, the pope could lay no impofition on the clergy without the confent of a general council.

> Whilft the English were thus endeavouring to screen themselves from the oppressions of the court of Rome, they beheld one rifing in their own body, like a new pope, whom they forefaw, it would be more difficult to refift than him at Rome, because he was supported by the king: I mean Wolfey. Since that prelate was promoted to the cardinalate, he was grown more vain, proud, and imperious than ever. He never stirred without a prince's retinue, always attended by a crowd of domefticks, caufing the cardinal's hat to be carried before him like a fort of trophy, and to be placed on the altar when he went to the king's chapel k. He was the first clergyman in England that wore filk in his k He is faid by Cavendish, to keep eight hundred fervants, among whom were nine or ten lords, fifteen knights, and forty fquires. The hat was borne by fome principal perfon before him on a great height. He had befides, his ferjeant at arms and mace, and two gentlemen, carrying two pillars of filver, befides his crofs bearer. Herbert, p. 24. Pol. Virg. See Stow, p. 501. Burnet's Ref. tom. III. p. 21.

vestments,

120

vestments, and used gold in his faddles. In a word, he devifed all forts of ways to diftinguish himfelf. Every one took fuch offence at his pride, that it was inceffantly talked of with indignation. But no man durft open his mouth before the king, fince the old bifhop of Winchefter for only glancing upon it, was fo ill received, that fhortly after he withdrew to his diocefe. The archbishop of Canterbury was no less offended than the rest, to see the archbishop of York affect thus fo great a diffinction. But what gave him most offence was, to fee the crofs of York carried before the cardinal, though he was in the province of Canterbury. I have spoken elsewhere of this contest between the two archbishops, which after having caused violent quarrels, could not be decided but by the king's express commands to the archbishops of York, not to have the cross carried before them in the other province. But Wolfey, who thought himfelf much above his predeceffors, prepared to revive the contest in contempt of these prohibitions. Warham, who was of a peaceable temper, eafily perceived, that though he fhould attempt to hinder it, he fhould not fucceed, becaufe Wolfey had an absolute fway over the king. So, not to have continually this object before his eyes, he defired the king's leave to refign the chancellorship, and retire to his palace. His He is made request was immediately granted, and the fame day the king lord changave the feals to cardinal Wolfey. In all appearance, he Act. Pub. had created Warham fo many mortifications only to oblige XIII.p. 529. him to quit his office, with which he defired to be invefted Dec. 22. The king himfelf. To support the splendour of his dignity with more loads him flate than any other before him, the king loaded him every withfavours. day with fresh favours, prebends, wardthips, and the like, P. 507, 530. which continually increased his revenues. Befides the arch-Herbert. bishoprick of York and the chancellorship, he had in farm upon eafy terms the bifhopricks of Bath, Worcefter, and Hereford¹, held by Italians refiding at Rome. But this was not fufficient to fatisfy him. I must now, before I close the year 1515, briefly mention the affairs of Scotland, the knowledge whereof is requifite for the better understanding the events related hereafter.

1 The bishopricks of Bath, Worcefter, and Hereford, the incumbents whereof, Adrian de Corneto, Silvester Gigles, &c. being flrangers, who had been fent here upon legations, king Henry VII. a frugal prince, chofe rather to reward them upon their return with preferments that coft him nothing, than to impair his treasure by making them prefents in money. And now living abroad, to fave the charge of agents, and trouble of making returns by them, were willing to let the cardinal have the revenues at eafy rates, with the difpofal of the ecclefiaftical preferments annexed to them.

John

121 1515.

. _ _ _ _

Affairs of, Scotland. Buchanan. Herbert. Pol, Virg.

Act. Pub, July 3.

Buchanan.

John duke of Albany, who had been declared regent in 1513, arrived not in Scotland till May 1515. He found the kingdom full of factions and divisions, which made him fenfible, the administration committed to him would prove very troublesome. But what gave him most uneafiness was, that the king of England was but too much concerned in what paffed in Scotland, and fomented these diffensions to the utmost of his power. Under colour that Scotland had been fometime without a regent, Henry VIII, as uncle of the young king, had taken the title of protector of Scotland, and by virtue thereof his amballadors at Rome demanded of the pope the ecclefiaftical preferments of that kingdom, which he bestowed on his creatures. But as soon as the duke of XIII.p.513. Albany was arrived, he writ to to the pope in the young king's name, fharply complaining of the king of England's incroachments, and the court of Rome's condescension. He even threatened the pope in his letter not to apply to him for the future upon any account whatfoever, if this grievance were not fpeedily redreffed m.

The duke of Albany, though of Scotch extraction, was a ftranger to Scotland n, from whence the duke his father had retired in 1483. As he defired in the beginning of his regency to be informed of the state of the kingdom, he unhappily applied to Hepburne bishop of Murray, a hot and revengeful man, who took this occasion to be revenged on his enemies. The bifhop, being prior of St. Andrew's, had been elected archbishop of that church in the beginning of the prefent reign. But he was forced to refign the archbishoprick to Forman bishop of Murray, who was armed with the pope's bull. However, Forman would never have ventured to use the bull, had he not been supported by Alexander Hume a potent lord before-mentioned. By his credit and authority, Forman was installed in St. Andrews, having refigned the bishoprick of Murray to Hepburne, and promifed to pay him a certain penfion, Hepburne finding he had a fair opportunity to be revenged, gave the regent fuch a character of Hume, that when he came to court he was looked upon with a very ill eye. Hume being naturally very proud and haughty, relolving to let the regent fee no man fhould flight him with impunity, went over to the queen m He also writ to the king of France, defiring to be included in the treaty concluded at London, April 5, 1515. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 508, 511.

5

1.

n He was born in the time of his father's banifhment, and fuch a ftranger, that he could not fpeak the country language. Herbert, p. 26.

dowager,

dowager, and perfuading her that the king her fon was in 1515. danger, advised her to carry him into England. The re- gent hearing of this plot, fuddenly went to Sterling caffle and fecured the young king's perfon. But to hinder his enemies from putting an ill construction on this action, he renewed his oath of allegiance to the king, and committed the care of his education to three perfons of great credit.

Alexander Hume and his brother William feeing their Hall. plot was difcovered, fled immediately into England, and Stow. were quickly followed by the queen and her fpouse the earl Act. Pub. of Angus. Whereupon, the regent fent ambaffadors to Henry XIII.p. 531. to justify his conduct, and at the fame time fo artfully treated with the fugitives, that he prevailed with them to return into Scotland. But the queen being big with child was forced to ftay at Harbottle caftle in Northumberland, where fhe was delivered ° of a daughter called Margaret P. The fequel of this affair shall be related in another place.

The death of king Ferdinand 9 in February 1516, broke 1516. the measures taken by cardinal Wolfey to engage all Europe in a war with France. Thus, notwithstanding the cardinal's Ferdinand king of projects, Henry was forced to remain in peace, because the Arragon's interests of the rest of the princes were not agreeable to his, death. or rather to the passions of his minister. But though Europe Herbert. was peaceable for fome time, it will be however necessary to relate in each year of this peace, the fituation of the affairs of the principal flates, in order to fhew the occafion of the following wars.

Nothing remarkable paffed in England in the beginning of Birth of the year 1516, except the birth of a princels, whom the Mary, Henry's queen brought into the world the eighteenth of February, daughter. and called Mary '. Cardinal Wolfey, commonly called the Hall. cardinal of York, ever mindful of what could procure him Stow. Hollingfh, any advantage, caufed those who had managed the king's money to be called to a ftrict account. The most part however were fpared. But those were severely punished who had not the address to make the minister their friend ".

After

9 October 7.

P Her hufband, the earl of Angus, left her, and returned into Scotland. She staid about a year in England.

Hall, fol. 58. 9 In the fixty third year of his age. He left the file of catholick to his fucceffors. Though he had vaft poffeffions, was much inriched from the Indies, prosperous in almost all his attempts, and of a frugal disposition, yet there was hardly found in his coffers money enough to discharge his interring, though not very fumptuous. Herbert, p. 26. r She was born at Greenwich 1515-16.

s He fo feverely punifhed perjury, that in his time it was little practifed : he alfo called to account perfons guilty of Charles of nand. Mayern. Mezerai. Affairs of Spain.

After Ferdinand's decease, the kingdom of Arragon camo of course to Joanna his eldest daughter, already queen of Castile. But that princess was incapable of governing her Austria foc- dominions by reafon of her defect of understanding, which had obliged the king her father to keep her confined. So the administration of these two kingdoms with all their dependencies could not be difputed with Charles of Austria, Joanna's eldeft fon, and fovereign of the Low Countries. But as that prince lived in Flanders, Ferdinand had left by his will the regency of Arragon to Alphonfo his natural fon bishop of Saragossa, and that of Castile to cardinal Ximenes, till Charles fhould come himfelf and affume the government. Mean while, when Ximenes would have taken pofferfion of the regency of Caffile, Adrian Florentio doctor in divinity, who managed the prince of Auftria's affairs in Spain, produced letters patents from his mafter, conftituting him regent of that kingdom. But Ximenes refused to acknowledge him as fuch, pretending that Charles had not power to appoint a regent before he was received for governor. The contest was however adjusted by this expedient, that the orders fhould be figned by both. But the cardinal left the doctor the bare name of regent only, and difcharged all the functions himfelf. Mean while, Charles took the title of king of Castile, with the confent of the states of that realm. But the Arragonians, more jealous of their privileges than the Caffilians, refused to give him the title of king of Arragon, whilst his mother Jeanna was alive. Nay, there was a party in the kingdom who maintained, that Joanna herfelf could not pretend to the crown of Arragon, becaufe the daughters were excluded by the laws of the realm, and therefore Charles could not derive from his mother a right fhe never had. But others affirmed, that the exclusion of the females extended not to their male heirs. This was much the fame cafe as happened formerly in France, in the difpute between Edward III. and Philip of Valois. I fhall enter no farther into the affairs of Spain. What I have faid is fufficient to fhow the neceffity Charles was under of going thither, and how dangerous it would have been for him to engage in a war against France, in the beginning of fo unfettled a reign. Accordingly, he neglected nothing to renew the treaties of peace and alliance as well with France as > of riots, vexing, oppreffion, and the like; and erected four under courts to hear complaints by bill of poer people : whereof the first was kept in Whitehall; the fecond before dr. Stokefly, the king's almoner; the third in the lord treasurer's chamber; and the fourth at the rolls. Hall, tol. 59. Hollingshead, p. 838.

England,

England, but with liberty to take other measures when his 1516. affairs fhould be in another fituation. Just before the king of Arragon's death, he had as fovereign of the Low Coun- Act. Pub. tries renewed the alliance with England, by a new treaty -545. concluded at Bruffels the 24th of February this year t. A- p. 545. bout a month after, Henry, who was contriving to form a league against France, ordered his ambassador to treat with Charles upon that head. But Ferdinand's death fo changed the face of affairs, that Henry was forced to be fatisfied with a bare defensive league, which I shall prefently mention, having first related the fuccess of an expedition made by the emperor into Italy.

It was not without reason that Maximilian had readily em- The empebraced the opportunity offered him by cardinal Wolfey of ror's expedimaking war upon France. There was no more likelihood Milan, of his being able to keep his conquests in the state of Venice, Guicciard, fince Francis I. was become mafter of the Milanefe, and had Mezerai. joined forces with the Venetians. Befides, he could expect Herbert. no farther affiftance from the pope, who had lately agreed with Francis. As for the Spanish army which was retired to Naples, it was not easy to cause them to return, fince they were neceffarily to march through the ecclefiaftical flate. On the other hand, king Ferdinand's death had changed the posture of affairs, and quite destroyed the emperor's hopes. So far was the new king of Caffile from having any thoughts of a war with France, that it highly concerned him to keep peace with that kingdom, in order to have time to fettle his affairs in Spain. Thus the emperor, contrary to his usual method, was forced to act alone during this year, in the expectation of fo embroiling affairs, that other potentates fhould at length be conftrained to join with him. He had already received fome of the king of England's money, and cardinal Wolfey put him in hopes of fill larger fums. With this aid, he affembled an army of about twenty thousand men, Germans and Switzers, and in march entered the state of Venice, whilst the Venetians, assisted by a body of French troops commanded by Lautrec, were befieging Brescia. Upon his approach, the French and Venetians raifed the fiege, and after making a flow of oppofing his paffages of the rivers, retired to Milan to avoid a battle. Thus the emperor approached Milan without much difficulty.

t The English commissioners were doctors of law. Rymer, tom. XIII. Cuthbert Tunftall, and William Knyght, p. 533.

Pol. Virg.

125

The

The French were in fo great confernation that they were like to abandon both the city and duchy, and retire into France. If the emperor had made all the hafte he could, he would doubtlefs have forced them to execute that refolution. But having fpent two or three days to no purpofe, by the time he came before Milan the French had received news, that ten thousand Switzers of the Cantons in alliance with France were coming to their affiftance, and were within a day's march.

The arrival of the ten thousand Switzers at Milan threw both fides into an equal confternation. The French, who confidered these troops as a fure aid, were struck with aftonishment when they heard that they absolutely refused to fight against the Switzers in the emperor's army. These, on their part, demanded their pay with such boldness, that Maximilian was assisted their pay with such boldness, that Maximilian was assisted their pay with such boldness, that money for them, and was apprehensive the French had but too much to corrupt them. So, when it was least expected, he fuddenly retired, after which, having no money to pay them, the army disbanded of themselves.

The emperor makes as if he would refign the empire to Henry. Herbert.

Having thus miffed his aim, the emperor was forced upon new trials to engage the pope, the king of England, the young king of Castile his grandfon, in a league against France. But this project was not eafy to be executed. The pope had his private views, which fuffered him not to break openly with Francis. Charles's council were better advifed than to agree that their mafter fhould engage to gratify his grandfather's paffion at a time when he was neceffarily obliged to go into Spain, and take pofferfion of his kingdoms. Thus the emperor's whole refuge lay in the affiftance he could expect from England. But as there was no likelihood, that Henry would undertake a war of which he was to bear all the expence, Maximilian bethought himfelf of a device to preferve his good disposition towards him, or at least to draw money from him, and that was, to declare to Robert Wingfield the English ambassador at his court, that he was tired with the burden of the empire, and having a particular efteem for the king his master, intended to refign it to him. For that purpose, he charged him to write to the king, that if he would come to the Triers, he would call a diet and fettle that grand affair, after which, he offered to wait upon him to Rome, to fee him receive the imperial crown. Moreover, he put him in hopes, he would refign to him his right to the duchy of Milan, and affift him to

to conquer it. Henry eafily perceived Maximilian's aim in making fuch an offer, and therefore writ to his ambaffador to thank the emperor for his good intention, defiring him to defer the execution of the project to a more convenient feafon, when the French should be expelled out of Italy. Mean while, in return for his good will, he fent him fome money, exculing the former defect of payment, with laying the blame on a Genoa banker ".

Whilft the emperor was endeavouring to imbroil the Francis L. French affairs, Francis was forming new projects. He had forms the good reafon to be pleafed with his glorious campaign, which invading in a fhort time had regained him the duchy of Milan. Naples, but Mean while, Ferdinand's death infpiring him with fresh does not do hopes, he formed the defign of feizing the kingdom of Na- Mezerai. ples, imagining, the new king of Spain would be unable to Guicciard, defend it, before he was thoroughly fettled in his kingdoms. Befides, he believed he had fo attached the pope to his interefts by the treaty of Bologna, that he did not doubt to find in him all the affiftance neceffary to his undertaking, looking upon him as his beft friend. But he did not know Leo X. That pontiff did by no means defire, the French should become more powerful in Italy, and if he testified to the king that he was in his interefts, it was only to prevent his oppofing the projects he had himfelf formed in favour of his own house. The emperor's invalion of the Milanese this year interrupted the execution of Francis's defign upon Naples, and what afterwards happened, caufed him to lay afide all thoughts of it. However, his defire to conquer that kingdom occasioned a defensive league against him towards the end of the year, as will be related after a word or two more of the Italian affairs.

Leo X. was no fooner reconciled with Francis I. than he The pope deprived upon a frivolous pretence the duke of Urbino of his difpoficities duchy, and invefted Lorenzo de Medici, who affumed from Urbino, thenceforward the title of duke of Urbino, and the disposseffed Cimarelli. duke retired to Mantua. Guicciard.

It was in order to accomplifh this defign, that the pope He enderhad flattered Francis with the hopes of affifting him in the vours to conquest of Naples. But after he was become master of drive the Urbino by that monarch's connivance, inftead of thanking of Italy. him for it, he thought only how to drive the French out of the duchy of Milan. To that end, he held fecret intelli-

" The empire was then fo bare of named Pochi Denari, I. e. Few Pence, money, that Maximilian was nick Herbert, p. 25.

gence

in vain to gain him.

Treaty of Noyon between Francis and Charles. Mezerai. Herbert. Du Bellai. Guicciard.

- king of Spain, and used his utmost endeavours, by the help of his emiffaries, to perfuade the Switzers to break their alliance with France. Though he acted with all poffible precaution, he could not treat fo privately but that his fecret practices came to the king's knowledge, who pretended how-Francis tries ever to be ignorant of them. On the contrary, he did all that lay in his power to gain the pope in reality to his intereft, otherwife he was fenfible his attempt upon Naples would never fucceed. Leo X. defired nothing more than to amufe him, whilft he was fecretly acting against him. But at length, Francis perceiving his infincerity, dropped all thoughts of the conquest of Naples, and resolved to treat with the king of Spain, who in the prefent fituation of his affairs, could not but wifh to live in a good understanding with him. Thus the two kings being equally inclined to a peace, fent their plenipotentiaries to Noyon to conclude it. The treaty was figned the 26th of August, the substance whereof was, That Charles should espouse Louisa, Francis's daughter, then about a year old. That he fhould have with her the king of France's pretensions to the kingdom of Naples, and till the marriage fhould be confummated, he " fhould give for the young princefs's maintenance a hundred thousand crowns a year. That within fix months he fhould refign the kingdom of Navarre to Henry d'Albret fon of John d'Albret, and Catherine, king and queen of Navarre, who were dispossefied by Ferdinand, and in cafe Charles fhould not perform this article, Francis should be allowed to affift the king of Navarre. Laftly, That the emperor should reftore Verona to the Venetians, who in return fhould pay him two hundred thousand crowns, and give him a full discharge for the sum of three hundred thousand crowns lent him by king Lewis XII. to maintain the war against Venice. It is very visible, that in a treaty to advantageous to France, Charles meant only to gain time, by granting him whatever he could defire, for fear of being hindered from going to take possession of his kingdoms. Accordingly, the treaty was afterwards very ill observed.

Interefts of the princes.

The peace of Novon was directly contrary to the defigns of the pope, the emperor and the king of England. The pope was extremely defirous the French should be expelled out of Italy. Maximilian was wholly intent upon raifing enemies to Francis, to hinder his affifting the Ve-w That is Charles.

128 1516.

netians.

netians. He faw, he must resolve either to ratify the treaty of Noyon, and confequently reftore Verona, or defend his conquest without the affistance of any ally. To avoid both these extremes, he tried all possible ways to embroil affairs and kindle a new war which might occasion a league against France. He hoped thereby to be able to reject without danger the treaty of Noyon, which he believed very prejudicial to his interefts. It is true, the reflitution of Verona would be worth to him five hundred thousand crowns. But out of that fum were deducted the three hundred thousand, he owed the king of France, but never intended to pay him. So for the fum of two hundred thousand crowns, he was bound to reftore Verona, that is to fay, he was to be fhut out of Italy, the only thing that made him confiderable in the prefent fituation of the affairs of Europe. Henry VIII. was no lefs defirous of a war with France, being prompted thereto by cardinal Wolfey, or by his jealoufy of Francis. But it was not the fame with the archduke, to whom a peace for fome time was very advantageous.

This was the fubject of the feveral negotiations, fet on Negotiations foot from the conclusion of the treaty of Noyon to the end against France, of October. The chief aim of the pope, the emperor, and Act, Pub. the king of England, was to difengage the eight Swifs Can- XIII.p. 547. tons in alliance with France, from the interest of that crown, that their troops might ferve to invade the Milanefe. Mean which end while, they were labouring to form a league, wherein they only in a depaffionately defired to engage the new king of Spain. But league, all they could obtain was, his confent to a defensive league, Ib. p. 556. in cafe Francis attacked any of the confederates. Leo X. according to his ufual cuftom, would not openly declare himself, but intimated, he would freely join in the league when concluded, if a place was left for him. As to the Switzers, it was refolved to include them, though they defired it not, upon the hopes of engaging them by means of tome of their nation, who had been gained.

This league was therefore concluded at London the Articles of 29th of October, about two months after the treaty of the league of London, Noyon. It ran, that the emperor, the kings of England Ibid. and Spain, engaged to defend one another against any prince that should attack one of the three, and the number of troops, each was to find, was fettled *. That all princes, potentates, republicks, and ftates, which defired to enter into the league, fhould be admitted : that as the confederates had reason to hope the pope would be willing to be ~ admitted, they declared him head of the league. Finally, that all the Swifs Cantons fhould be deemed included in the league, provided they ratified it, and to that end the penfions, which should be agreed upon with them, should be affigned them. By a private article, figned two days after, it was agreed what each of the allies was to pay towards the penfions, which fhould be distributed to the Switzers, as well to the publick as to private perfons y, (which are the very words) in order to induce them to come into the league. This fnews there was no certainty of gaining them, and that the chief reliance was upon the cabals of fome private perfons of their nation.

I Each of them was to find, upon twenty thousand foot, Rymer, tom, occasion, five thousand horse, and - XIII, p. 558, I into

VOL. VI.

129

To this league, fo inconfiderable in itfelf, tended all the Theemperor makes peace motions of the pope, the emperor, and the king of Engwith Venice, land, during the courfe of this year. The emperor had been in hopes of fomething more; and though by the treaty the allies were, in fome measure, bound to affist him, if the king of France continued to aid the Venetians, he foon dif-relifhed a league which procured him no money. Before the year was expired, he accepted and ratified the treaty of Noyon. At the fame time, he concluded with the Venetians a truce for fome months, and with one confent they put the reft of their differences to arbitration. The emperor's refolution entirely changed the face of affairs, as will be seen the next year. We find in the collection of the XIII.p.570. publick acts, that prefently after the league was figned, Henry fent Richard Pace to the Switzers, to perfuade them to come into the league; but it was to no purpofe. On the contrary, the emperor refolving to make peace with the Venetians, agreed, that the five Cantons who had refused to join with France should come into the treaty made by the other eight with that crown.

Act Pub.

Affairs of Scotland.

Ib. p. 549, 566.

Before I end the occurrences of the year 1516, it will be neceffary briefly to mention what paffed in Scotland. Henry having formed great projects against France, and knowing how much the duke of Albany had at heart the good of that kingdom, refolved to compel the Scots to remove him from the regency. To that purpofe, he defired them to fend ambafladors, to whom he might impart certain matters advantageous to both kingdoms. This negotiation tended only to prefs the great men of Scotland

.y ---- In publico ac privato & particulari-Ibid. p. 569.

130 1516.

p. 569.

to expel the duke of Albany. He even writ to the par- 1516. liament of Scotland, that the best way to preferve peace between the two nations, was to fend back the regent into Henry tries France, under colour that it was dangerous to truft the duke of Alprefumptive heir to the crown, with the guardianship of the bany reyoung king; intimating withal, that in cafe of refufal, he moved. should be obliged to take care himself by proper methods, 1b. p. 550. of the fafety of the king his nephew. He allo gave to underftand, that he claimed the regency as uncle to the young king. But the parliament returned fuch an answer, as fully Ib. p. 550." convinced him, the Scots were by no means inclined to comply with his will ².

Whether Hume was concerned in the king of England's Hume's proceedings, or was only fuspected, the parliament fum-rebellion. moned him to come and answer to the accusations against him. Hume not thinking fit to appear, was condemned for default. He looked upon the fentence as unjuft, and in revenge committed hostilities upon fome of his enemies. Whereupon the parliament granted to the viceroy, a levy of ten thousand men to chastisfe the rebel. But his friends advising him to submit, he cast himself upon the regent's mercy, who fent him to Edinburgh, and committed him to the cuftody of James Hamilton a his brother-in-law. Shortly after, Hume perfuaded the lord Hamilton to escape with him, and claim the regency, as fon of James the third's fifter b, and confequently as nearly related to the king as the duke of Albany. He faid, if the duke could alledge, he was descended from the male line, it might be objected, he was fon of a fugitive, born out of the kingdom, and hardly able to fpeak the country language. The regent hearing of their flight and contrivance, marched against Hamilton castle and took it in a few days. Then Hume perceiving it was time to throw off the mafk, raifed troops, and taking Dunbar, utterly destroyed the town.

z They told him, " The hall three " eftatis of the realme, had electit and " nemmit, with ane confent, the duc " of Albany protector to their fouve-" rane lord the king and his realme; " quhilkis ordinans and electionn was " affermit and approbate in parliament " nevir impugnit be person. - And " this ordinains of parliament was " conforme to imperiall, cannon, and " their awin civile lawis : be quhilkis " lawis is decernit that the nerreft and " lauthful perfonage of the agnatis " fide fall have the sure, tutoury, and a Earl of Arran. Buchanan. He was created fo August 10, 1503.

" governance, &c." See Rymer, tom, XIII. p. 550, 551.

^b His mother was Mary, daughter of James II. wife first of Thomas Boyd, earl of Arran, but divorced from him, and married next, in 1474, to James Hamilton, a favourite, from whom the dukes of Hamilton are defcended. Others fay, that he married her after Boyd's death. See Anderfon's Tab,

Mean

131

I 2.

-----Truce between England and Scotland. Act. Pub. XIII:p. 574, 578.

132

1516.

prolonged. P. 577.

of Lateran fets about reforming

p. 552. July 10.

1517.

rona to the Venetians, five years. Guicciard.

Mean while, the ambaffadors fent by the regent into England in May, had concluded a truce the first of June. But as Henry had granted the truce only to promote the execution of his defigns, he appeared little inclined to obferve it, after receiving the forementioned answer. But to avoid a war which must have been fatal to Scotland, the regent fent him by Francis de la Fayette, certain articles defiring his approbation, for which he offered to come in perfon and pay him his refpects. At that time the affairs of the reft of Europe having, as hath been faid, taken a new turn, Henry agreed to prolong the truce to the end of the year 1517.

These are the most confiderable events which passed in The council the feveral states of Europe during the year 1516. I shall only add a word concerning the council of Lateran, which still continued its fessions without having much to do. As thecalendar, the council meddled neither with the reformation of the church, though they feemed to be called for that very purpole, nor with the extirpation of herely, they refolved, in order to keep themfelves employed, to reform the calendar, which was become very faulty. To that end, the pope caufing memorandums to be drawn, undertook to write to all the chriftian princes, inviting them to fend their beft aftronomers to Rome, or at least to order them to examine what had been proposed upon that subject. We find in the collection of the publick acts, the brief addressed to Henry VIII. where the pope fays he had adjourned the next feffion to December to give the mathematicians time to fend in their opinions.,

The emperor having ratified the treaty of Noyon, as far as it concerned him, reftored Verona to the Venetians, the The emperor 15th of January 1517, having received two hundred thoureftores Ve- fand crowns, and an acquittance for what he owed the king of France. Moreover, to give the arbitrators time and prolongs to adjust the differences he still had with Venice, he agreed the truce for that the truce should be prolonged for five years, but on condition that, during the truce, the Venetians should pay him yearly twenty thousand crowns. It was almost imposfible to make a treaty with him, and money not accrue to him from it. Thus ended at length a war which may be deemed a confequence of the league of Cambray. The Venetians were engaged in it from the beginning to the end, and expended no lefs than five millions of ducats of the publick treasure, besides the infinite damages suftained by the fubjects.

Maximilian,

Maximilian having thus defifted from his defigns upon Italy, 1517. went into the Low Countries to fee his grandfon Charles before he departed for Spain. During his flay there, he He concludes concluded with him and the king of France a league against with Francis and Charles the Turks, wherein a place was referved for the king of Eng- a league land. The pope and the council of Lateran earnestly pref- against the fed all the princes of Chriftendom to join in the league, on Turks. pretence of the progress the Turks were making in Egypt Leo X. exagainst the Mamalucks , after which, he pretended, their cites the defign was to attack the chriftians. But what followed chriftian fhewed the pope's fole view was to heap up money for his war upon own use, and to inrich his family. the Turks.

Mean while, Charles the new king of Spain thought only Aft. Pub. of speedily going to take posseful of his kingdoms. He had Jan. just made with Francis I. a peace fo advantageous to France, Guicciard, that he did not fear that prince would break it, becaufe it would not be for his intereft. So, when the English ambaf- Charles fador prefied him to ratify the London league, he deferred it ratifies the league of fome time on divers pretences, becaufe deeming it needlefs, London. he was afraid of offending the king of France. He rati-Act. Pub. he was atraid of offending the king of Flance. He hat XIII.p.571, fied it however after fome alterations, and at length in XIII.p.571, He arrives August departed for Spain, where his prefence was abfolute- in Spain, ly neceffary. Upon his arrival, he difmiffed cardinal Xime- and difmiffes nes, who died with grief. After that, he fo gave himfelf Ximenes. up to the Flemings, whom he had brought with him, that the Spaniards conceived fuch a jealoufy as carried them afterwards to great extremities.

The pope, as I have obferved, continually amufed Francis The pope with the hopes of a ftrict alliance with him, at the very diffemble time he was raifing him enemies on all fides. Francis was their partly informed of his proceedings, but did not know all. thoughts of So, in expectation of really attaching him in the end to one another. his interests, he omitted nothing he thought capable of gaining him, even feigning to deem him his best friend, c The word mamaluck fignifies in Syriac, a hired foldier. Jovius fays, they were Circaffian flaves, fold by the Tartars, and Podolians, to the merchants, and being trained up at Cairo, in military exercises, were picked out for the Soldan's guard, and preferred to the higheft pofts, who in 1255, re-folved to obtain the kingdom of Egypt for themfelves. The government was elective, and the fon could claim no inheritance but his father's perfonal eftate. Every Mamaluck, whole number in all was about fixteen or eighteen thousand, had a vote in the election, and required a gold ducat of the Soldan, as foon as chofen. There were in all of this race fixteen kings, from the year before mentioned, to the prefent year 1517, when Tonombeius II. their last king, was conquered in the first year of his reign, by Selimus I. Thus Egypt became a province of the Turkish empire, as it fill continues. Heylin, &c. Guicciard,

when

133

La Rovere gets poffeffion of Urbino. Guicciard.

134

1517.

Francis I. aids the pope. Mezerai.

The pope levies a tenth-upon the clergy. Act Pub. June 10. P. 596, 598. La Rovere is driven fromUrbino. Confpiracy against the pope. P. 589. Guicciard.

when he most fuspected him. But as the pope knew in his confcience, he had not deferved Francis's friendship, he could not believe his advances fincere. Mean while, it was for his interest that Francis should publickly appear to be his friend, and therefore he kept very fair with him, and not without cause. In the beginning of the year 1517, la Rovere, who had been difpofielled of the duchy of Urbino, prepared to recover his dominions. When by the truce concluded between the emperor and the Venetians, the Spanish troops in the state of Venice were become useless, la Rovere found means to gain and employ them in his fervice. With thefe fupplies he took Urbino, and carried terror into Tuscany and the ecclesiaftical state. Lorenzo de Medici, the new duke of Urbino, or rather the pope his uncle, being then unable to recover that duchy, he was forced to have recourse to the affistance of the christian princes, under colour that the church was grievoully oppressed, the interests of the house of the Medici being then the fame with those of the church. Francis I. who had the gaining of the pope ever in view, made use of this opportunity to do him a fignal fervice, in fending him a good body of troops, under the command of Lescun brother of Lautrec. This war however lasted seven or eight months, during which the pope never ceased to press all the christian princes to contribute to the charges of a war, which, according to him, ought to have affected all the world. Henry VIII. being follicited like the reft, refused to interpose. But the pope found means to engage his fubjects, by levying a tenth upon the clergy, of which cardinal Wolfey was appointed collector. The War of Urbino ended in a way la Rovere did not XIII.p. 592. expect. The pope bribed the Spaniards in his fervice, who came to an agreement for him, which he was obliged to accept. Thus being once more constrained to relinquish his dominions, he retired to Mantua.

> Whilft the pope was employed in the war of Urbino, he discovered a plot against his person, contrived by the cardinal of Sienna, who had bribed a furgeon to poifon him, The cardinal being absent from Rome when the difcovery was made, the pope, who paffionately defired to have him in his power, fcrupled not to use fraud to compass his ends. He fent him a fafe conduct, and moreover, promifed the Spanish ambassador that he would do him no hurt. The cardinal being fo weak as to come to Rome upon the faith of the fafe conduct, was immediately confined in the caftle of St. Angelo, and afterwards ftrangled in prifon. The Spanifh nish ambassador complained of this breach of faith, but was 1517. told by the pope, a fafe conduct was never reckoned to un extend to high treason, without express mention of the cafe. Some other cardinals accufed or fufpected of being concerned in the plot, were deposed, imprisoned, or feverely fined.

Francis I. never ceafed courting the pope to gain his Marriage of friendship, fearing that by his fecret practices he would re- Lorenzo de Medici with kindle the war, to deprive him of Milan. He imagined the heirefs of to have found at last an infallible means to attach him to Boulogne. his interests, in procuring Lorenzo de Medici a very ad- Guicciard. vantageous marriage, with Magdalen heirefs of the houfe of Boulogne. This propofal was gladly accepted, and Lorenzo repairing to Paris for that purpofe, flood grdfather in the pope's name, to the French dauphin, born the beginning of this year. In acknowledgment for the king's favour to Lorenzo, the pope granted him tenths upon the clergy, under colour of the war to be waged with the Turks. But he took care to affign fifty thousand livres for the charges of the wedding, which was to be folemnized at Paris.

The pretended war Christendom was to undertake against Sale of inthe Turks, feemed to the pope to be a fair opportunity to dulgences on inrich himfelf by the contributions of the chriftians. To that the war end, he granted plenary indulgences to all that would con- with the tribute, and caufed them to be publickly fold at fo mode-Guicciard, rate a price, that a man must have been very careless of his Sleidan, falvation not to purchase them. But it was this that made the pope expect to reap an immense profit, for probably, there would not be a chriftian without them. Mean while, that the money arifing from the fale might be regularly collected, all chriftendom was parted into fo many divisions, and in each were appointed collectors to receive the money. and preachers to extol the benefit of indulgences ^d. But, by d It had been still taught and believed for a good while, that the pope, out of the inexhauftible treasure of the church, arifing from the merits of Chrift, and works of fupererogation of the faints, had a power of distributing indulgences on certain conditions prefcribed by him, to the greatest and most profligate of finners, for a plenary remiffion of fin, (as it is practifed at this day in Portugal, &c.) These induly gences, are fuppofed at first to reach only to relaxation of penances or ecclefastical discipline. Urban II. in the beginning of the XIth century, was the first that granted a full remission of all fins, to those who should take up arms for the recovery of the Holy Land from the Infidels. Which cuftom was kept up by his fucceffors, fome of whom extended the benefit of their indulgences to fuch perfons who being unwilling or unable to go, maintained a foldier in their room. At length these spiritual favours were distributed to those who took the field against the I 4 .enemies by an accident, which at first feemed of no confequence, the archbishop of Mentz, who was commissioned to appoint the preachers in Germany, happened to affign Saxony to the Jacobins, whereas in the former crufades, the Augustines had been employed in that office. The injury done to these last, rouzed their jealoufy. They narrowly examined the behaviour of the preachers as well as collectors, ridiculed them, and afterwards publickly complained of them. At length, Martin Luther, an Augustine fryar and professor in divinity in the new university of Wirtemberg, published some writings against them, not without satirical remarks upon the indulgences themfelves. This boldness drew upon him enemies, who, by their opposition, obliged him by degrees to inquire more carefully into the grounds of those indulgences. In short, he was convinced, they had no foundation in the holy fcriptures. From thenceforward, he used his utmost endeavours to undeceive the publick concerning the hitherto received opinion of the papal power. Hence fprung the reformation which fpread itfelf afterwards through Germany, and feveral other states of Europe.

135

Martin Luther begins to appear. Sleidan.

The pope at first did not much regard Luther's representations. He never imagined that the papal power, which feemed to stand upon unmoveable foundations, could be prejudiced by a fingle friar. So defpifing this inconfiderable opposition, he continued without interruption to fell his indulgences. He every where published, that a powerful efcontinues to fort was going to be made upon the infidels, and exhorted all chriftians to contribute, according to their abilities, towards fo neceffary a war, which would procure them, befides many temporal advantages, deliverance from the pains of purgatory, provided they would qualify themfelves for the indulgences. There was however one thing which very much cooled the zeal of many chriftians for the crufade. It was discovered that the pope had beforehand disposed, for his temporal concerns of the money which was to arife from the fale of the indulgences. For inftance, he had affigned > enemies of holy church, or hereticks. Great fums were raifed by this means, but feldom applied to the ends for which they were intended. Leo X. refolving to follow fo good precedents, opened a general mart for indulgences, the benefit whereof was to extend even to the dead, whole fouls, upon payment of fo much money, were imme diately redeemed out of purgatory. People had likewife the liberty of eating eggs and white meats on fast days, and of choosing their confessor, and the like. Guicciardini fays, that the powers for releating fouls out of purgatory were openly played for in taverns. B. 13.

The pope follicit a crusade.

136

to Magdalen de Medici, his fifter, wife to Francisco Cibo, 1517. natural fon of Innocent VIII. part of the money to be raifed in Germany. Mean while, he continued his follicitations in all the ftates of Europe. He forgot not to write to Henry Act, Pub. VIII. exhorting him to join his forces with those of the other XIII.p. 592. chriftian princes, and to excite him to this good work, by great commendations of his conftant zeal for the defence of the holy fee, and the exaltation of the faith. All thefe en- He demands comiums ended in demanding two hundred thousand ducats money of Henry, for the pretended war against the infidels. But it does not who denies appear, the king complied with his request. The Turks him. were then employed in Egypt and Perfia, and the crufade was founded only upon a bare conjecture that after ending these wars, they would invade Christendom. A man must have wilfully thut his eyes, not to fee, it was but a pretence to fill the pope's coffers. Belides, in the prefent fituation of the affairs of Europe, Henry had no great occasion for the pope.

Mean time, cardinal Wolfcy perceiving, the league of Wolfey is London would come to nothing, becaufe Francis was not dif-the biftoppoled to commence a new war with any of the confederates, rick of dreaded his using this time of peace to move the affair of the Tournay. bishoprick of Tournay. On the other hand, he plainly faw by the time paffed fince that bufinefs had been put into the hands of the commissioners, that he was greatly regarded, as having an absolute fway over the king his master. Indeed, nothing could be expected from the king but through his means, and for that reafon all the princes studiously made their court to him, to gain him to their interests. We find 16. p. 591. in the collection of the publick acts, that Charles, king of Spain, affigned him this year an annual penfion of three thoufand livres, though he had yet received no fervices from him. And therefore it was for those he hoped to receive for the future. Mean while, Wolfey was uneafy about Tournay. As the pope and the king of France regarded him only for the fake of what he could do for them, he was in danger of lofing that regard in cafe they fhould come not to want him. He began therefore privately to intimate to Francis I. that it He begins to would not be impoffible to perfuade Henry to reftore Tournay treat with for a fum which fhould be agreed upon, provided he himfelf bout reftorwas recompensed for the administration of the bishoprick, ing that I shall relate the next year the fuccess of this negotiation. place.

Henry enjoying this year great tranquillity, refolved to fee what the emperor intended with respect to the relignation of the empire, which he had caufed to be mentioned to him. Maximilian

Maximilian being in Flanders with the king of Caffile, his 1517. grandion, Henry fent the bifhop of Winchelter, with doctor Cuthbert Tunstal, to renew the negotiation with him, ac-Negotiation quainting him withal, if he would appoint a convenient place. he would come and confer with him in perfon. The emperor, who had never intended to refign the empire to him, and cettion of the still lefs at that time, very civilly answered, that to fave the king the trouble of croffing the fea, he would come himfelf comes to . and confer with him in England. But when the ambaffadors preffed him upon the affair they were charged with, they found he fought only to evade his own offer. One while he faid, he would refign the empire to Henry, but first would try to obtain of the diet, that himfelf and posterity might preferve the title of king of the Romans. Another while, he talked of making Charles his grandfon emperor, Henry, king of the Romans, Ferdinand, brother to Charles, king of Auftria, and himfelf only marshal of the empire. These variations convinced the ambaffadors, nothing was to be expected from the negotiation, and acquainting the king therewith, he was fatisfied Maximilian had no other defign than to draw money from him.

Infurrection at London. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

The fweat-Hall. Stow.

There was this year an infurrection of the London apprentices against the foreign merchants, wherein fome perfons lost their lives. But it was appealed by the punishment of fome of the feditious, who were hanged in the principal ftreets of the city c.

This fame year the fweating fickness made great ravages ing fickness. in the kingdom, and especially at London. Most of those that were feized with it, died within three hours, and no cure could be found. As this diftemper was peculiar to England, it was called fudor Anglicus, or the English fweat f.

> e The chief author of this infurrection (which began April 21) was one John Lincoln, a broker. He drew up a paper full of complaints against 'the foreign merchants, which he got doctor Bele, a noted preacher, to read in his pulpit on Eafter Tuefday; whereupon the mob affembled, and committed feveral outrages. The reader may fee a full account of this infurrection in Hall, fol. 59-63. Hollingfh. p. 820; &cc.

f This diftemper continued from July till the middle of December. Many knights, gentlemen, and officers of the king's court died thereof, as the lord Clinton, lord Grey of Wilton, and of the common fort of people fo many, as in fome towns it fwept away half, in others a third of the inhabitants. Hall, fol. 63. Herbert, p. 28.----There was also fo great a drought this year, that it did not rain from the beg nning of September, till the May following. And the froft was fo hard in the winter, that horfes and carts could pals over the Thames on the ice between Westminster and Lambeth. Stow, P. 505.

The

138

L

of Henry

with the

emperor about the empire

nothing.

Herbert.

The affairs of Scotland were still in great diforder, by rea- 1517. fon of the factions in the kingdom. Alexander Hume, and L his brother William, after feveral pardons, were at last be- Affairs of headed ^z. After the death of the two brothers, the duke of Buchanan. Albany, hoping Scotland would be in perfect tranquillity, re- Herbert. folved to take a journey to France, promifing to return in few Pol. Virg. months. But being detained there longer than he expected, by accidents mentioned hereafter, the affairs of Scotland fell into great confusion, because of the diffensions of the nobles, which were inflamed by those who defigned to take advantage of them.

Mean while, the pope earneftly pushed the affair of the 1518. pretended war, contriving with the ambaffadors reliding at his court, projects which would have required more zeal than Leo X. fends princes ufually have, as well as more union among them. legates to To execute his defigns, it was necessary to raile immense crusade. fums of money, and that was the fecret intent of the league Guicciard. proposed by the pope, of which he was to be the head and Hollingth. director. To that end, he exhausted, if I may fo fay, the church's treasures, to encourage the faithful to exchange their perifhing riches for everlafting advantages. This affair was carried to far, that he fent legates 'to all the courts, to excite the fovereigns to join their forces together, for the destruction of the infidels. There was not one but what outwardly showed an extreme defire to apply himself to so holy a work, provided he could be fecured from being diffurbed by his neighbours. But that was the thing which rendered the execution of the project very difficult, because they had no confidence in one another. They had no more for the pope himfelf, who, fince the beginning of his pontificate, had but too plainly discovered, that the concerns of religion were not what affected him moft. So, in feeing him act with that zeal, they could not help fuspecting, that the defire of inriching himfelf by the voluntary contributions of chriftians, by the fale of the indulgencies, by the tenths of the clergy, and by the bounties of the fovereigns, was what most fired his zeal. Neverthelefs, not one of them fhowed any averfion to the defign, left he fhould be taxed with not having a due regard for religion. But they gave only words, whereas the pope wanted deeds. Hence the pope's project of an univerfal league had not, as will hereafter be feen, the fuccefs he expected. However, the project, though chimerical, g On the 16th of October, 1516, Herbert, p. 27. The 11th, fays Buchanan, ferved

The project of the crufade is of ufe to the house of Auftria. Mezerai.

ferved for a cloak to many other defigns. The emperor, dcfiring to have one of his grandfons chofen king of the Romans, used the pretence of the imaginary Turkish invasion of Christendom, to show the necessity of continuing the imperial dignity in the houfe of Auftria, there being no other in Germany, able by its own ftrength to withstand their arms. Charles king of Spain made use of the fame pretence for the fame purpole. Belides that, as he wanted fome years of peace, he strenuously infisted upon the project of a general truce, that the christian princes might be free to unite their forces against the Turks. Francis I. plainly faw, by the defensive league made against him, that a pretence was only fought to invade him, and take away the duchy of Milan. So, a general truce could not but be advantageous to him in his prefent circumstances. Besides, he had in view the recovery of Tournay, which could not be accomplifhed but during a peace. Henry VIII. knowing that the pope, the emperor, and the kings of France and Spain, had joined in a league against the Turks, was apprehensive that league covered fome defign against him. For that reason, he would not refuse to enter into the fame engagement, for fear of giving them a pretence. Thus the chief potentates of Europe, being concerned to promote the crufade, or at least not to reject it, the leffer powers were also obliged to follow the torrent. This gave the pope great hopes he fhould at laft effect his defigns. But 'as in truth, not one of the princes thought the thing practicable, the project was still very far from being executed.

Negotiation nay. Herbert. Stow. Pol. Virg.

Whilft Leo X. fed himfelf with thefe hopes, Francis was about Tour- thinking much more feriously of means to recover Tournay, than of the affairs of the crufade. On the other hand, cardinal Wolfey was afraid of lofing the administration of the bishoprick, because he faw no likelihood of fowing discord between France and England, at a time when all the princes of Europe expressed a defire to live in peace. He could not therefore keep the administration, if Guillard, the true bifhop, would take the oath to the king, to which he feemed inclined. This made him embrace the fecret offers of Francis, to make him amends, if he could induce the king his master to reftore that place to France. Francis was very fenfible, that before all things the cardinal was to be fatisfied, not only in order to recover Tournay, but to procure it as cheap as poffible. This was the fubject of a private negotiation between them, before Henry was informed of it. To fucceed, Francis spared neither flatteries nor promises, nor piefents, 140 1518.

OFENGLAND.

prefents. If Polydore Virgil may be credited, these prefents were very confiderable. But however, it was agreed between them, that the cardinal should be recompensed for the loss of the administration, with an annual penfion. That the king of France should give Henry fix hundred thousand crowns for Tournay. But as this fum was a little too large, an expedient, mentioned hereafter, was found to reduce it to a much lefs. Upon these two conditions, the cardinal undertook to obtain his master's confent to the king of France's defires. One of lefs affurance than the cardinal, and not fo fecure of the king's confidence, would doubtlefs, have been greatly embarralled, fince the bufinefs was to convince the king of the contrary, to what hitherto he had been endeavouring to make him believe, namely, that Tournay was no longer neceffary. When Francis I. would have treated of the refti- Pol, Virg. tution of Tournay, Wolfey had reprefented to the king, that both for his own and England's intereft, it was of very great confequence to keep that place, which was moreover a perpetual monument of his victories, whilft it should be in his hands. Now altering his tone, he undertakes to perfuade, and indeed does perfuade him, that the place is of no ufe, and the maintenance of the garrifon far outweighs all the advantages he can receive from thence. That it was better to yield it to the king of France, who earneftly fued for it, and, to obtain it, fcrupled not to condefcend to make prefents to a minister. That nothing could be more honourable for the king, than to fee that monarch make the first advances to procure his friendship, and render it perpetual, by the marriage of the dauphin with the princess Mary, which also he proposed. That therefore the present opportunity should be improved to receive a good fum of money in lieu of Tournay, which being fo remote from Calais, would infallibly be loft upon the first rupture between the two crowns. That hereby the king of France would be obliged to be his friend, and their union would render them umpires of Europe. That this union was the more neceffary, as it was time to think of oppoling the growing power of the house of Austria, who pollefling the empire, Spain, the Low Countries, the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, were infallibly going to render themfelves very formidable to all the fovereigns. The ftrength of these reasons was too manifest for Henry to refist them. All he could think ftrange was, that the cardinal had not fooner proposed them, but till then had rather used arguments, to hinder the restitution of Tournay. But, as it has been 141 1518.

THE HISTORY

142

1518.

Embaffy of France to Henry. Herbert. Hall. Act. Pub. XIII.p.608, 611.

p. 611.

p. 616. p. 610.

Act. Pub.

been remarked, Wolfey had fuch an afcendent over him, that he could perfuade him pro and con as he pleafed h.

Henry having agreed to what the cardinal proposed, the next thing was to treat upon the matter. As foon as Francis I. was informed of it, he fent a folemn embaffy to England, confifting of admiral Bonnivet, Stephen Poncher, bifhop of Paris, and M. de Villeroy, fecretary of ftate 1. For form's fake, fome time must be spent in the negotiation, though the king of France, and the cardinal, had already agreed upon the chief articles, by the mediation of Villeroy, who had been in London ever fince the beginning of July, whereas his collegues arrived not till two months after. The French ambaffadors had full powers to treat of the renewing of friendship between the two kings, of a league with the pope and all christian princes who defired to be included in it, for the p.613-616. defence of religion and the church, of a marriage between the dauphin and the princess Mary, daughter of Henry, of the reftitution of Tournay, St. Amand, and Mortagne, and of an interview of the two kings. Moreover, they brought Francis's letters patents, whereby he promifed to pay to his good friend the cardinal of York, an annual penfion of twelve thousand livres, in confideration of his relinquishing the administration of the bishoprick of Tournay. As the treaties concluded upon these articles were not ready till the beginning of October, I shall briefly mention another affair, tranfacted about the fame time.

The pope was ever intent upon the affairs of the crufade, from whence he hoped to draw great fums. He writ laft year to all chriftian princes, to notify the victory of Selim, emperor of the Turks, over the Mamalucks of Egypt, whole empire he had utterly destroyed. The beginning of this year, XIII.p.603. he cauled the college of cardinals to fend a letter to Henry, reprefenting to him, the danger Chriftendom was in, after the victory by the Ottoman emperor, over the Soldan of Egypt, who, according to the beft advices, was flain in battle. The cardinals exhorted the king to undertake the defence of religion jointly with all the other christian fovereigns, > h Polydore Virgil obferves, how artfully the cardinal managed this affair : he began with making the king a prefent of fome part of what Francis had given him, that he might thereby incline the king to accept of the friendly overtures of the French king. Having thus prepared the way, he used the arguments above mentioned for the refti tution of Tournay. Whereupon the king faid, he faw plainly now, Wolfey would govern both himfelf, and the king of France. Pol. Virg.

i And Francis de Rochecavard. With no lefs than twelve hundred perfons in their train. Septemb. 30. Herbert, p. 31. Hall, fol. 65.

with

with the pope and facred college, who were ready to facrifice 1518. to that end, their own, as well as the church's treasure. The plain meaning of all this was, that the king ought to contribute largely towards the crulade, his country being too remote from Turkey to fend forces thither.

Some time after, the pope fent legates a latere k to feveral Campejus is courts 1, with orders to exhort the fovereigns to accept and fent as lepreferve a five years truce, enjoined by his apoftolick power. to England. They were likewife to use their endeavours to perfuade them Herbert, to unite all their forces, and make war upon the Turk. Act. Pub. Cardinal Laurentius Campejus was appointed for England, 609. and was already departed from Rome in the beginning of May, Hall. to go and execute his commission. But Wolfey deeined it Wolfey gets a very great affront, that the pope had not thought of him himfelf for the legatefhip. So, whilft Campejus was on the road, he legatefhip. he fent a trufty mellenger to Rome, to reprefent to the pope, stow, that by fhowing fo little regard for a cardinal, actually in Hollingth. England, and the king's prime minister, he put it out of his Pol. Virg. power to do him any fervice : that whatever he fhould fay to support what the pope required, would be of no weight, fince he fhould be confidered as one whom the court of Rome durft not truft with the legateship: that it was rather the pope's interest to make use of him to obtain his defires confidering the confidence the king honoured him with, and that, without his affiftance, the prefent affair would be in danger of mifcarrying. Leo X. eafily perceived by this reprefentation that Wolfey must be contented. So by a bull Act. Pub." of the 17th of May, he joined him with Campejus in the XIII.p.606. fame commission m, giving them both an equal authority, knowing (fays he in the bull directed to Wolfey) your great credit with the king, and how eafily you can perfuade or diffuade him. Mean while, Campejus arriving at Boulogne, Wolfey found means to detain him there till he had received the pope's answer. For which reason it was the 29th of July Campejus's before the Italian legate made his entry into London. As entry into London.

143

Hall.

k There are four forts of legates. I. They whom the pope fends to prefide at general councils. 2. The pope's perpetual vicars in countries remote from Rome; thus before the reformation, the archbishop of Canterbury was legatus natus apostolicæ fedis. 3. They who for a certain time, and in certain places, are delegated to convene fynods for reftoring church discipline and other emergencies. 4. The name of legate is given to the pope's extraordinary ambaffadors, to emperors' and kings, who are called legati a latere. . At prefent none but cardinals have this character.

1 To England, France, Spain, and Germany. - Hall, fol. 64.

m At the request of king Henry, and the king of France. Hollingfh. p. 845.

144 1518. L-

Act. Pub.

The legates commission.

he had but a very poor train, Wolfey fent him twelve mules with coffers richly covered. But fome of these coffers happening to fall, during the proceffion, and being overturned and broken, were found to be empty ", to the great fport and laughter of the people, who derided this external pageantry. There is in the collection of the publick acts, a XIII.p. 609. bull of Leo X. with extraordinary powers to the two legates, authorifing them to grant a plenary indulgence to the faithful of both fexes, who fhould be prefent at the mais, which either of the legates fhould celebrate in the prefence of the king and queen, or at least at the benediction, provided they confeffed their fins, or defired to confess, and were penitent.

The legates commission confisted of two points. The first was, to try to obtain of the clergy an aid of money for the war against the Turk. But the clergy withstood all their attempts. The fecond was, to perfuade Henry to join in the projected league with all the christian princes for the defence of religion and the church. The pope's defign was not to undertake a war against the Turk, but only to heap up money on that pretence. Thus the league he was meditating was folely to make the world believe he really intended to war against the infidels. After which, he had a very plaufible excufe to lay impofitions upon all the clergy, and draw money from the fovereigns and their fubjects, to bear the charges of the pretended war. With this league therefore he was to begin, and upon that the legates were commiffioned to treat with the king, who feemed inclined to agree to it, though he might eafily forefee the league would fignify nothing.

Cardinal Adrian depoled.

As cardinal Wolfey's credit increased in England, it became likewife greater at the court of Rome. He had caufed. as was before observed, cardinal Adrian de Corneto to be removed from the office of the pope's collector in England. But this flight punifhment not fufficing to fatisfy his revenge, he had fo ordered it, that the king writ to the pope, defiring him to deprive Adrian of the cardinalate, and of the bifhoprick of Bath and Wells, which had been conferred on him. Leo X. could not help thinking it very ftrange, that the king fhould make fuch a requeft, without alledging any reaton. However, without giving him a politive denial, he n In Cheapfide one of the mules broke loofe from her leader, and overturning her own, and two or three of the other mules carriages; which fell with fuch violence, that feveral of them unlocked, and there fell out of them, old hofe, torn fhoes, pieces of roafied meat, bits of bread, eggs, and fuch vile baggage. Hall, fol. 64.

contented

contented himfelf with faying, he would give him fatisfaction. 1518. at a more proper feafon. In 1517, there was a confpiracy against the pope, wherein cardinal Adrian being concerned was committed to prison. Guicciardini affirms, he was never more heard of, and that it is not known what became of him °. But there is in the collection of the publick acts, a Act. Pub. letter of cardinal Julius de Medici, dated the 5th of July XIII.p.607. 1518, notifying to the king, that in a confiftory held that day, cardinal Adrian was deposed and stript of all his preferments, intimating withal to the king, that it was on his account. But it is more probable, he was punished for his crime against the pope. However, a few days after, the p. 609, 622, pope gave cardinal Wolfey the administration of the bishop- 623. rick of Bath and Wells, fuppofing he wanted it to maintain the dignity of cardinal.

The negotiation of the two cardinals proceeded very flow- Leo X. ly, fince it was not fufficient to incline Henry to the league, withes to make an but the reft of the fovereigns were also to give their confent. offenfive Accordingly, the pope follicited to the utmost of his power league aall the potentates, magnifying the danger to which the gainst the chriftian religion was going to be infallibly exposed. In Turk. fhort, every prince returning him the fame answer, namely, p. 621. that it was neceffary all the fovereigns fhould unite in the affair, he fent a bull to his legates in England, empowering them to conclude between the emperor and the kings of France and Spain a league against the Turk. His intent was, that the league should be offensive, else it would be of no advantage to him, unless the Turk really intended to invade Christendom, which was hitherto thought to be very uncertain. But Leo was too well known for the princes to be thus taken in a fnare which tended only to render the pope master of their own and their people's money. So, pretending zealoufly to enter into his project, they contented themfelves with concluding together a defenfive league for the protection of the pope, the holy fee, and their refpective dominions, against all invaders, and particularly against the emperor of the Turks ^p. The pope was declared head of the league, provided he ratified it within fuch a · Polydore Virgil fays, Adrian bequeathed a magnificent palace in Rome, to the king of England his patron, which was called the English palace, and is now poffeffed by the family of Colonna.

K

fingular in its kind, and an excellent precedent for peace to future ages; and therefore recites it more at large, becaufe (as he fays) it feems to have been the rule by which Henry framed his actions many years after. See p. 31, of the Comp. Hift, vol. II.

P Lord Herbert fays, this treaty is time,

VOL. VI.

1518. time. But, the treaty made no mention of what each of - the allies was to furnish. All which shows, this league according to the intention of the parties, was only to caft a mift before people's eyes, to give the pope fome fatisfaction, and perhaps to frighten the Turks.

This was not what the pope defired. He could have wifhed, The pope all the princes of Christendom had joined together in an offensive league against the Turk, and engaged to fend their forces to Conftantinople, to attack the Ottoman emperor in his metropolis. In that cafe, he knew, the most remote would have been eafily induced to furnish their quota in money. Since the frantick zeal for crufades was over, the popes had loft no opportunity to rekindle the fame zeal, which had formerly procured fo many advantages to their predeceffors. But the people as well as the princes were entirely difcouraged, because it was too visible that the crusades had been profitable to none but the popes. So, for once, the christian princes were contented to make a defensive league, to show only, they were ready to defend Chriftendom against the attacks of the infidels, deferring to take other measures till they fhould be obliged. Leo X. feeing he could obtain no more, approved and ratified the league the 31ft of December, after which it was never more mentioned. All the terrible preparations of the Turks against the christians entirely vanished, as foon as the pope found, his artifices could not produce the defired effect.

> Whilft these things passed, cardinal Wolfey, jointly with the French ambaffadors, was employed in preparing the treaties they had agreed upon, to be figned.

The first related to the marriage between the 'princes' Mary and the dauphin, which was to be folemnized as foon as the young prince should be full fourteen years old, each of the two kings promifing to pay five hundred thousand p. 624-641, crowns, in cafe it was his fault that the marriage was not compleated. Mary's dower was to be three hundred thirty three thousand crowns of gold, one half to be paid on the day of marriage, and the other within a year after. The jointure was to be as great as had ever been affigned to any queen of France, and particularly to Anne of Bretagne, and Mary of England, Wives to Lewis XII.

II. Treaty about Tournay. p. 642. Hall.

The fecond treaty was upon the reftitution of Tournay, for which Francis I. engaged to pay Henry fix hundred thoufand crowns of thirty five pence Tournois each, befides fifty thoufand ratifies the league. Ib. p. 681--691. Herbert. Hollingfh.

146

Act. Pub. XIII.p.691.

Several treaties between France and England.

I. Treaty of marriage between the dauphin and Mary.

thousand livres Tournois due to him from the inhabitants 4. 1518. But out of these two sums Francis was to keep back the princefs Mary's dower. As to the payments, he obliged himfelf to pay fifty thousand livres upon taking polleffion of the place, and then twenty-five thousand livres every fix months, till the whole was paid r. III. Treaty

The third treaty concerned the outrages which might be about outcommitted for the future against the peace by the fubjects of Act, Pube either king, and contained certain regulations to procure XIII.p.649. fpeedy reparation. IV. Treaty

By the fourth, the two monarchs agreed upon an inter- about an view in the village of Sandinfelt, between Ardres and p. 679. Guifnes.

These treaties being signed the 14th of October, the Wolfey is French ambafladors gave cardinal Wolfey their mafter's let- mends. ters patents, whereby he bound himfelf to pay him an an-p. 611. nual penfion of twelve thousand livres Tournois, to fatisfy him for the loss of the bishoprick of Tournay. Espousals of

As foon as the two kings had ratified the treaties, and fo- the dauphin lemnly fwore to the peace at London and Paris, the king and p. 666-678. queen of France, acting in the name of the dauphin their fon, affianced the princefs Marv, reprefented by the earl of Worcefter ' her proxy. This ceremony was performed at ' Paris the 21ft of December t.

Europe enjoyed then a profound tranquillity. But upon the death of the emperor Maximilian " the 12th of January Death of the 1519, new troubles arofe. By his death, France, Spain, Guicciard, Italy, Germany, England, Scotland, the Low Countries, Herbert, 9 The whole was but fifty thousand, whereof part was paid. See Rymer, p. 642. Our historians fay, the arrears that remained due, were twenty three thousand livres. Hall, fol. 65; and Stow, p. 507.

r Tournay was delivered up to the king of France, on Febr. 8, 1519. Hall, fol. 67.

* Rapin miftaking the name for the title, fays Somerfet .- He was accompanied in his embaffy to France, by Nicolas Weft, bifhop of Ely, the lord St. John, fir Nicolas Vaux, fir John Pechy, and fir Thomas Bulleyn. Hall, fol. 66.

t This year was instituted the college of physicians, in London. King Henry's charter for that purpole bears date October 23. By the appointment, in this corporation, or college, are included the physicians in London, and feven miles round that city. The phyficians named in the charter, are, John Chamber, Thomas Linacre, Fernand de Victoria, Nicolas Halfewell, John Francis, and Robert Yaxley. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 654.

" He was king of the Romans, and called emperor, though never crowned by that title. Some fay, the reafon was, becaufe he declined the charge and hazard of going into Italy, to receive the imperial crown at the pope's hands. He fpent his leifure hours in poetry, writing the history of his life, in Dutch verse. As knight of the garter, his obsequy was solemnly kept in St. Paul's, by our king and the knights of that order. Herbert, p. 34-K 2 were 1519.

Cardinal

Francis and Charles afpire to the empire. Mczerai. Guicciard.

. .

The pope's Intereffs.

Death of Lorenzo de Medici. Guicciard.

a legate.

church. to the choofe an Guicciard.

were engaged in wars no lefs fatal to them than the former'. As foon as Maximilian was in his grave, the kings of France and Spain openly declared themfelves candidates for the empire, and began to cabal among the electors to obtain their defites. This threw the electors into great perplexity. On which fide foever they turned, they faw for themselves, for Germany, for all Europe, advantages and inconveniencies which deferved their whole attention. It would have been the interest of Germany to keep the ballance even between the two monarchs who afpired to the imperial dignity, and to reject both. But by choosing one of the competitors, fuch fuperiority would be given him as could not but be fatal to all Europe, and particularly to Germany. I shall not farther infift upon the reasons which the electors had to choose one or reject both. It is well known, on these occasions, the publick good does not always ferve for rule and foundation to form decifions of this nature. Leo X. wifhed, as it was indeed his intereft, the electors would agree to choose one of their own body. , Charles being possessed of the kingdom of Naples, and Francis of the duchy of Milan, the election of one of these monarchs could not but one day diffurb the peace of Italy, and prove destructive to the papal power. Accordingly, the pope used his utmost endeavours to perfuade the electors to take that courfe. But however, he was forced to act privately for fear of making the two candidates his enemies, by openly declaring against them.

Whilft the refolution of the electors was impatiently expected, Lorenzo de Medici the pope's nephew was feized with a diffemper that laid him in his grave. By this unexpected accident, that branch of the family of Medici was reduced to the perfon of the pope, fole lawful defcendant of Colmo the great, who first acquired the fovereignty of Flo-The pope rence. Some endeavours were used to perfuade the pope to keeps Flo- reftore his country to liberty, but he did not love the Florenrence, and governs it by times well enough to fuffer them to enjoy fo valuable a bleffing, of which he had taken fo much pains to deprive them.

- Refolving therefore to keep that ftate, he fent cardinal Ju-¹ lius de Medici, natural fon of Julian his uncle, to govern He annexes. in his name. Shortly after, he annexed the duchy of Urbino the duchy to the church, and razed the walls of the capital, for fear la of Urbino Rovere should think of recovering it.

The electors being affembled to proceed to the election of The electors an emperor, Francis and Charles fent ambaffadors to the meet to affembly to manage their concerns. The pope would have emperor. a nuntio there too, who had orders privately to endeavour to caule caufe them both to be rejected, but however, to conform 1519. themfelves outwardly to the disposition of the electors. Henry VIII. perceiving the difficulties which would occur in Pol. Virg. the choice of either of the candidates, fent Richard Pace to pires to the the diet to try whether there was any thing to be expected empire. for him. But as he thought of it too late, his ambaffador Herbert. found the affair fo advanced, that he did not think fit to expose the king's honour. He writ to him therefore, that indeed some of the electors " showed an inclination to favour him : that the pope would have likewife fupported him to the utmost of his power, had he declared fooner; but that matters were fo ordered, that the election would infallibly be over before proper measures could be taken to accomplish his project. And indeed, a few days after, on the 28th of Charles June, Charles king of Spain was declared emperor by the king of name of Charles V. or rather of Charles Quint, as he was elected. then, and still is called to this day x. Guicciard.

148 1519.

The election of Charles was a terrible mortification to Jealoufy of Francis I. All the world immediately thought, the jealoufy Francis I. between these two potent princes would infallibly occasion casions of bloody wars, and this opinion was but too well confirmed quarrel beby experience. Befides the king of France's jealoufy, which tween was doubtlefs one of the chief caufes of the following rup-Francis. ture, there were differences between them of very great im- Guicciard. portance, and extremely difficult to adjust. Francis I. had pretensions to the kingdom of Naples. Moreover, by the treaty of Noyon, Charles was bound to reftore Navarre to Henry d'Albret, within four months after figning the treaty, and this article was yet unperformed. On the other hand, Charles, as heir of the house of Burgundy, believed he had a right to the duchy of that name. He pretended that after the death of the last duke his great grandfather, Lewis XI. had unjuftly feized it upon a bare allegation that it was a male fee, though the contrary was evident. He had fuffered his title to lie dormant during his minority. But after he was of w The electors of Mentz, Cologne, and Triers, stood fo affected, that Pace thought if our king had put in fooner, he would have carried it. Herbert,

P. 33. * Inflead of spending his money in bribing the electors, as Francis did, particularly the marquis of Branden-burgh, he laid it out in raifing numerous forces, which he brought to Francfort. Whereupon the majority of the electors (viz. the archbishops of Mentz and Cologne, the count Palatin, and the duke of Saxony,) being thereby terrified and over awed, agreed to choofe him. There were then but fcven electors, which, together with the four just now mentioned, were the archbishop of Treves or Triers, the malquis of Brandenburgh, and the king of Bohemia. See Guicciard. 1. 13, The electorate of Bavaria was appointed in 1648, and that of Brunswic-Lunenburgh-Hanover, in 1693.

age

age he had thoughts of reviving it, and the imperial dignity lately obtained helped very much to confirm him in that refolution. The duchy of Milan was another caufe of difpute, which would naturally produce a war between the two monarchs. It could not be denied that it was a fief of the empire, and yet Lewis XII. had feized it, and Francis I. reconquered it, and was now in possession, without either's being invefted by the emperor Maximilian, or fo much as defiring it. Charles therefore could alledge it was his duty to maintain the rights of the empire, and endeavour to difpoffels the king of France of that duchy. The duke of Gueldres afforded another occasion of guarrel between these two monarchs. He was a profeffed enemy to the emperor, and France protected him openly. Finally, the treaty of Noyon gave Charles another caufe of complaint. He pretended, Francis had extorted from him fo difadvantageous a treaty, by threatening war when his affairs neceffarily required his prefence in Spain, to take possefion of his kingdoms: that therefore the refignation of the kingdom of Navarre, and the penfion of a hundred thousand crowns, to which he had been engaged under the fpecious pretence of a maintenance for the princefs his future spoule, were nothing elfe but the price of a peace he had been made to purchase.

Interefts of the princes of Europe.

Of Leo X.

150

1519.

But though the two monarchs looked upon each other with a jealous and envious eye, and wanted not pretences for a war, neither of them durft however begin before he had founded the reft of the fovereigns. And how they flood affected will also be necessary to know, for the better underftanding the fequel, the interefts of princes giving to hiftory a light, which without that affiftance is fought for in vain.

Leo X. was equally afraid of the two monarchs, being fenfible to which fide foever the ballance inclined, Italy must be in-danger. If he could have fet them at variance without making Italy the feat of the war, he would freely have done it. But that was not poffible. Much less was it in his power to ftand neuter. The reason is, because he could not hinder the contefts about Naples and Milan from being decided by arms, and therefore could not avoid interposing in a quarrel, which would fo nearly concern him. He took therefore the courfe which best agreed with his temper, and that was to be referved and manage both the monarchs, till he found it his interest to declare himself. But through all his difguifes he difcovered however fome partiality to the emperor, in the grant of a difpensation to hold the empire with the kingdom of Naples, though that was directly contrary to the

Mezerai.

the terms on which he had given him the investiture of that 1519. kingdom. Francis complained of it, but the pope excufed it as he could not refuse, without involving himself in troubles from which it would not have been eafy to be delivered.

As for Henry VIII. the pofture of affairs between Charles Of Henry and Francis might have rendered his reign very glorious, had VIII. he not entirely given himfelf up to the interested counfels of cardinal Wolfey. He had it in his power to preferve the peace of Europe, by keeping the ballance even between the two rivals, without fuffering it to incline too much to either fide. This was his grand intereft as well as the kingdom's, and accordingly this was his refolution. Hence it was that he frequently engaged in one or other fide, but not always as the interest of Europe, the welfare of his realm, and his own glory required. Thus whilft he thought to follow the maxims of good policy, he helped without perceiving it to gratify the paffions of his minister, as will be seen hereafter.

Charles and Francis were fo convinced of the advantages to Both mobe reaped from the king of England's friendship, that they narchs try to neglected nothing which they thought would procure it. by means of The best or rather the only means to that end was to gain car- Wolfey. dinal Wolfey to their interefts. And therefore, they fpared Herbert. neither flatteries nor promises, nor presents, to make him their friend. They took occasion fometimes to write to him, on purpose to stile him their friend, their father. In their letters they extolled his virtue, his prudence, his capacity, in fuch affecting terms, that he must have been blind not to fee, they had farther-views than to express their efteem for him. Wolfey made good use of these testimonies of their Their cafriendship, to observe to his master how formidable he was to reffesincease Wolfey's these monarchs, fince they did not difdain even to carefs his credit. minister. But withal, it served him to infinuate how far his own merit excelled that of other minifters, fince it was univerfally known. All this produced the effect he expected. Henry deemed himfelf the arbiter of Europe, and remained fo perfuaded of his favourite's capacity, that he no longer faw but with his eyes, nor acted but by his advice.

Thus Wolfey was then at the top of the wheel. He was The carfavourite, prime minister, lord chancellor, administrator of dinal's prethe bishoprick of Bath and Wells, archbishop of York, fole ferments. legate a latere, Campejus his collegue being recalled. He had a penfion from the emperor, and the king of France, and received an immense profit from his chancellorship, by the privileges annexed thereto by the king. Befides this, the king K A king never ceafed making him prefents, and giving him con-1519. J tinual occasions of increasing his incomes. On the other hand, the pope, the emperor, the king of France, and the republick of Venice, flrove with emulation to gain his goodwill, and feemed, as I may fay, to glory in their dependence upon him. The beginning of the year, Francis I. Act. Pub. XIII.p.691. fent him letters patents, whereby he confented, that he fhould alone regulate the ceremonies of his interview with Henry, giving him thereby an authentick teftimony of his confidence in his probity, upon a point of which kings are commonly very jealous. Mean while, the advances fuch great princes made the cardinal, did not argue fo much their efteem for him, as their fear of losing the friendship of the king his mafter. Francis I. to give Henry a fresh mark of godfather to his respect, defired him to stand godfather to his fecond fon, afterwards king of France, by the name of Henry II. Thefe things demonstrate Henry's happy fituation, and how glorious his reign might have been, had he wifely improved these advantages. But unfortunately for him, inflead of acting for himfelf and his own glory, he laboured in effect for his favourite's interests.

It would have been hard to conceive to what height the cardinal's pride was carried, if all the hiftorians had not taken care to defcribe it, and all in the fame colours. The legateship of Campejus setting that cardinal upon a level. with him, he could not long bear that equality. By his cre-XIII.p.734 dit at Rome, he caufed him to be recalled y, and himfelf Pol. Virg. appointed fole leasts with power to vift the mountaries appointed fole legate, with power to vifit the monafteries, and all the reft of the clergy 2. To obtain this commission, he had taken care to defame to the pope all the clergy of the kingdom, intimating, how neceffary it was to commit the reforming of them to his care *. But this was only to increafe

> y John Clarke, doctor of law, was fent to Rome for this purpole. The pope's committion to Wolfey is dated June 10, 1519. Herbert, p. 32, z By virtue of his legatine commiffion, he might fummon the archhishop of Canterbury, and all other bifhops within the king's dominions, to affemble at his convocation. He might superintend and correct what he thought irregular within their jusifdictions; appoint all officers in the fpiritual courts, and prefent to all ecclefiaffical benefices ; conflituie matters of faculties, and mafters of ceremonies, to advance his dignity, and exercise a visitatorial power over monasteries and colleges, and all the clergy, exempt, and not exempt; and this for one whole year, from the date of the bull. Fiddes life of Wolfey, p 100. Rymer, tom, XIII. p. 734.

a The clergy were fo defamed by the cardinal's information, that they were termed, dati in reprobum fonfum, given . up to reprobate fenfe, and the like, in the original bull among our records, which lord Herbert fays, he should have inferted at large, but that it is too long and infamous to the hierarchy and Henry is Francis's fecond fon. Herbert.

Cardinal Wolfey's extreme pride.

A&. Pub. Burnet.

crease his authority, and subject the whole church of Eng-land to his orders. When he faw himself invested alone with the dignity of legate, he let loofe, if I may fo fay, the reins He oppofes to his vanity. He faid mais after the manner of the pope and people. himfelf, not only bifhops ferving him therein, but earls and Pol. Virg. dukes giving him water and the towel. When he walked Hall. into the city, two croffes were carried before him by two of Stow. Herbert. the tallest priests that could be found, mounted on the highest Hollingsh. horfes. One of these crosses was that of legate, and the other that of York. At first these things ferved only for diversion to the people, who passed their jests upon this external pomp b. But presently after, were felt much more grievous effects of the power allumed by the legate. A new The legate's court of justice was erected, called the legate's court, the court erectjurifdiction whereof extended to all actions relating to con-Hall. fcience, that is, properly speaking, to all the actions of life, Pol. Virg. fince there is fcarce any but where confcience may be fome Herbert. way concerned. John Allen, doctor of law, being made judge of this new court, committed numberless rapines and extortions, under colour of reforming the manners of the people, though he was himfelf a perfon of an infamous character c. Strict enquiry was made into the life and man- Herbert. ners of every body, which gave occasion to the new judge to oppress all that obstinately refused to compound with him. Particularly, he pretended that this jurifdiction reached to all fuits arifing from wills or marriage contracts, and drew to his court numberless causes, without the king's judges daring to oppose it d. On the other hand, the legate treated the clergy with inconceiveable rigour, and conferred all the beneficer of the kingdom on his creatures, without troubling hunfelf about the rights of the churches, the monasteries, or the patrons. This is what had ever occasioned violent quarrels between the kings of England and the court of Rome, and given birth to the famous statute of præmunire, daily violated and all religious perfons, p. 32. Compl. Hift .- The cardinal intended to vifit all the monasteries in England, that discovering their corruptions, he might the better justify the defign he had to suppress most of them, and convert them into bishopricks, cathedrals, col-legiate churches, and colleges; but was diverted from his defign. However, he led the way, to the total fuppreflion of them that followed afterwards. Burnet's Ref. tom. I. p. 20. Infomuch, that Polydore Virgil fays, it drew to a jeft, as if one crofs did not fuffice for the expiation of his fins.

c He was thought to be guilty of perjury. Herbert, p. 33. Pol. Virg. d He had a great number of fpics and informers dispersed every where, to let him know what livings became vacant, that he might fill them up immediately; and what perfons of note died in every town or parish, that he might cite their executors to prove the wills in his court, Ibid.

by

Herbert. Pol. Virg. Hollingfh.

Cardinal Wolfey afpires to the emperor. Herbert.

by the legate, the king fuffering in him things which he would not doubtless have allowed in the pope himself, and being informed no farther than the cardinal pleafed. At last, the archbishop of Canterbury, seeing fo many oppresfions, thought it his duty to acquaint the king, who feemed furprifed, and charged the archbishop to tell the cardinal, that it was his pleafure he fhould amend whatever was amifs . The effect of this remonstrance was, that the cardinal still more hated the archbishop for whom he had already conceived an averfion, for fubfcribing himfelf in one of his letters, your brother of Canterbury f. But fhortly after, John London, a prieft s, boldly accusing the judge of the legate's court, it was not possible to hinder the affair from coming to the king's knowledge. As the judge was convicted of numberlefs mildemeanours, the king fo reprimanded the cardinal, that from thenceforward he became, if not better, yet more wary at leaft.

The grandeur, riches, power, and authority enjoyed by Wolfey in England, were not capable of fatisfying his ampopedom by bition, whilft there was still one step higher to which a means of the churchman could afcend. He had begun fome time fince to take measures to become pope, when the see should be vacant, and the king of France had now offered him the votes of fourteen cardinals. But fince Charles was elected emperor, Wolfey thought him most capable to procure him the papacy, and probably, continued a private negotiation with him. For that purpole, he gradually dilengaged the king his mafter from the interest of France, to turn him to the emperor. Mean while, he believed he could not, without too much discovering himself, hinder the interview of Francis and Henry, which had been deferred till the year 1520 h. But he well knew how to prevent the ill effects this interview might produce against the emperor his new friend. Belides, he could not think of losing the pleasure of appearing before the court of France with a magnificence little inferior to that of a king, and of feeing himfelf in the prefence of the > e Polydore Virgil fays, the king replied to the archbishop, that he should not have heard of these things but by him; adding, that no man is fo blind any where as in his own house ; therefore, I pray you, (fays he) father, go to Wolfey, and tell him, if any thing be amils that he amend it. Herbert, p. 33.

f When the bearer of the letter informed the archbishop what offence the cardinal had taken at his fubfcription, he faid, with fome fhew of refentment, peace, knowest thou not that the man is incbriated with profperity. Hollingfh. p. 848.

g Rapin, by mistake, calls him a prieft of London: See Herbert, p. 33. h Both kings in the mean while a-greeing, not to cut off their beards till they faw one another. Herbert, p. 34. English, 154 1519. English, honoured and carefied by the king of France, and 1519. his whole court, as he would probably be. This was an opportunity which a perfon fo fond of pageantry and oftentation could not neglect.

The emperor had reason to carefs cardinal Wolfey. He Affairs of had met in Spain with unexpected difficulties. The Cafti- Spain. lians and Arragonians were bent to preferve their privileges, which were continually attacked by the emperor's Flemish counfellors. On the other hand, the emperor, on pretence of the crufade published by the pope, having demanded a tenth of the clergy, that demand had caufed throughout Spain troubles which very much embarraffed that prince. There had been also an infurrection in Austria, which was not appeafed without difficulty. In fhort, the king of France was Theemperor. privately labouring to raife the emperor troubles in Naples, and king of Sicily, Navarre, and to withdraw his allies from him. All equally court this made Henry's friendship fo necessary to him, that it is no Wolfey's wonder he should endeavour to win the cardinal to his fide, Friendship. fince the minister's credit was the only way to gain the master. The king of France used the fame method, which greatly increased the cardinal's pride; who seeing himself courted by these two monarchs, had it in his power, if I may fo fay, to fet what price he pleafed upon his fervices.

Whilft all the world was impatiently expecting the effect Affairs of of the jealoufy between the emperor and king of France, the Scotland. Buchanan. affairs of Scotland still remained in the fame situation, that is, in extreme diforder becaufe of the regent's absence. When he went from Scotland, he hoped to return in few months, but was not fuffered to follow his inclination. Francis I. France enforeseeing the want he might have of England, had made a gages to deprivate treaty with Henry, promifing to detain the duke of tainthedake Albany in France. Thus Henry obtained by another way, in France. what the parliament of Scotland had plainly refused him. Herbert. It was very eafy to conceive, why he opposed the duke of Albany's return. His defign was to throw Scotland into trouble and confusion, to have an opportunity to interpole in the affairs of that kingdom, under colour of supporting the interests of the young king his nephew. He could not therefore execute it better, than by fomenting difcord among the nobility, which the regent's prefence might have remedied. But the war which afterwards broke out between Charles and Francis, and wherein he was but too much concerned, prevented the profecution of his defigns againft Scotland. Probably this faved the kingdom, which otherwife was in great danger of being conquered by the English.

Before

Before I clofe the year 1519, I must not forget to remark, 1519. that this year the emperor received the news of the difcovery, Difcovery of and beginning of the conquest of Mexico, and New Spain. Mexico and The mention of this particular is the more necessary, though it feems foreign to our history, as it was the gold and filver wherewith the new world furnished Spain, and contributed most to render Charles V. fo powerful as he will hereafter appear. Befides, money growing more plenty, by the trade carried on by other countries with Spain, the reader must not be furprifed to find hereafter more numerous armies, greater magnificence in princes courts, and the dowries of princeffes much larger than before. But Spain first improved the gold and filver of the new world, and was thereby enabled, in the reigns of Charles V. and Philip II. to afpire to univerfal monarchy ⁱ.

L tion of the interview two kings by Wolfey. Act. Pub. March 12. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

1520.

156

The confidence placed by Francis I. in cardinal Wolfey, in giving him power to regulate his interview with Henry, The regula- would have been very honourable for that minister, if, on the other hand, this proceeding had not flown his little efbetween the teem for him, as believing him liable to corruption. Be this as it will, Wolfey, by virtue of powers received from the two kings, made the 12th of March 1520, a regulation, XIII.p.705. importing, among other things, " that the interview should " be on the 4th of June-k, between Ardres and Guifnes; " that the king of England fhould go towards Ardres, as far " as conveniently he could 1, without paffing however the " English pale, and the king of France should meet him at " the place where fhould ftop." Hence, he fo ordered it, that Francis paid the first visit to Henry. But he affigned for reason, that the king his master having crossed the feas, on purpose to do his friend honour, it was very just, Francis fhould in fome meafure make him amends, by advancing, to receive him, a little beyond the limits of his own territories in fome open place appointed by deputies on either fide. The reft of the regulation concerned the fafety of the two monarchs, their queens, the queen dowager of France, fifter

> i Hernando Cortes, undertaker of the expedition to America, going, in the year 1518, with about four hundred foot, and fifteen horfe, and feven lit-tle field pleces, into many populous but diverfly affected kingdoms, did fo dexteroufly behave himfelf, that playing the part fometimes of an ambaffador, and fometimes of a foldier, he prevailed himfelf of all, And in con clufion, notwithstanding the opposi-tion of his countrymen and enemies, laid a foundation of a greater dominion than any man before him did. Herbert, p. 34. See Don Ant. de Solis, Hift. of Mexico.

k Within four days after the end of May. Rymer, p. 707. 1 A mile, Ibid.

of Henry, Louisa of Savoy, duchess of Angoulême, mother 1520. to Francis I. the trains of the princes and princeffes who were to affift at the interview, the place where the two kings were to meet and confer together, and laftly, the diversions which the two courts were to take.

During the time between the regulation and the interview, Francisgains Francis caufed the cardinal to be founded, to know whether, Wolfey to by his means, he could not prevail with Henry to reftore given up. Calais for a fum of money. This propofal was, doubtlefs, Herbert, attended with fecret promifes to the cardinal, anfwerable to fo great a fervice, fince he did not think fit to reject it. He But he dares durft not however speak of it directly to the king, but tried not propose fo to manage, that others fhould infpire him with the thought, king, that in cafe the king advifed with him upon it, he might give his opinion more freely. To that end, in his converfation, he would frequently turn the difcourfe upon Calais, and fay, as it were accidentally, what have we to do with this Calais, that lies on the continent and cofts us fo much? it were to be wifhed we were honeftly rid of ,it ! this artifice failing, he never ventured to make the king fo extraordinary a propofal, and the rather as, being refolved to engage with the emperor, he was not fo defirous to oblige the king of France.

The time of the interview approaching, Henry m came to Henry fets Canterbury the 25th of May, in order to pass his Whitfuntide out for the interview. there, and then proceed to Calais. But the next day news Theemperor was brought him, that the emperor was landed at Dover. arrives at This arrival furprifed the whole court, and perhaps the king Dover. himself. But the cardinal had no reason to be furprised, fince Stow, the emperor had the 29th of March, promifed by letters pa- Hollingfh. tents dated from Compostella, to give or cause to be given him by the pope, the bifhoprick of Badajos ", within two months after the conference he was to have in perfor with the king of England, as appears in the collection of the pub- Act. Pub. lick acts. Hence it is plain, the emperor's journey to Eng-XIII.p.7144 land, had been refolved ever fince March, at least between the emperor and the cardinal. But it is uncertain whether the king was informed of it. However, the cardinal was commiffioned to go and welcome the emperor at Dover, where the king came also on the morrow. Then the two monarchs went together to Canterbury, where Henry fent m He fet out from Greenwich, May 21. Stow, p. 508.

n In Effremadura; worth five thou-fand ducats yearly. The town of Ba-dajos is deemed one of the bulwarks of Spain. The earl of Galloway, who commanded the British troops in those parts, had his right hand fhot off here. for Hollingfh. Pol. Virg.

the pontificate to Wolfey.

Hall:

The interview of Francis and Henry. Herbert. Stow. Hall. Hollingfh.

Treaty between them. Act. Pub. XIII.p.719. June 6.

for his queen, who was extremely glad to fee her nephew the emperor, having never feen him before °. The emperor's aim in this vifit was to diffuade the king from the interview with Francis, but he could not fucceed, Henry making him fenfible, he could not recede with honour. But very likely he had alfo in view, the fecuring of cardinal Wolfey, He promifes in order to gain, by his means, the king to his intereft. It is the common opinion, his journey was not fruitlefs, but that he could obtain the cardinal's favour, only by promifing to use all his credit to raife him to the papacy, in case Leo X. died before him. Though the emperor had not obtained all his defires, he departed however very well fatisfied with his vifit, Henry having promifed not to enter into any engagement with the king of France to his prejudice P. On the 30th of May, Charles proceeded to Flanders, and Henry to Calais 9.

I shall not stay to describe the interview of the two monarchs between Ardres and Guifnes, as regulated by the cardinal. Whilft it lafted, there was nothing but entertainments, tournaments, balls, masquerades, and other diverfions, wherein the two courts mixed to their mutual fatisfaction. Every thing on both fides was fo magnificent, that the affembly was called, the camp of the cloth of gold r. But amidst all the pleasures which the two courts took together, the affairs however were not neglected. The following articles were agreed upon by the two kings at their conferences : that after Francis should have paid the million of crowns, according to the late treaty, he fhould give Henry

• The emperor faw likewife the queen Dowager of France, Henry's fister, once proposed for his wife, at the fight of whom (fays Polydore) he was fo fad, (fhe being a celebrated beauty) that he could not be perfuaded to dance. Herbert, p. 36.

P The treaty of commerce made hetween England and Germany, in 1506, was, alfo now confirmed. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 714, &c.

g See the lifts of the noblemen and others that attended the king and queen, in Rymer's Feed. tom. XIII. p. 710, 711.

r The king caufed a building 328 foot fquare to be erected, from which a private gallery reached to the caffle of Guifnes. The parts of this great building were artificially framed in England, and afterwards taken afunder and brought home. The model whereof, lord Herbert fays, was at Green-wich in his time. The two kings met, on the 7th of June, in the vale of Andren, and alighting, walked hand in hand to a tent of cloth of gold. On the 9th, they came and viewed the camp or place of exercise, 300 yards long, and 106 broad, with scaffolds on the fides for the beholders. There were also fet up two artificial trees, with the arms of the two kings and their affiftance, on which were affixed the articles of the jufts, &c. June 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, the two kings, with feven affiftants each, encountered all comers, and came off with applause. June 16th, was spent in feafting and dancing with the queens and other ladies. June 17th, being Sunday, and the 18th, being foul weather 158 1520.

OF ENGLAND.

an annual penfion for life of a hundred thousand livres Tour- 1520. nois *, that in cafe the dauphin fhould become king of England by his marriage with the princess Mary, the pension should be continued to Mary and her heirs for ever; that the differences between the kings of England and Scotland, should be referred to the arbitration of Louisa of Savoy, the king of France's mother, and the cardinal of York. The two kings parted not till the 24th of June, after paffing about three weeks together in continual diversions.

Henry being returned to Calais, was pleafed before he Henry goes repaffed into England, to repay the vifit received from the to fee the emperor at emperor at Canterbury. To that end, he came to Gra- Graveling. veling the 10 of July, and returned the fame day to Calais. On the morrow, the emperor, with the lady Margaret his The emperor aunt, governess of the Low Countries, came to see Henry visit. at Calais, and flayed three days with him. These mutual Hall. visits made Francis extremely jealous, and not without rea- Stow. fon. Probably, in these conferences were laid the first foun- Hollingsh. dations of the alliance afterwards concluded between the emperor and Henry. In a few days after, Henry returned into England.

The greatest princes very justly courted cardinal Wol-Letter of the fey. He absolutely governed his master, who, in the pre-fent fituation of his affairs, could make the ballance incline cardinal. to which fide he pleased. The senate of Venice foresteeing A& Pab. that a war would foon break out in Italy, endeavoured be-Iuly 6. forehand to make Wolfey their friend, by fhewing a great July 6. efteem for him. There is in the collection of the publick acts, a letter from the doge to the cardinal, to congratulate him upon the interview of the two kings, as a work of his confummate wildom *.

weather, they reposed. The 19th, they continued their courfes. On the 20th the tournay began, where our king particularly got that honour, that a brave French nobleman, with whom he fought, prefented him with his horfe, as a gage of his being overcome. On the 21st, the sport was so rough, that four of the affistants were hurt. On the 22d, the barriers began. The 23d, our king, with his fifter queen Mary, went in malquing habits to fee the French queen at Ardres, Francis likewife going to the English queen. On the 24th, after many compliments, embraces, and rich prefents, they took. leave of one another. Herbert, p. 37. See Hall, who feems to have been an eye witnefs, fol. 73, &c.

s This fum was not to be paid till the marriage was folemnized, per verba de præfenti, between the dauphin and the prince's Mary; and then, every year afterwards to king Henry during his life. See Rymer, tom. XIII. p. 719, 720.

t In this letter, the doge compliments him in the ftrongeft terms, and files him all along dominatio vesta reverendiffima, and in one place, majestatis ejus pars altera. But it seems the university of Oxford was wont to outdo

But

159.

The pope grants the cardinal on Spanish fees. P. 714, 725.

160

1520.

Troubles in Spain.

- But this was only words, whereas the pope, who found he should quickly want the cardinal, thought he must gain him by fomething more fubstantial. He granted him, as appears in the collection, on the 29th of July, a penfion of penfions up- two thousand ducats upon the bishoprick of Palencia in Spain, and conffituted him perpetual administrator of the fee of Badajos, without prejudice to the benefices he had or should have for the future. There is no doubt, this was done with the emperor's confent, who endeavoured by degrees to gain fo powerful a minister, whose credit was very neceffary in the prefent fituation of his affairs. He had left Spain full of troubles, occafioned by the greedinefs of the Flemings; who only fought to enrich themfelves at the expence of the Spaniards. This had even obliged him to depart with fome precipitation, for fear of being embroiled in affairs which might have prevented his going to receive the imperial crown. He had left for governors in Spain, Adrian Florentio bishop of Tortofa, and the constable of Caffile. But he was no fooner gone, than feveral lords, and fome cities of Castile joined in a league for the defence of their liberties, and expulsion of the Flemings. This league was followed by an open rebellion, which very much embarraffed the two governors. Mean while, having drawn together a body of troops, confifting partly of the garrifons left in Navarre, they formed a good army, and at length defeated and reduced the male-contents to obedience.

Theemperor is crowned.

The pope follicits the elector of Saxony againft Luther.

He excommunicates him,

Whilft thefe things paffed in Spain, the emperor was preparing for his coronation, which was folemnized the 21st of October ".

Luther's defection made then great noife in Germany. Leo X. endeavoured to excite all the princes of the empire against the doctor, who had boldly appealed to a general council, notwithstanding pope Pius the fecond's bull. In fhort, after fruitless trials to win him by promises, or frighten him by threats, he published a bull of excommunication against him and his followers. But Luther, regardless of these thunders, renewed his appeal to a council in very harfh terms. The pope exafperated that a fingle monk outdo the doge, and not fcrupie to beflow abfolutely on the cardinal the title of majefty, as appears from feveral letters to him, from that university. But it feems that appellation was not then appropriated to kings. See Fiddes, p. 178.

" At Aix, the fame day that Solyman was crowned at Conftantinople ; and it is observable, that as Charles was the XIth from Albertus, in whofe time the houfe of the Ottomans began, fo Solyman was the XIth prince of his race.

fhould

should thus dare to brave him, defired the elector of Saxony, then at Cologne, to put him to death, or fend him to Rome. The elector refusing, the pope's nuncio ordered who appeals Luther's books to be publickly burnt at Cologne, and Lu- to a council. ther, in revenge, caufed the pope's bull and the decretals Herbert, to be openly burnt at Wirtemberg, and published a manifefto in defence of his proceedings. He found himfelf fupported by the elector his fovereign, who earnestly defired to fee a reformation in the church.

Mean while the duke of Wirtemberg, who at the inftance The duke of of Francis I. had forfaken the league of Swabia, was driven Wirtemberg out of his dominions, and the emperor purchased them. As minions, the king of France was not then in condition to protect him, he was forced to fubmit to the emperor's terms, without hopes of being reftored.

. The troubles still continued among the Scots, who were Troubles in divided in two factions, whereof Andrew Hamilton, and Scotland. George Douglass " earl of Arran were the heads. During Buchanan. the year 1520, the Hamiltonians found means to conftrain Archibald Douglass earl of Angus, one of those left by the regent to govern in his absence, to relinquish his post. After which they would have taken away his life. But with four-. fcore men he beat, in the ftreets of Edinburgh, above a thoufand of his enemies, and drove them out of the city. All this ferved only to exafperate more and more the factions against one another, fo that at last Douglas received into his party all the friends of the two Humes, beheaded by the regent, in order with their affiftance to withftand his enemies. These were the fad effects caused by the regent's absence, whom the king of England hindered from returning into Scotland. Mean while, the truce betweeen the Act. Pub. two kingdoms was farther prolonged to the 9th of April XIII. p. 727 this next year, by the king of France's mediation, and the council of Scotland politively promifed to fend an honorable embaffy to the king of England to defire a peace x.

The polture of affairs in the beginning of the year 1521, 1521. did not promife a long continuance of the peace of Europe.

w Rapin by mistake calls him earl of Arran; whereas at this time the earl of Arran was James Hamilton. See above, p. 131. note 2.

x This year the earl of Kildare was discharged from the office of deputy, or lord lieutenant of Ireland, which was conferred on Thomas Howard, VOL. VI.

earl of Surrey, and lord admiral. He went over to his government in the beginning of April, with about a thou-fand men, and remained there two) years, in which time he had many engagements with the natives, and reduced the earl of Defmond to reafon. Hall, fol. 70. Stow, p. 508.

Four

161 I 520.

-737.

Characters cipal fovereigns of Europe. Of FrancisI.

Four fovereigns enjoyed almost the whole, and had a great influence upon the dominions they were not poffeffed of. They were all four young, able and ambitious enough to and tempers form vaft projects, which could not be executed without putting all Europe in combustion.

Francis I. fecretly envying Charles V. fought occasion to fhew his concern at feeing him on the imperial throne, and was thinking to use the pretence of recovering the kingdom of Naples for himfelf, and Navarre for Henry d'Albret. But his defign of attacking the emperor was founded upon another and more powerful motive, namely, policy, which required his utmost endeavours to humble this formidable rival, otherwife France might be in great danger. To execute this grand project, it would have been necessary for him to be wholly intent upon his affairs, and to be a good . oeconomift, in order to support the expence in which he was going to engage. But unhappily for him, he was too much addicted to his pleafures, and very often applied to other uses, the money defigned for the war. Moreover, he was too eafily governed by his ministers, and still more by the duchefs of Angoulême his mother, whofe interefts were often contrary to his. However, he fancied his affairs in fuch a polture, as promifed a happy fuccefs of his undertakings. Spain was difaffected and agitated with inteffine troubles, which probably would greatly embarrafs the emperor. On the other hand, the Turks threatened Hungary, which the emperor could not abandon without indangering his Auftrian dominions. In the next place, Francis flattered himfelf with having in the king of England a faithful friend, who would not forfake him, and who feemed to be almost equally concerned, to prevent the too great advancement of the house of Austria. In a word, he imagined to have reafon to expect that the pope, with whom he was in treaty for the conquest of Naples, instead of helping to encreafe the emperor's power, would use his utmost endeavours to humble a neighbour, who could not but be a terror to him, All this was firengthened with Francis's alliances with the Venetians and Switzers, who joining with the pope and the king of England, would of courfe render him fuperior to his enemy, whole kingdoms remote from each other, were less capable of giving mutual affiftance. Thus Francis, flattered by thefe appearances, formed extraordinary projects fuitable to his ambition and age, being then but twenty feven years old.

As

162 1521. As for Charles V. he had not yet done any thing to give a very advantageous Idea of him. His youth had been fpent under the guardianship of the emperor Maximilian his grand- Of Charles V father, or of Margaret of Auftria his aunt, and fince he had affumed the administration of the Low Countries, his governor Chievres did all in the name of the prince. His first proceedings, after the death of king Ferdinand, begot no great opinion of him, for he had fcarce fet foot in Spain, before the country was all in commotion. His advancement to the empire was owing, perhaps, to the little efsteem the world had for him. However, he was then the most potent prince in Europe. Besides the imperial dignity, he poffeffed all Spain, the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, the Low Countries, the archduchy of Auftria, and many other provinces and lordships in Germany. So, with his own forces alone, he was able to withftand Francis I. affifted by all his allies. Henry VIII. was the only fovereign that had at first embarrassed him, by reason of his union with France. But he had artfully drawn that thorn out of his fide, by means of cardinal Wolfey. With this he began, as I may fay, to difcover his ability, which till then had been as it were concealed. After that he diligently applied himfelf to gain the pope, and fucceeded to his wifh. Thus at the time I am now speaking of, he was become very formidable not only by his forces, but also by the proofs he had given of his capacity. As foon as he was raifed to the empire, he rightly judged he fhould find in Francis I. an enemy that would spare nothing to make him feel the effects of his envy. For that reason he thought early of means to fcreen himfelf from his attempts, not only by a just defence, but even by attacking him first. He had two plaufible reafons: one was, that the crown of France withheld from him the duchy of Burgundy, fince the death of his great grandfather Charles the last duke of Burgundy. The other concerned the duchy of Milan, whereof Francis ought to have received the investiture from the emperor, fince it was a fief of the empire, and yet he had never vouchfafed to afk it. He believed moreover to have caufe of complaint for Francis's extorting from him the treaty of Noyon as was before related.

In vain therefore do the hiftorians of both fides ftrive to caft the blame of the rupture upon one or other of the two, monarchs. It is certain, both thought at the fame time of making war, and took measures beforehand to execute their defigns.

L 2

defigns, though each privately endeavoured to engage his rival in fomething that fhould make him be deemed the aggrellor. So, as the beginning of a rupture is not to be judged of by the first act of hostility, but rather by the cause, one can hardly be miftaken in affirming Charles V. and Francis I. to be equally authors of a war which fet all Europe in a flame. Charles was not above one and twenty years of age, but of a very different character from that of his enemy. Francis was too much addicted to his pleafures, whereas Charles was too intent upon his affairs, having been ufed to it from his youth. Francis was of a free and open temper, but Charles was much more referved. He maturely thought of what he had to fay or do, and readily made use of artifice and evalion to accomplish his ends, framing his conduct by that of Maximilian and Ferdinand his grandfathers.

Of Leo X. Guicciard.

Leo X. had reafon to be fatisfied with his lot, could he have refolved to live in quiet. He was abfolute mafter of the whole ecclefiaftical state, to which he had lately added all la Romagna, Modena, Reggio, and the duchy of Urbino. His own, the church's, and all Italy's grand intetereft, was therefore to endeavour by all forts of means to keep the ballance even between the emperor and the king of France, and to manage fo, that neither of these two monarchs should become too powerful in Italy. This was very practicable, fince his dominions being fituated between those belonging to these two princes in Italy, they necessarily wanted him, in order to invade Naples or Milan. Thus, by keeping a ftrict neutrality, he would have probably freed Italy from a war, and preferved the papal power in its full lustre. But he was of too active a spirit to remain in peace. As he had a great opinion of his addrefs, he ventured to engage in all forts of affairs, how difficult foever they appeared, because, let what would be the event, he hoped to get clear by fome artifice. Befides, he had this in common with all the popes his predeceffors, that the respect for his character removed his fear of being reduced to extremities, in cafe his undertakings were not crowned with fuccefs. As to the reft, he was entirely addicted to his pleafures, spending most of his time with musicians and Buffoous, and in some still less innocent diversions. This, added to his liberal temper, threw him into fuch exceffive expences, that he was poor amidst his vast incomes, and always contriving means to procure money. Hence his extraordinary zeal to form a league against the Turks, because it afforded him him a pretence to levy tenths upon the clergy, and fell his indulgences to the great fcandal-of all Christendom y.

Had this pope been of, a more narrow genius, he would have doubtlefs maintained the tranquillity of Italy. But as he found himfelf capable of forming and executing great defigns, he had a mind to render his pontificate illustrious by fome fignal actions. Unfortunately for him and his fucceffors, he refolved to drive the French, Spaniards and Germans out of Italy, a project which may well be deemed extravagant. To accomplish it, he was necessarily to make use of the one to ruin the others, and by thus causing the ballance to incline all to one fide he could not but give mafters to himfelf and all Italy, which he would have avoided by standing neuter. But what chiefly engaged him in this Guicciard. project, was his defire to feize the duchy of Ferrara, and recover Parma and Placentia, which he could not hope to effect, whill the French were poffeffed of the duchy of Milan. On the other hand, he was a little uneafy with respect to Florence. He could not help fearing that Francis would think of reftoring the Florentines to their ancient liberty. He refolved therefore to begin with the French, but took care not to difcover his defigns. On the contrary, he continued private negotiations with the king of France as well as with the emperor, and put both equally in hopes of his friendship. Mean while, as his intent was not always to remain in this fituation, he ordered fix thousand men to be levied in Switzerland, and fent for them into the ecclefiaffical state, having demanded a passage through the Milanefe, under colour of providing for the defence of his towns.

Henry VIII. was then more advantageoufly fituated than Of Henry any king of England had ever been before him. He was ^{VIII}, at peace with all Europe except Scotland, which would have been glad to be left in quiet. Though he had now confumed all the money found in the king his father's coffers, he was however affured of being always fupplied, fince he was in a good underftanding with his parliament, and had the art of managing the two houfes with a very fingular addrefs, Thus being able to raife numerous forces, and at liberty to turn them which way he pleafed, it was doubt-y This is the pope of whom Bembo his fecretary reports this faving : it has been long and well known how beneficial this fable of Jefus Chrift has been to us and our predeceffors.

1521.

1521. lefs in his power to render himfelf umpire of Europe. For that reason Charles and Francis with equal ardor courted his friendship, being sensible, he could invincibly obstruct their defigns, and caufe the ballance to lean to the fide he should please to espouse. It was his interest to keep always in this fituation, till obliged to interpose in their differences, to hinder the one from rifing to the prejudice of the other. And indeed this was his aim and intention. But unfortunately for him, his weakness for his prime minister the cardinal was beyond all imagination. This favorite had fuch an afcendant over him, that he inclined him which way he pleased, always under the specious colour of carrying his glory to a greater height, though in reality he had only his own interests in view. We have already feen fenfible proofs of his great influence over his mafter, in what paffed during and after the late war with France. He had perfuaded him to deliver to the emperor Maximilian the city of Terouenne, which might have been of great fervice to him, and to keep Tournay, which was of little or no advantage. Afterwards, when he was in possession of the bifhoprick of Tournay, he had artfully perfuaded him that the keeping of that place would be an everlasting monument of his glory. But when he faw, he was like to lofe the bishoprick, and had ample amends offered him, he found other reasons to convince him that he ought to part with a place which was of no benefit to him, We shall fee prefently that he led him also to make a very false step in efpoufing the emperor's part against France, whereas his true interest was to keep the ballance even between the two potentates. All this was done for the fake of cardinal Wolfey, who having the ambition to afpire to the popedom, thought to fucceed by the emperor's means. The penfion procured him by Charles upon the bifhoprick of Palencia in Caffile, and the administration of the fee of Badajos, at a time when he had not yet received any publick fervice from him, are incontestable proofs that the cardinal had engaged with him, as being fure of governing his mafter as he pleafed. Thefe things afforded no very advantageous Idea of Henry's penetration.

> Such were the characters, interest, and designs of the four principal fovereigns concerned in the new war I am going to speak of. The king of Scotland was yet too young to be reckoned among the directors of the affairs of Europe. The Venetians fought only to live in peace, being, as I may fay, exhausted by the former war. However, they could not avoid avoid entering into this alfo. As for the Swirzers, they were 1521. fatisfied with their penfions from France, and generally inclined to obferve the articles of their alliance with that crown. But they were not entirely fecured from the fecret practices continued by the pope's and the emperor's agents with fome of their magistrates, to try to perfuade them not to take part with France.

Francis I. having formed a defign to make war upon the Francis I. emperor, without incurring the blame of the rupture, re- invades Nafolved to begin with what could not be imputed to him as a Du Bellai, premeditated defign to quarrel. By the treaty of Noyon, Mezerai. Charles was bound to refign Navarre to Henry d'Albret within four months, in default whereof Francis was free to affift Henry to recover his kingdom. The affairs of Spain being extremely imbroiled fince the emperor quitted that country, Francis believed it a fair opportunity to invade Navarre. He was the more inclined to this undertaking, as the two regents of Spain had been forced to draw troops from Pampelonia and other places of that kingdom, to reinforce the army which was to act against the fore-mentioned league. He fent therefore into Navarre in the beginning of March an army under the command of Lesparre of the house of Foix, elder brother of Lautrec and Lescun. This ge- Lesparre neral finding the kingdom without troops and almost defert- becomes ed, became master of it in the space of a fortnight. Had he master of that kingftopped there, perhaps . Navarre would have been ftill at this dom. day annexed in deed, as it is in name only, to the crown of France, fince the Spaniards were unable to expel Henry d'Albret, from whom the kings of France of the houfe of Bourbon are descended. But the desire of acquiring fame, He enters or procuring the king's advantage, carried Lesparre to enter Spain. the province of Guipufcoa, and befiege Logrogno. The regents of Spain had no thoughts of recovering Navarre. But when they faw the French invading Spain itfelf, they Guicciard, affembled their forces to ftop their progrefs. The malecon-Herbert. tents themfelves lately vanquished, accepting a general pardon, led all their troops to the regents. Lesparre seeing an Is beaten, army much stronger than his coming against him, would and taken have retired, but was fo clofely purfued that he was forced prifoner. to come to a battle, wherein he was defeated and taken prifoner. The lofs of this battle occafioned the lofs of Navarre, which the Spaniards recovered in lefs time than the French had conquered it. Thus the king of France had the mortification to lofe his army to no purpole, and flagrantly difcoyer to the emperor how he flood affected towards him.

167

L 4

The

up Robert de la Mark against the emperor. Bellai. Guicciard. P. Daniel, 1521.

168

The fame time that he invaded Navarre, he raifed Charles an enemy from another quarter, namely, Robert de la Francis firs Mark prince of Sedan and fovereign of Bouillon, who believing to have caufe to complain of the emperor, for a denial of juffice to the young princes of Chimay 2, whole guardian he was, implored the king of France's protection. Very probably, Francis had offered it before it was defired. However, Robert de la Mark, feeing himfelf supported by the king, was fo bold as to fend a defiance to the emperor, who was then at the diet of Worms. Shortly after, the earl of Fleuranges, eldeft fon of la Mark, put himfelf at the head of four or five thousand men 3 levied in France, and befieged Vircton, a place in Luxemburg belonging to the emperor.

Theemperor calls upon the king of England to aid him againft France. Herbert. an ambaffador to Francis. Bellai. Mezerai. °2 v

Who caufes la Mark to lay down his arms, March 22.

Leo X. joins with France for the conqueft of Naples. Guicciard. Mezerai.

Then it was that Charles, who had with reluctance agreed to the league of London, thought proper however to make use of it in fummoning the king of England to affift him, as obliged by the treaty, fince it was evident, the king of France had raifed him this enemy, Henry, prepoffeffed by the cardinal, was glad of a pretence to caft the blame of the Henry fends rupture upon the French king. Mean while, to proceed according to the articles of the league, he fent an ambaffador to require him to forbear all hoftility against the emperor, not only in Luxemburg but also in Navarre. Francis replied, he was not author of the war between Robert de la Mark and the emperor, and all he could do was to forbid his subjects to serve or affift la Mark. As to Navarre, it would have been needlefs to answer, fince it was now out of his power to re-enter it. He performed his promife with regard to the war of Luxemburg, and Fleuranges difbanded his army. Francis took care not openly to fupport the duke of Bouillon, for fear of affording Henry, who had offered his mediation, a pretence to declare for the emperor. I shall purfue this affair, when I have fpoken of those of Italy, which are of no lefs importance.

> In the beginning of this, or perhaps before the end of the last year, Leo X. concluded with the French ambaffador refiding at Rome, a treaty whereby he joined in a league with Francis for the conqueft of Naples. The treaty ran, that all that part of the kingdom of Naples lying between the eccle-

A lord named d'Aimeries, had feized the town of Hierge, in Ardennes, belonging to those princes; and d'Aimeries was fupported by the emperor.

P. Daniel, tom. VII. p. 437.

a Three thousand foot, and four hundred horfe. Ibid.

fiaflical

fiaffical flate and Gariglian fhould remain to the pope: and the reft should be for Henry the king's fecond fon; but during his minority, the kingdom fhould be governed by the pope's legate, who should refide at the city of Naples. Whatever the pope's intention was in making this treaty, it may be almost affirmed, he acted with infincerity, because it must have been very difadvantageous to him for the fame prince to hold Milan and Naples. What may most probably be conjectured is, that his intention was to deal by Francis I. as Ferdinand king of Arragon had done by Lewis XII, when he made much the fame partition with that prince. At least Francis, who had often experienced what Francis puts the pope was capable of, could never believe he really in- off the ra-tification tended to affift him in that conquest. Wherefore he delay- of it. ed the ratification of the treaty, to gain time to confider ferioully of the affair.

Leo X. finding the time for, ratifying the treaty was ex- The pope pired, fuspected the king of projecting with the emperor fome leagues with the emperor. agreement prejudicial to the holy fee. They who act not Mezerai. fincerely, are ready to think others like themfelves. Howe- Guicciard. ver, the king of France's affected delays afforded the pope a motive or pretence to conclude another treaty with the emperor, to drive the French out of the Milanefe, and reftore the Sforzas. As he continued at once fecret negotiations with the emperor and the king of France, it would be very difficult to know his real intent, if there was not a notable difference between the two treaties just mentioned. That with the French ambaffador concerned a chimerical project, the execution whereof was almost impracticable in the prefent juncture of affairs, and befides, really contrary to his true intereft, whereas the other was to his advantage, and agreeable to the projects he had formed. So, probably the first was made only to procure better terms from the emperor. Befides, he had been ever wont to have, as they fay, two ftrings to his bow, which he confidered as the grand mystery of politicks. His treaty with the emperor was no lefs advantageous, than that he would have made with the king of France, The chief articles were thefe ;

That the pope and emperor fhould join their forces to ex- Article of pel the French out of the Milanefe, and reftore Francefco the treaty of the league. Sforza. That prince was then at Trent, having retired thi- Guicciard. ther a little before his brother Maximilian was disposselled of his dominions.

That

THE HISTORY

170

1521.

That Parma and Placentia fhould be reftored to the ~ church.

> That the inhabitants of the Milanefe fhould provide themfelves with falt only at Cervia, a town in the ecclefiaftical ftate.

> That the emperor fhould aid the pope to conquer Ferrara.

> That the fum the emperor gave the pope for the kingdom of Naples should be augmented.

That the emperor fhould protect the family of Medici.

That he fhould grant to the cardinal de Medici a penfion of ten thousand ducats, upon the archbishoprick of Toledo.

That Alexander de Medici, natural fon to Lorenzo late duke of Urbino, fhould have in the kingdom of Naples, lands to the value of ten thousand ducats a year.

They prepare for war. Guicciard.

Colonna general of the league. Attempts Milan, and Como. Guicciard.

The treaty was kept fo private that it came not to Francis's knowledge, till the two allies were going to invade the Milanefe. Mean while they concerted proper measures to ac-complifib their defigns. The pope, who had already fix thousand Switzers in his fervice, took care to augment his forces on divers pretences. The emperor ordered the viceroy of Naples to keep the troops of that kingdom ready to march upon the first notice, and at the fame time caufed levies to be made in Germany to reinforce his army in Italy. Profper Colonna was declared general of the league.

Whilft Francis continued in a fatal fecurity, and left the upon Genoa, Milanefe destitute of troops, never imagining he should be attacked in Italy, because he thought himself sure of the pope, the two allies were contriving to feize at once, Milan, Genoa, and Como, before they proclaimed war against him. For the first of these projects they employed Hieronimo Morone fenator of Milan, who being fuspected by the French, was banished the city. Morone having assembled a great number of exiles b in the neighbourhood of Milan, Lescun, who commanded in the absence of his brother Lautrec the governor, fallied out of Milan with fome troops, and purfued the exiles to Reggio, where they had retired, and even demanded of the governor, to deliver them into his hands. The governor refufing, Lefcun withdrew, and posted himfelf about ten miles from Reggio, within the pope's territories, and lay encamped ten or twelve days. Then the pope, > b Thefe were fome of the emperor's adherents that had been banished by the French. Guicciard.

who only wanted a pretence to declare against France, called 1521. a confiftory, greatly aggravated Lefcun's affront, and declared that in revenge he was refolved to join with the emperor. But he had already done fo, and the affair of Reggio was a mere pretence to delude the cardinals.

Whilft Lefcun was at Reggio, Adorno banifhed from Guicciard. Genoa attempted to furprife that city with fome gallies fupplied by the pope and the viceroy of Naples, but could not fucceed. A few days after, Lescun discovered a plot to furprife Como, and was fully informed that the pope and the emperor were the authors. It is therefore evident, that in cafe they had fucceeded in their defigns, they would have made no fcruple to appear the aggreffors.

Lescun no longer doubting that there was a defign to in- Francis orvade the Milanefe, acquainted the king, and withal fent for ders a levy of Switzers, the four thousand Switzers, intended for Milan, who were and fends ready to march. Francis furprifed at the danger the Mila- Lautrec to nefe was in, speedily ordered a levy of twenty thousand Milan. Guiceiard, Switzers, and fent Lautrec to Milan, promifing he fhould want for nothing. But this promife was but very ill performed.

Mean while, Prosper Colonna having assembled at Reg-gio the army of the allies, besieged Parma, where Lescun had frees Par-ma. now thrown in fome troops. But before he could take the Bellai. place, Lautrec having received the fupplies he expected from Mezerai. switzerland, forced him to raise the fiege, and purfued him the fiege. even beyond the borders of the Milanefe. As he imagined Parma de-Parma to be out of danger, he had drawn out Lescun with clares for the garrifon to ftrengthen his army. But no fooner was the pope. Lescun out of the city, than the inhabitants declared for the pope, and erected the church's colours on the walls.

But this was not the only misfortune Lautrec was to be ex- Lautrec is posed to during the campaign. Prefently after, he was de- deferted by the Switzers. ferted by the twenty thousand Switzers he had lately received, Colonna and conftrained to retire to Milan, where Profper Colonna purfues him purfued him in his turn with all poffible diligence. Where- clofely. Guicciard. upon Lautrec despairing of defending Milan, quitted the Lautric town, after fupplying the caftle with ammunition, and with- quits Milan, drew to Como, where the four thoufand Switzers he still had forfook him and returned home, becaufe he had no money to pay them. So, Colonna, taking poffession of Milan, and Colonna went from thence to make other conquests which Lautrec takes it. could not oppose. In a word, Francis lost the whole duchy of Milan except a few places,

171

Probably,

Death of Leo X. Guicciard. The army of the allies difband.

The duke of Ferrara recovers his towns. La Rovere takes poffeffion of Urbino. Guicciard.

the Low Countries, Rellai.

Probably, Lautrec would not have been able to support himfelf long in Italy, had not the pope's death on the ift of December afforded him fome respite. Leo X. is faid to die with joy at the news of the good fuccefs of the league. Some however affirm, his death was haftened by poifon . However this be, the news of the pope's death was no fooner fpread, but the troops he maintained difbanded themfelves. Of the twelve thousand Switzers he had in the army of the allies, but fifteen hundred remained, and the Florentines retired to their own country. Thus Profper Colonna found himself in a few days in as ill a situation as Lautrec. The college of cardinals, not knowing what courfe to take, gave no orders, but deferred every thing till the election of a new pope. Mean while, the duke of Ferrara recovered fome of his towns in la Romagna, and Francesco Maria della Rovere took poffession again of the duchy of Urbino. If Lautrec had then been supplied with the men and money he was promifed, he would have doubtless expelled the imperialists out of Milan. But Francis I. entirely neglecting the affairs of Italy, thought only of defending himfelf in Flanders and Picardy, where he was vigoroufly attacked. He still held however in Italy, Genoa, Cremona, the caftles of Milan and Novarra, with fome fmall places on the lake Gorda.

Campaign of Whilft these things passed in Italy, the war at length was begun in the Low Countries, in a manner very difadvantageous to France. The troops raifed by Robert de la Mark to befiege Vireton being difbanded, Francis thought he had fatisfied the emperor and the king of England. It was indeed fufficient take from Henry all pretence of declaring against him, fince by the treaty of league, in case one of the allies was invaded, the reft were not to declare against the aggreffor, till being fummoned to defift from the war, he should have refused. Francis was summoned and had defifted, confequently Henry had no caufe to complain. But it was otherwife with the emperor, who was not contented with fo flight a fatisfaction. He forbore however to complain of the king of France, but was refolved to be revenged of Robert de la Mark, who had dared to fend him a defiance. Besides, he confidered, if France undertook to defend that prince, as it was very likely, he would incur the blame of > c Guicciardini fays, it was fecretly whilpered, but upon conjectures only, that the French king had him poifoned by means of one Barnabo Malafpina, his chaplain, who was imprifon-

> > 5

ed on fuspicion ; but the profecution was dropped, and he was difcharged, by the cardinal de Medici, out of respect for the king of France. 1. 14.

the

the rupture, and this was what the emperor and cardinal 1521. Wolfey chiefly defired, in order to use that inducement to perfuade Henry to declare against France. So, Charles having prepared an army, gave the command to Henry count of Naffau, who entering the territories of Robert de la Mark, took and razed feveral places. Francis was patient, choofing rather to forfake his ally, than give the king of England a pretence to arm against him. Then Robert feeing himself without refuge, made his fubmiffion to the emperor, who granted him a truce for fix weeks. Mean while, though the emperor had to deal only with a petty prince unable to refift him, and of whom he had been fufficiently revenged, he continued to reinforce his army. Francis feeing fo many troops in the neighbourhood of Champagne, eafily perceived, they were not folely defigned against Robert de la Mark, and that he might be taken unprovided, unless he prepared for his defence. Mean while, he represented to the king of The king of England, that he could not avoid taking up arms, in order France's reto refift the emperor, who was preparing to attack him. prefentation Henry answered, he would fide with neither, but as a com- who offers to mon friend offered to be their umpire. Adding, if they become mewould both fend their plenipotentiaries to Calais the begin- Bellai. ning of August, cardinal Wolfey should be there to act in Herbert. his name as mediator. Charles readily accepted fo advan- Act. Pub. tageous a propofal, fince he and the cardinal underftood one XIII.p.748. another. As for Francis he durft not reject it, though he had no reason to be pleased with the king of England. But he did not yet know that Wolfey was wholly devoted to the emperor. It was therefore agreed, that the plenipotentiaries A congress of the two monarchs, the pope's nuncio, and the cardinal at Calais mediator, should meet at Calais the 4th of August.

Mean while, the lord of Liques d having levied an army Theemperer at his own charge, as he affirmed, furprifed Mortagne, and tries to lay St. Amand, in the Tournaifis, on pretence of fome claim of the blame of the rupture his house. The emperor affected to confider this as a pri- upon the vate quarrel, in which he had no concern, though Liques's French army was composed of his fubjects. His/aim was to oblige Bellai, Francis to take fome flep which might give occasion to accule him of being the aggreffor. Herein he only imitated that prince who had attacked him under the name of Robert de la Mark. But some time after, the governor of Flanders He discovere befieging Tournay in form, it was not possible to put so fa- himself by vourable a construction upon that siege, especially as what Tournay to be belieged.

4 Lord of Hainault.

paffed

174 1521.

P. Daniel. Pol. Virg. Hall.

Conference at Calais. Mezerai. Act. Pub. 750.

P. 749.

p. 750. Hall. Stow. Henry and - fincerity.

passed then in Italy left the emperor no room to diffemble any longer. It is certain, Francis had been furprifed as well in Italy as in Champagne and Flanders. He had intended no doubt to attack the emperor, but did not expect to be invaded first. For that reason he wanted time to prepare his army. Mean while, the imperialists took and razed the town of Ardres.

The time appointed for the congress of Calais ^c being come, cardinal Wolfey repaired thither with a numerous retinue f, and carried the great feal with him g. It appears XIII.p.748, in the collection of the publick acts, that he was furnished with feveral of the king's commissions, to be used as he should think proper. By the first, he was constituted the king's lieutenant general to adjust, as mediator, the differences between the emperor and the king of France. By a fecond, he was impowered to treat and conclude with Francis I. a renewal of the alliance. But probably this was only to fhow the French ambaffadors Henry's impartiality, and pretended defign to join with that prince, who should be found to be unjuftly attacked. By a third, he had power to conclude a league between England and the emperor, the pope, the king of France, or any other potentate whatever. Thus the cardinal Henry, without having yet examined on which fide the act not with blame lay, left it to his lieutenant to engage him in which party he pleafed. But very probably, his refolution was taken already, and the congress of Calais intended only to fhow he was not refolved, till after a strict information, and to caufe the blame of the rupture to be thrown on the king of France. All the proceedings of the cardinal mediator, difcovered, that he meant not to procure a peace between the two monarchs, but only to find the king his mafter a pretence to declare for the emperor.

> Whilft these affairs were negotiating at Calais, the imperialists befieged and took Mouzon in Champagne. Then they ravaged the country, and plundered the little town of e Which was July 25. In the mean time a fix weeks truce was appointed between the emperor and king of France. Rymer, tom. XIII. p. 748.

f He was attended by Charles Somerset, earl of Worcester, the lords St. John, Ferrers, and Herbert, the bishops of Durham and Ely, the primate of Armagh, fir Thomas Boleyn, fir John Peche, fir John Huffey, fir Henry Guildford, and many others.

He came to Dover the 8th of July, and failed to Calais the roth. Hall, fol. 86.

3 For which reason, many English were forced to go to him to receive their difpatches, and at home the conftituting of fheriffs was fuspended, &c. Which things were urged against him afterwards in his trial. Herbert, p. 44. Hall, fol. 88.

Aubanton,

OFENGLAND.

Aubanton, where the count of Naffau fuffered his foldiers to commit grievous outrages ; after which he laid fiege to Mezieres. Francis wanting time to affemble his army, could The empenot be ready till the end of September : which however was takes Moufoon enough to throw fuccours into Mezieres, and thereby zon, and force the count of Naffau to raife the fiege. The earl of St. ravages Champagne. Pol recovered Mouzon shortly after, and the count of Naffau, Bellai, retired into the earldom of Namur. Champagne being thus Mezerai. freed, Francis ordered his army to march into Flanders, P. Daniel, Siege of where the imperialists still continued the fiege of Tournay. Mezieres When his troops were drawn together, he affaulted Bapaume, raifed. Landrecy, Bouchain, and carried them. Afterwards hear-Hall. Herbert. ing, the emperor, who had headed his army, was retiring Conquests of towards Valenciennes, he refolved to go and attack him, but Francis in loft the opportunity by his own fault. It is faid, if he had the Low been as fpeedy as he might, and ought to have been, he Countries. He miffes would have infallibly defeated the emperor, who giving all the opportuover for loft, was retired with a hundred horfe only, quit- nity of deting his army, not to be a witness of their destruction. Upon feating the emperor. this occafion, Francis I. gave the duke of Bourbon, constable Hedifobliges of France, great caufe of difgust, by fetting the duke of the consta-Alençon at the head of the vanguard, though that poft pro- ble Bourbon. perly belonged to the conftable, when the king was in the army. It is faid, the king gave the conftable that mortification, to oblige his mother the duchefs of Angoulême, who hated him. But he had too much reason afterwards to repent his complaifance to his mother.

At the very time Francis I. was attacked in Champagne, Campaign in he fent an army into Navarre, under the command of admi-Bellai. ral Bonnivet, who arrived about the end of September, at Hall. St. John de Luz. At first, he pretended to march towards P. Daniel. Pampelona. Then, after feveral marches and counter Bonnivet marches, he fuddenly approached, and befieged Fontarabia. takes Fon-When the breach was made, he ordered the town to be furi - Oft. 18. oufly ftormed, but however was bravely repulfed. But the garrison, being little able to stand a second assault, furrendered by capitulation. This conqueft was of very great importance, Fontarabia being one of the keys of Spain.

Whilf the war was vigoroufly continued in Italy, Cham- Account of pagne, Flanders, Picardy, Navarre, cardinal Wolfey was the congress buly at Calais in treating with the plenipotentiaries of the Hall. emperor and the king of France. The congress lasted ten Herbert. weeks, and the parties could not be brought to agree. In all appearance, the mediator, instead of closing, helped rather to widen, the breach. It was long debated to know which which had begun the war. This was the chief point with refpect to Wolfey, who intended to throw the blame on the king of France. Afterwards, when the differences themfelves came to be confidered, the propofals of the emperor's plenipotentiaries showed a peace was still very remote. They demanded reftitution of the duchy of Burgundy, and abolition of the homage due to the crown of France, for Flanders and Artois. The only reason they alledged to support their last pretension was, that it was unbecoming for an emperor to do homage to a king. These two propositions were of fuch a nature, that Francis would hardly have accepted them, even after the loss of many battles. On the other hand, the French ambaffadors having notice of what paffed in Italy, earneftly demanded reftitution of Milan, and that the emperor fhould withdraw his troops from before Tournay. They infifted moreover upon the reftitution of Navarre, to which the emperor was bound by the treaty of Noyon. If the emperor had been afraid of Henry's joining with the king of France, he might have granted part of these demands without being forced to difmember his dominions. But Francis could not refign Burgundy, without letting the enemy into the heart of his kingdom, nor the homage of Flanders and Artois, without difhonour. But as the emperor was fecure of the king of England, he perfifted in his demands, without any abatements.

175 1521.

Wolfey declares he despairs of a peace. Treaty of little confequence. Act. Pub. XIII.p.752. Hall. Stow. Herbert.

The cardinal's pride.

Act. Pub.

After the mediator had long feigned to endeavour only to procure a peace, he declared, he faw no way to fucceed. Then, he prefented to the plenipotentiaries a treaty to fign, containing articles of little importance, namely, that the French and Flemings should have liberty to fish for herrings till the end of January : that the two contending monarchs fhould enjoin their subjects to pursue no vessel into the ports or harbours belonging to the king of England, and commit no hostilities within the territories of the faid king, during the war: that the pope's nuncio, and the plenipotentiaries at Calais might freely retire with all their train, without receiving any injury from the troops of the two monarchs : that the king of England, and the cardinal legate his lieutenant should be the confervators of these articles, to be ratified within ten days. We have here a very fenfible proof of the cardinal's infolence, who, in a treaty drawn by himfelf, prefumed thus to fet himfelf upon a level with his mafter, by being declared confervator with the king. These conventions XIII.p.755. were ratified by the two monarchs the 2d and 11th of October, and there appears not in the collection of the publick

176 1521. lick acts, the least trace of any other treaty made at Calais at 1521. that time.

Du Bellai h however fays in his memoirs, that the king Remark on of England having fent ambaffadors to Francis I. during the a paffage of congrefs of Calais, they laboured fo effectually, that at length memoirs, it was agreed, the emperor fhould raife the fiege of Tournay; and withdraw his troops out of the Milanefe; that Francis fhould retire into France with his army, and their differences be referred to the arbitration of the king of England. He adds, after these conventions, each thought the peace concluded, but that upon the emperor's receiving news of the taking of Fontarabia, he demanded, before the treaty was ratified, the reftitution of that place, and upon Francis's refufal, the treaty remained unexecuted. But very probably, this illustrious author, who was better acquainted with the particulars of the war, than of the negotiations, was mifinformed. First, because the collection of the publick acts, mentions not this pretended treaty, though we fee there another of much lefs confequence concluded at the fame time. Secondly, we do not find in the collection, any embaily from the king of England, either to the French king or the emperor, in the time which must have preceeded this treaty. Thirdly, there is no likelihood, the emperor would have withdrawn his troops out of the Milanefe, that is, would have reftored Milan to France, and loft the hopes of acquiring Tournay, which was now reduced to extremities, for the bare advantage of feeing Francis retire into his own kingdom. In fhort, it may have been eafily perceived, Henry was very far from the thoughts of forcing the emperor to yield to these terms, and it will still be more plainly perceived by what follows. Add to all thefe confiderations, that feeing the regard the emperor and the king of France had for cardinal Wolfey, it is not likely they fhould conclude a treaty without his knowledge, and by the ministry of other ambaifadors, whilst he was at Calais to do the office of mediator. It may be, these proposals were made to Francis, and he was fo blind as to imagine they would take place, because he was yet ignorant of the fecret engagements of the king of England and his minister, with the emperor, and because such a report was spread in the court of France. Be this as it will, after the taking of Fontarabia, the war continued without inter-h Martin du Bellai, brother to cardinal John Bellai, was much efteemed by Francis I, and employed by him in his wars, and in important embadi s. VOL. VI.

He writ memoirs, containing the most memorable transactions under the reign of Francis I. to the reign of Henry II.

M

mission,

178

Mezerai.

Herbert.

Bruges.

Hall.

Stow.

Herbert.

treaty with him againft

France.

Herbert.

Mary pro-

emperor.

Henry's falle poli-ticks.

Hall.

Herbert.

to the cmperor at ',

miffion, and with great animofity. Francis I. became mafter 1521. of Heldin about the beginning of November, and Tournay furrendered to the emperor by capitulation.

Mean while cardinal Wolfey still remained at Calais, un-Wolfey goes der colour of fearching for fome farther expedient to procure a peace between the two monarchs. He frequently fent exprefles to both, with propofals which he knew they would not accept. At last, feigning a defire to gain time, he went himfelf to the emperor at Bruges i, where he was received with as much respect as if he had been king of England k. Here he concluded with the pope and the emperor a league and makes a against France, by virtue of the powers he had brought with him. By the treaty the pope engaged to thunder the church's centures against the king of France. Henry was to invade him with an army of forty thousand men. The emperor and Henry obliged themfelves to break all their en-The princess gagements with him. Moreover, Henry promised to give in marriage to the emperor the princels Mary, affianced to the mifed to the dauphin. These were the chief articles agreed upon by the emperor and the cardinal the 24th of November 1521, which were to be ratified within three months. But they engaged to be fecret till the time of performance. Thus was Henry perfuaded by his minister to oppress his ally the king of France, who had done him no injury. The only thing he could complain of, was, that Francis had lately permitted the duke of Albany to return into Scotland, doubtlefs becaufe he perceived the cardinal was meditating fomething against him. It is in vain to inquire what interest Henry had to declare against France, and cause the ballance to incline to the emperor's fide : no other can be found but the cardinal's, who wanted to be pope at Francis's coft. The death of Leo X. haftened by poifon; as feveral affirm, and happening during these transactions, has made some suspect that Wolfey was concerned in it, and the more, becaufe he afpired to be fucceffor to a pope much younger than himfelf; but no proof was ever produced. Certainly Henry would have acquired more glory in continuing umpire of the peace between the two contending monarchs, and in procuring tranquillity to all Europe, than by all the conquests, his minister flattered him with ¹.

> i On August 12, being attended by four hundred and fixty horfe. Hall, fol. 87. Stow, p. 514. k The emperor met him a mile out of town. Hall, fol. 87. Herbert, 2

P. 43. I Wolfey staid thirteen days at Bruges. He returned to England, and landed at Dover, Novemb. 27. Hall, fol. 88.

Hitherto

Hitherto cardinal Wolfey had pufhed his fortune to fuch a 1521. height, that it feemed difficult to make any addition to it. And yet all this was not capable to fatisfy him. His legatefhip had been prolonged for two years, the beginning of this legate's year. But he thought himfelf to be too much above all other power. legates, not to have a different commiffion from theirs. In Adl. Pub. April he procured from Leo X. a bull, impowering him to 739. and chaplains, forty notaries apoftolick, who fhould have the fame privileges as thofe made by the pope; to legitimate baftards, give degrees in arts, law, phyfick, and divinity, and grant all forts of difpenfations. In a word, not con- Abbey of tent with all the riches he poffeffed, or with the means given to whe had to increafe them inceffantly, he caufed alfo the Wolfey. rich abbey of St. Albans to be given him this year in com- p. 760, 7754 mendam.

It is no wonder, if, being arrived to fo high a degree of Difgrace and grandeur and riches, his pride increased in proportion. death of the duke of Though the king's blindness for him was inconceiveable, Buckingit was not fo with the courtiers, who faw but too plainly ham. how grossly he mifled his mafter, who placed fo great con-Hall, fidence in him. But none dared to take notice of it, fuch stow. was the dread of his haughty and revengeful temper. The Hollingth,] ! duke of Buckingham, fon of the duke of the fame name, who in the reign of Richard III. loft his head on the fcaffold, for endeavouring to procure the crown for Henry VII. fadly experienced how dangerous it was to difcover what was thought of that proud prelate. He happened one day to fay, in the hearing of one who betrayed him ", that in cafe the king died without iffue, he thought he had a right to the crown, and if ever he alcended the throne, his first care should be to punish the cardinal according to his deferts.

An inferior church fervant in popifh countries, who, under the fubdeacon, waits on the prieffs and deacons, lights the candles, carries the bread and wine, and pays other fervile attendance.

n Charles Knevet, his fleward, who was turned out of his place by the duke, upon the complaints of his tenants, was the perfon that informed againft the duke, and told the cardinal all the particulars which were alledged againft him. The firft thing that incenfed the cardinal, was his fpeaking againft the interview of the two kings as an idle expense, though no man made a greater figure there than himfelf. Herbert, p. 41. The reft of the witneffes against the duke were, Gilbert Perke, his chancellor, and John Delacourt, his confeffor. Hall, fol. 86. The words above mentioned, were fpoken by the duke, to George Nevil, lord Abergavenny, who, for concealment, was committed to the Tower, as was alfo. Henry Pole, lord Montague; and fir Edward Nevil, the. forefaid lord's brother, was forbid the king's prefence. Hollingfh. p. 863.

The

The duke's title was not altogether groundlefs, fince he was 1521. - descended from Anne of Gloucester, grandaughter to Edward III. Doctor Morton, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, preffed the duke his father to endeavour to feize the crown; but the duke chose rather to act for the earl of Richmond. than for himfelf, as was fhown in the reign of Richard III. What the fon had faid concerning his title, was therefore rather imprudent than criminal, fince he pretended not to the crown unlefs the king died without heirs. Indeed, his title might be ill grounded; but he had done nothing to fupport it. His crime then confifted only in what he had faid against the cardinal, who, for that reason, resolved to dispatch him. For that purpole, he gained fome of his domesticks, and learnt by their means that he had confulted a certain monk . who pretended to foretell things to come, and had conferred with him feveral times fince April, 1512. Probably, the duke, fond of his title, had inquired of the monk whether the king would die without children. And that was fufficient to give the cardinal occafion to mifconstrue all his proceedings. When he believed he had fufficient evidence against him, he began with depriving him of his two principal supports; namely, Henry Percy, earl of Northumberland, his fatherin-law, whom he fent to the Tower on fome pretence P, and Thomas Howard, earl of Surrey 9, his fon-in-law, on whom he conferred the government of Ireland to remove him from London. Prefently after the duke was apprehended r, and accused of high treason. The substance of his impeachment was, that he had feveral times confulted the monk concerning the fucceffion to the crown, and affected to make himfelf popular. The duke confessed he had talked fometimes with the monk; but denied it to be with the intent he was charged with. However, he was condemned to die as a traitor, which he could not bear to hear when the fentence was pronounced *. My lord of Norfolk, cried he, you have faid as a traitor should be faid unto, but I was never one. My lords, continued he, addreffing himfelf to the peers his judges, I nothing maligne for what you have done to me, but

> • One Nicolas Hopkins, prior of the Carthufian monastery of Hinton, near Briftol.: Hall, fol. 85, 86.

P For claiming certain wards, which he was forced to relinquish. Herbert, P. 40.

9 The cardinal bore the earl of Surrey a grudge, for having drawn his dagger at him on fome occasions. Hollingfh. p. 855.

· 12 - 1

r By fir Henry Marney, captain of the king's guard ; and brought to the Tower, April 16. Hall, fol. 85.

By the duke of Norfolk, who was for the time constituted high steward. He was brought to his tryal May 13, Hall.

Hall. Herbert. Stow. Hollingfh.

Hall.

180

OF ENGLAND.

the eternal God forgive you my death, and I do. I shall ne- 1521. ver fue to the king for life, howbeit he is a gracious prince, L and more grace may come from him than I defire. My lords and all my fellows I defire you to pray for me. When he faid he would not fue to the king for life, his meaning was, he thought it would be fruitlefs, knowing he was the cardinal's victim, who had an abfolute fway over the king. Indeed, the minister had so ordered it, that though all the peers of the realm had a right to affift at the trial, there were prefent only one duke, one marquis, feven earls, and twelve barons '; and probably, he had fecured the majority. All the favour the duke received was to be beheaded, inftead of dying the death of a traitor ". This execution was attended with loud murmurs among the people, and fatyrical libels against the cardinal, wherein was faid among other things, that it was not strange the fon of a butcher should delight in shedding blood. But this was all the revenge that was taken for this injustice. He was too deeply rooted in the king's mind, to fear these murmurs, which besides never reached the king's ears, all about him being either fpies or creatures of the cardinal.

The king was then wholly intent upon one affair, namely, Affairs of the war he had refolved to make upon France, as if his glory Scotland. Buchanan. and grandeur had depended upon the ruin of that kingdom, Herbert. whereas his true interest was to support France against the emperor, who was now grown too powerful. He was already formidable to all Europe, even without the affiftance of England, how much more by his union with that kingdom ? this was owing to cardinal Wolfey's ambition, whofe counfels to his mafter were always felf-interested. Probably, France was going to be reduced to a very fad condition, it being hardly poffible for her to refift fo potent enemies, who were to invade her from feveral quarters. 'Francis I. imagined however he had still one refuge by means of the Scots,

* Namely, the duke of Suffolk, the marquis of Dorfet, the earls of Wor-cefter, Devonshire, Effex, Shrewsbury, Kent, Oxford, and Derby; the lords St. John, Delaware, Fitzwarren, Willoughby, Broke, Cobham, Herbert, and Morley. Hall.

" He was executed on Tower Hill, May 17, 1521, and was buried in the . church of the Augustines, in Broadftreet, London. Edward Stafford, defcended of Edmund, earl of Stafford, who married Anne, daughter of Tho- - Baron. vol. I. p. 171.

mas of Woodftock, fon of Edward III. left (by Alianore his wife, one of the daughters of Henry Percy, earl of Nor-thumberland) one fon, Henry, and three daughters; Elizabeth, married to Thomas Howard, duke of Norfolk ; Catherine, to Ralph Nevil, earl of Westmoreland; and Mary, to George Nevil, lord Abergavenny. With this duke of Buckingham, ceafed that great place of high constable of England, hereditary in his family. Dugdale's

who

181

Buchanan. Hall. Hollingfh.

Progrefs of the reformation in Germany.

Sleidan.

congress of Calais having plainly discovered Henry's partiality to the emperor, he made no doubt of its being an introduction to a rupture. In this belief, though he had engaged to detain the duke of Albany in France, he thought proper to keep him no longer, not thinking himfelf bound to perform a promise, the motive whereof was now no more, namely, the mutual friendship between him and Henry. He permitted therefore the duke of Albany to return into Scotland, or rather fent him back, in hopes he would employ part of the English forces on the borders of the two kingdoms. He very justly expected this fervice from a prince who was devoted to him, and looked upon his fettlement in France as much more folid than that in Scotland, where his regency was to last but few years. The duke therefore departed for Scotland, and arriving the 30th of October 1521, after a four year's ablence, refumed the regency. As he intended to ferve France to the utmost of his power, his first care was to oblige the earl of Angus, the queen's fpoule, to guit the kingdom, deeming him one of the king of England's principal adherents, and yet the earl took refuge in France.

Whilft the chriftian princes were all employed in their temporal concerns, the reformation made great progrefs in Germany by means of Luther's writings, which were read with great eagerness. Luther was fatisfied at first with attacking the fale of indulgences, then the indulgences themfelves, and the pope's power to grant them. This naturally led him to examine the grounds of the papal authority; and being perfuaded there was nothing to support it in scripture, he writ upon that fubject without any regard to the Roman pontiff. He attacked likewife in his writings the celibacy of priefts, monaftick vows, and private maffes. Though at the time I am now speaking of, namely, the beginning of the year 1521, he had preached and wrote against the pope but three years, he had gained many followers, and ftill more enemies, not only by his novel opinions, but allo by his fharp and fatyrical ftile, wherein he threw off all ceremony with respect to the church of Rome. The book that made most noise was entitled, concerning the Babylonish captivity. In this book the popes were not fpared.

In the feveral answers which appeared as well against this as the other books of Luther, the decretals of the popes, and the works of Thomas Aquinas were urged in favour of the papal authority. This gave him occasion, in his replies, to ridicule those, who in defence of the papal power, alledged ledged the decifions of the popes themfelves, and the teftimony of Thomas Aquinas, who was canonized for carrying the pope's authority as high as poffible. Befides, he did not fhew much regard for that author's writings; which probably, was the chief thing that incenfed Henry VIII. against him. As Henry had much studied the works of Thomas Aquinas, and from thence properly had acquired all his theological knowledge, he could not bear to fee his favorite author thus contemned w. He thought himself therefore a match for Luther and able to confute his writings. But as Leo X. had by a bull expresly forbid the reading of his works, and as an answer necessarily supposed the perusal; cardinal Wolfey, applied to the pope for a power to permit fuch to read them, as defired it with intent to confute them. This was granted him by a brief dated the 17th of Act Pub. April 1521, the pope little thinking who the perfon was XIII.p.742. that was going to fupport his caufe.

OF ENGLAND.

Henry finished in September his book against Luther, Henry entitled, concerning the seven facraments, He defended in-against dulgences, papal authority, the number of facraments, and Luther, other articles combated by Luther, proceeding upon Thomas Herbert. Aquinas's principles as upon undeniable truths. Very pro- Hall. bably he was affifted by cardinal Wolfey in composing this the pope; work, which was prefented to the pope in full confiftory x. Leo X. who was ftill living; received it with great joy, and fpoke of it in the highest strains of flattery. making no scruple to compare it to the works of St. Augustine and St. Jerom. This is no wonder. A book composed by a great king in defence of the papal authority, could not be too much efteemed by a pope. A few days after, Leo affembled the cardinals, to confult with them, after what manner he should requite the king of England's fervice to the church. After a long debate, they refolved at last to honour that monarch w Wolfey alfo much read Thomas Aquinas, and was therefore called Thomisticus. Pol. Virg.

* The manner of delivery was thus: dr. John Clarke, dean of Windfor, our king's ambaffador, appearing in full confistory, the pope knowing the glorious present he brought, first gave him his foot, and then his check to kifs; after which he received the book, and made a fpeech. This copy, richly bound, is kept in the Vatican, where lord Herbert fays, he remembers to have feen it. The book is dedicated to the pope. "In this address your " holinefs may be furprifed (fays the " king) to find a perfon bred to war, " and the bufinefs of state, engaged " in a controverfy of this nature, with " a man that has fpent his whole time " in the improvements of learning." Some have thought that this book was composed, at least in part, by Fisher, bishop of Rochester, Stephen Gardiner, and fir Thomas Moor. Herbert, p. 38. Fiddes, p. 251. M 4' with 1521. S who gives Henry the title of defender of the faith. Act. Pub. XIII.p.756.

183 1521.

p. 758.

1522. Henry's

with the glorious title of defender of the faith y. In' confequence of this refolution, the pope ordered a bull to be drawn, conferring that title on Henry, and all the kings of Engr land his fucceffors 2. I shall not repeat here the magnificent encomiums the pope gave the king in this bull, and in a letter of thanks for his book *. It may be eafily imagined, he spared not the most extravagant expressions to flatter a prince, who was fo fond of being flattered, and of whom he flood in need, his nuntio being then at Calais, negotiating with cardinal Wolfey a league against France b.

I have already spoke of this league which was really con------- cluded at Bruges. Henry founded his joining with the emperor upon Francis's having been the aggreffor, by encoumaking war raging Robert de la Mark to take up arms. But befides that uponFrance, Francis denied he was concerned in that undertaking, and had even obliged Robert to defift, it was evident the emperor had prevented him, by joining in a league with the pope, though their league was not fo foon made known. The fecret attempts upon Como, Milan, Genoa, and the > y It was debated whether he fhould be ftiled protector, or defender of the Roman church; or, of the apostolick fee; or, the apoftolical, or orthodox king. But defender of the faith was at laft pitched upon. This title had formerly been enjoyed by fome of our kings his predeceffors. Spelman. Fuller, in his church h flory fays, there went a tradition, that Patch, the king's fool, perceiving the king very jocund one day, afked him the reafon, and when the king told him it was becaufe of his new tile, defender of the faith, the fool made this arch reply, prithee, good Harry, let thee and I defend one another, and let the faith alone to defend itself. Fiddes life of Wolfey, p. 248.

* The beginning and end of this bull is engraven from the original, with the very hand writing of the cardinals to it, in the XIIIth volume of the Fædera, P. 756.

a Among other expressions in this letter, there are these words : quasi re-putantes, non fine permissu divino, erupiffe adversus Chrifti ecclesiam, luterianam hanc impietatem, ut ipla majore fua cum gloria talem propugnatorem & defensorem sortiri possit. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 758.

b This year 1521, muskets were invented, which du Beliai fays, were, first used in this war. --- This year alfo, it being observed there was a great decay of tillage and hufbandry, occasioned by the many inclosures made by the nobility and gentry, who, within fifty years, had turned most of their lands into pasture, and kept them in their own hands; from whence, among other inconveniencies, it followed, that the number of husbandmen, and perfons capable of defending the country, was very much leffened ; many towns and villages were depopulated; and the prices of wool and meat were very much enhanced, as being engroffed by perfons who were not obliged to fell : to remedy all this, the king revived the statutes made against inclosures, and iffued out his commiffions to juffices of peace, and other magistrates, to see them put in execution. Stow, p. 512. Hollingfh. p. 862.—The fea overflowing the dikes of Holland, drowned feventy two villages, and above a hundred thousand people .---- Alfo there was fo great a dearth in England, that wheat was fold for twenty shillings a quarter. Stow, P. 514.

open war in the Milanefe, by which the king of France loft 1522. that duchy, were clear evidences that the league was concluded before Robert de la Mark's affair. Henry pretended Hall. alfo to have against Francis another cause of complaint, Stow. Buchanan. which however had no better foundation; namely, that contrary to his promife, he had permitted the duke of Albany to return into Scotland. But if it is confidered that the duke arrived not in his own country till the 30th of October, and that the league of Bruges was figned the 24th of November, it will be easy to perceive the league was already refolved before Henry could know that the duke of Albany was returned into Scotland. But though, upon the first notice, he had taken a hafty refolution to join with the pope and the emperor, was that a just cause to proced to a war, which would probably ruin France? The truth is, thefe were only pretences to cover the injustice of a war undertaken by Henry for the cardinal's interest, and perhaps without knowing himfelf the real motives of that minister's proceedings.

Mean while, Henry perceiving the duke of Albany would Henry fends embarras him if he continued in Scotland, attempted a fe- of Albany to cond time to drive him from thence. To that purpofe, he go out of fent Clarenceux his herald, with orders to upbraid him with Scotland. breach of promife, and with returning into Scotland to mar-Herbert, ry the queen dowager, and deprive the young king of the crown. The pretended reafon of this last charge, was, that the queen dowager being defirous to have her marriage with the earl of Angus annulled, the duke of Albany had feconded her fuit at the court of Rome . The duke answered he was returned into Scotland, by the invitation of the great men: that he had never done any thing to give occasion to sufpect him of afpiring to the crown, neither had he ever any fuch thought: that indeed, he had countenanced the queen's fuit, but without any defign to marry her having a wife of his own.

Henry was not fatisfied with fummoning the regent, but He wit to fent alfo a letter to the parliament of Scotland, containing the parlia-ment upon the fame accufations against the duke of Albany, and a charge the fame to the flates to expel him the kindom. The fubftance of the account. parliament's answer was: that what had been reported to ment's his majefty concerning the duke of Albany's return into answer.

c She was offended, it feems, at his leaving her at Harbottle, and very much nettled at the love he bore to a certain Scotch lady. She alledged, a-mong other things, at the court of Rome, that she heard her husband James IV. was living three years after Floddon field, and therefore not dead when she married the earl, fo much did that report prevail. Herbert, p. 50. Scotland.

Act. Pub. XIII.p.761. Feb. 11.

Scotland, to take forcible poffeffion of the king's perfon, was utterly false: that the duke did nothing with regard to the king, that could breed the least fuspicion, fince he did not fo much as offer to change any of his domefticks, without the confent of the states, and that it was with the queen's advice and confent, that they had taken care of the guardianfhip and education of the king : that they could not believe the duke had ever intended to put away his wife and marry the queen, or that the queen had any thoughts of efpoufing the duke: that as for the treaty with the king of France, to hinder the duke of Albany's return into Scotland; it was never communicated to them, neither had they any knowledge of it: that they could not help thinking fuch a treaty very ftrange, fince they rather imagined, his majefty fhould have follicited the duke to return to defend the king his nephew against his rebellious fubjects, whereas they faw with grief, it was he who fomented the rebellion : that if it continued thus, they did not fee how it was possible to keep a good understanding between the two kingdoms : that however, if he would be pleafed to fend away the bifhop of Dunkeld from his court, and without interpoling in the affairs of Scotland, leave to the regent and ftates the care of governing the kingdom, a truce might be concluded till the embaffy that was to be fent to him, was ready. But that, in cafe he would have no truce, unless they expelled the regent, they would endeavour to defend themfelves in the beft manner they could.

The queen of Scotland's letter to the king her brother. Herbert.

Henry finds means to avoid a war with Scotland. Buchanan. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh. Queen Margaret, to whom the king her brother had likewife writ upon the fame fubject, fent an anfwer, fharply expoftulating with him for giving ear to the report concerning her marriage with the duke of Albany. She freely owned, it was with her confent and advice that the duke was recalled, adding, if he had not been fo unkind a brother, fhe fhould have had no occasion to feek the protection of a firanger.

Henry could not expect any other answer, fince he was confcious to himself; that his accufations against the regent of Scotland were only affected pretences to complain indirectly of the king of France. He ordered however the lord Dacres^d to march into Scotland with five hundred men, and proclaim on the borders, that if the Scots made not peace with him by such a time^e, it should be to their peril. But

d Warden of the West marches. Herbert. e By the first of March. Hollingfhead, p. 872.

he

he did not support this bravado f. His fole aim was to 1522. furnish his party in Scotland with a pretence to refuse to ferve the regent, in cafe he attempted to make a diversion in England in favour of France. And in this he was not difappointed. In October following, the regent of Scotland raifing an army to make an inroad into England, was no fooner come to the borders, but many of the lords refufed to attend any farther, alledging, they were unwilling to engage the kingdom in an unneceffary war with England. The The regent opposition the duke of Albany found in his army, convincing goes gack to France. him he fhould be able to do nothing confiderable, he proposed a truce, which the English gladly accepted. For, Henry's aim was only to terrify the Scots with a dread of the fuccels of a war with England during the minority of their king. So, the duke of Albany feeing it was not in his power to ferve France as he defired, returned about the end of October to Paris, in order to take fresh measures with the king. Thus Henry attained his ends, in avoiding a rupture with Scotland, as a war with that kingdom could not but extremely incommode him, in his prefent circumftances.

Mean while, Francis I. having had fome intelligence of Francis calls what paffed at Bruges between the emperor and the car- upon Henry dinal, and defiring to convince Henry how directly contrary against the to the league of London his proceedings were, fent him let- emperor. ters patents inferting the article of the treaty, whereby they Adt. Pub. were engaged mutually to affift one another. Then he re- Feb. 23. cited what the emperor had done against him, as well in Italy, as in Champagne and Flanders, and fummoned him to perform the treaty he had folemnly fworn. Henry in anf- Henry prower fent a herald to proclaim war againft him s, alledging Hall. he was obliged to it by the fame treaty of London, becaule stow. Francis had first attacked the emperor, and moreover had Hollingsh. difappointed him with respect to the duke of Albany h. Thus Pol. Virg. war was once more declared between France and England, upon very frivolous, not to fay unjust occasions. But Wolf King Henry fitted out alfo fix fhips, under the command of Chriftopher Coo, to guard England against the infults of the Scots and French.

Stow, p. 514. Hall, fol. 91. g In the end of March. Whereupon king Francis ordered all the effects of the English merchants at Bourdeaux, and ellewhere, to be feized. And Henry did the fame by the French and Scotch merchants in London, and moreover caufed them to be imprisoned. Hall, fol. 92, 93.

h At this time, Anne Bulleyn, who had lived in the French court ever fince her going over with Mary, king Henry's fifter, and wife of Lewis XII, returned to England. Herbert, p. 46. Burnet's Ref. tom. I. p. 44. Fiddes, p. 268. Du Tillet, p. 397.

187

fey

THE HISTORY

188

1522.

A tax impoled on England, Herbert. Stow.

Hall.

Hall. Hollingth. fey had the art of perfuading the king his mafter to whatever he pleafed.

Henry having without caufe proclaimed war against France, did not dare to call a parliament to demand a fubfidy. For he could alledge neither any just cause, nor any necessity for undertaking a war destructive to the English merchants. However, money must be raifed, and it was the cardinal's bufinefs, who had embarked him in the war, to find means. The expedient he thought most proper was, to order the fheriffs to fend a lift of their names of all above fixteen years old, with an exact account of what each perfon was worth in land, flock, moveables, and money. This was fuch a furvey as was formerly taken in the reign of William the Conqueror, and had given fo great caufe of complaint to the nation i. This was followed by a general loan of the tenth of his lay subjects, and a fourth of the clergy, according to the true value of their effates, befides twenty thoufand pounds which the king borrowed of the city of London. Thus one injustice commonly draws on another. The war was manifeltly unjust, and became still more to by the means employed to maintain it. These kinds of involuntary loans, to which certain kings of England have fometimes forced their subjects, are a manifest violation of the privileges of the people, and tend directly to arbitrary power. If the king may oblige his fubjects to furnish him with money, when he shall think necessary, though it be by way of benevolence or loan, it may be affured, he will very feldom, or perhaps never think himfelf obliged to call a parliament. It is true, Henry was neither the first nor last that used this extraordinary method to raife money. But, though he was fo fortunate as to receive no prejudice by it, fome of his i Stow gives an account of this furvey from an original warrant directed to the conftable of a hundred, who was commanded to charge the conftables of every parifh within the faid hundred to appear perfonally before certain commiffioners, and to bring with them the names of all perfons above fixteen years old, dwelling within the faid hundred, and to enjoin them to repair to a certain place affigned, with their arms, and declare what their names are, and to whom they belong, and who is lord of every town or hamlet, and who flewards, and who parfons of the town, and what their benefice is worth, and who owners of every parcel of land within the faid precincts, and what is the yearly value of every man's land, what frock on the lands, and who the owner thereof; alfo what frangers dwell there, and what bufinefs they follow; alfo the value and fubftance of every perfon above fixteen years of age; alfo what penfions go thence to religious and fpiritual men. Which being certified, the king rejoiced, finding his kingdom fo wealthy (fays Polydore Virgil.) See Stow's Ann. p. 515. This warrant was dated at Brentwood, March 27, 1522.

fucceffors

fuccessors who were pleased to imitate him, were not fo 1522. happy.

The general loan made a great noise over all the king-Murmurings dom. Every one openly exclaimed against the cardinal, who against the was the author. But he little regarded the people's clamours, because he was supported by the king. However, though at fift he had given orders to exact loans with the fame rigour, as if they had been a tax imposed by the parliament, he met with fo many obstacles, that he was apprehensive of raifing in the kingdom commotions not to be appealed at his pleasure. So, the tax was levied much more gently than at first was intended. This caused so great a mistake in the cardinal's calculation, that the king was forced at last to recur to the usual method of a parliament to maintain the war, as we shall fee prefently. The London merchants were The London the most strenuous opposers of the levying this tax. They merchants were required to declare upon oath the real value of their tax. effects; but they firmly refused it, alledging, it was not poffible for them to give an exact account of their effects, part whereof was in the hands of their correspondents in foreign countries. At length by agreement, the king was pleafed to accept of a fum according to their own calculation of themfelves.

Cardinal Wolfey's concern at not fucceeding in this affair The cardinal according to his wifh, was not comparable to his trouble at isdulappointbeing difappointed in another, which touched him more hopes of the nearly, and for which he had spared neither money nor pains. papacy. I mean his election to the papal dignity, of which he thought himfelf fure. Leo X. dying the beginning of December the Managelast year, when his obsequies were over the cardinals entered ment of the conclave. the conclave, where they were not a little embarraffed con-Guicciard. cerning the election of a new pope. Julio cardinal de Me- Pol. Vie dici afpired to the papacy, and had many votes for him. But the emperor's party and fome cardinals gained by Wolfey, openly opposed the election of Julio. Mean while, as it is required to have two thirds of the voices to be chosen pope. if the cardinal de Medici had not enough for himfelf, he had however enough to exclude any other. And this long detained the cardinals in the conclave k. Though the empe-.

k The conclave is in the vatican, where there is a long gallery full, of cells, which are chosen by the cardinals by lot. The funeral of the deceased pope lasting nine days, on the tenth each cardinal goes to his cell, and are fhut up in the conclave with. one fervant, called a conclavift, with each a fecretary and gentleman to attend them, carry their meffages, and manage their intrigues. The conclave. is guarded by the militia of the city,

THE HISTORY

1522. ror had promifed Wolfey his intereft, he intended not to keep his word. His defign was to caufe Adrian Florentio bifhop of Tortofa, native of Utrecht, and formerly his preceptor, to be chofen, reckoning when he fhould be pope, he would be entirely devoted to him. But this affair was managed fo artfully, and withal fo privately, that the cardinals of his party, without difcovering their intent, were fatisfied with breaking the cardinal de Medici's meafures, till an opportunity offered to carry their point.

Mean while, Wolfey left no ftone unturned. As he built all his hopes upon the emperor's intereft, he writ to him to put him in mind of his promife, reprefenting the advantages to have a pope at his devotion. At the fame time he ordered Pace, who was then at Venice, inftantly to repair to Rome, and do him what fervice he could. The emperor was very much embarrafied in relation to Wolfey. He had promifed to use all his interest in his favour, though nothing was farther from his thoughts. It was his interest to have a pope at his devotion. But he knew cardinal Wolfey too well, to imagine fuch a pope would be guided by his counfels. It was neceffary therefore, in order not to lofe Wolfey's friendship, to cause Adrian to be chosen without the emperor's appearing to be concerned in the election. As he had gained that Minister to his interest, folely by the promife of procuring him the papacy, he could not doubt, that if he faw himfelf deceived, he would turn his mafter against him. Wherefore the emperor concealed his defigns, and was fo faithfully ferved in the conclave, that they could not be difcovered, neither had Adrian ever one vote in the daily to prevent their receiving any letters ; and the difhes of meat (which are received in at a window by the conclavist) are fearched by the mafter of the ceremonies for the fame reafon. The cardinals meet every morning and evening in the chapel for a fcrutiny, which is done by writing their fuffrages in the billets done up in two folds, and fealed with two feals. In the first fold, the conclavift writes the name of the cardinal his masler votes for, because the cardinal's hand would be known. In the fecond, the cardinal writes his own name; and on the outfide, the conclavift writes any motto the cardinal pleafes, as deo volente, by which they. know their own billets when they are read, for the fold containing the elector's name is not opened till the pope is chofen, and then he opens all to know who elected him. When the billets are ready, they put them, after a fhort prayer, into a chalice upon the altar, and appoint two of their number to read the names of the cardinals aloud, and keep account of the votes for each. And this they do till two thirds of the votes fall upon one perfon; and if they do not, the billets are all burnt. The court of Rome confifts at prefent of the pope and feventy cardinals; viz. fifty cardinal priefts, fourteen cardinal deacons, and fix cardinal bifhops, who are for the moft part of the pope's privy council. See Puffendorf's Introduction to the Hiftory of Europe; and Relig. Cuffoms. vol. I.

scrutinies.

190

Herbert. Stow. Hollingfh.

Guicciard.

e .

fcrutinies. Mean while, he kept cardinal Wolfey in hopes, 1522. and threw upon the cardinal de Medici's faction, the obstacles which occurred in the performance of his promife. At laft, when they that were in the emperor's fecret, and managed his affairs in the conclave, were fecure of a fufficient number of votes, one day as the cardinals were met to make a fcrutiny, fome one propofed cardinal Adrian bifhop of Tortofa then in Spain. He enlarged upon the great qualities of that cardinal, and the advantages which would accrue to the church by his promotion. Whereupon they who were of the party voted one after another for Adrian, as if they had been infpired, and perhaps without knowing one another's defign, fo dexteroully had the business been managed. The reft that were not in the fecret, feeing two thirds of the voices for Adrian, voted the fame way, left a fruitlefs opposition might turn to their prejudice. Thus the election Adrian VI. was made with unanimous confent, and paffed for a miracu- chofen pope. lous infpiration of the Holy Ghoft. It is not likely that Wolfey was fuch a dupe, as to believe the emperor was not concerned in Adrian's election, fince the thing was fo plain. The new pope, who affumed the name of Adrian VI. had been his preceptor, and upon his recommendation was made cardinal, and was now regent in Spain. Befides, there is no likelihood that the cardinals would have thought of choofing a Barbarian, for that's the honourable appellation the Italians bestow on those that are not of their nation, if the election had not been managed by the emperor. How- Wolfeyhides ever this be, Wolfey showed no refentment, whether he his refentwaited for an opportunity to be openly revenged, or thought ment. proper to keep fair with the emperor against another vacancy, For it was probable there would be one very foon, the new pope being old and infirm. Adrian VI. was elected in January 1522, but it was Midsummer before he came to Rome.

The emperor having made a pope at his devotion, and Theemperor fettled his affairs in Flanders and Germany, refolved to return fets out for Spain, and into Spain, where his prefence was necessary. But as he goes by Enghad caufe to fear fome change at the court of England, on land. account of what had palled in the late conclave, he thought Herbert. proper to vifit Henry in his way. This vifit was neceffary, Stow. as well to confirm with that prince the articles agreed on at Hollingfh. Bruges, as to try to preferve cardinal Wolfey's friendship, without which he could not expect to preferve the king's. He landed the 26th of May at Dover, where the cardinal He is receivwaited on him with a magnificent train, and Henry came ed with great himfelf Hollingfh.

19i

Act. Pub. XIII.p.767. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

He is made knight of the garter. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

He figns with Henry the treaty of Bruges. Herbert.

himfelf two days after ¹. From thence, he conducted the emperor to Greenwich, and then to London ^m, where he was received with all the honour and refect ufual on fuch occafions. The cardinal legate forgot not to fhow his grandeur by faying high mais ⁿ before the two monarchs, affifted by feveral bithops, and ferved by dukes. As he had refolved to hide his refentment, the emperor had reafon to be fatisfied with his reception, and found a ready compliance with all his defires. After fome ftay at London the king invited him to Windfor, where he was inftalled of the order of the garter, into which his brother Ferdinand alfo had been admitted the 23d of the foregoing April ^o. This done, the two monarchs received the facrament together, and fwore to the treaty of Bruges.

The preamble of the treaty ran, that the emperor and king of France had referred their differences to the arbitration of the king of England, who had fent the cardinal of York to Calais to decide them : that in these conferences it was long debated to know, which of the two monarchs had been the aggreffor, and after mature deliberation the cardinal had declared, it was the king of France, as well by means of Robert de la Mark, as by invading Navarre: that therefore the king of England was obliged by the treaty of London, to affift the prince attacked against the aggressor. That moreover, he had himfelf caufe to complain of the king of France for breach of promife, in fending back the duke of Albany into Scotland, and for difcontinuing the payments of the fums due to him. Upon all these accounts, Charles and Henry deeming themfelves free and clear from all engagements with the king of France, had refolved to contract a strict alliance, and feal it with a marriage between the emperor and the princess Mary, Henry's daughter, upon the following terms. Of thefe terms I shall recite such only as may be of fervice to the fequel of the hiftory. Those concerning the marriage were to this effect :

I See the names of the noblemen and others, that attended the king and the cardinal to Canterbury, in Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 767. Hall fays, Wolfey fet out for Dover the 20th of May; being accompanied by two earls, thirty fix knights, a hundred gentlemen, eight bifhops, ten abbots, thirty chaplains, all in velvet and fattin, and feven hundred yeomen. He came to Dover the 26th. In the mean time, Thomas Grey, marquis of Dorfet, with the lord Delaware, and a large retinue of knights and gentlemen was fent to Calais, to wait on the emperor. fol. 93. m On the 6th of June. Stow, p.

516. n On Whitfunday. Ibid.

• On St, George's day, and had the order and habits fent him to Noremberg. He was afterwards emperor. Herbert, p. 47.

That

That the emperor fhould efpoufe by proxy Mary, daughter to Henry, as foon as fhe fhould be twelve years old:

That her dowry fhould be four hundred thousand crowns, Articles of out of which should be deducted what the emperors Maximilian and Charles had borrowed of the king of England.

That in cafe the marriage fhould not be accomplified by the emperor's fault, he obliged himfelf to pay four hundred thousand crowns to the king of England, who bound himfelf in the fame fum to the emperor, in cafe the marriage was hindered on his part.

The terms of the league were :

That before the end of May 1524, the emperor fhould enter France on the fide of Spain, and the king of England in Picardy, each with an army of thirty thousand ^p foot, and ten thousand horse.

That they fhould make neither peace nor truce without a mutual confent.

That if any places fhould be conquered upon France, they fhould be reftored to him of the two allies, who had a right to them; and to prevent all difputes, each fhould declare his pretensions before the first of May 1524.

That if the king of England intended to fubdue Scotland, or reduce Ireland to an entire obedience, or the emperor to recover Gueldres or Frifeland; if the Scots invaded England, or the duke of Gueldres made war upon the emperor; in all these cases the two monarchs should be bound to affist one another.

That they fubmitted to the fpiritual jurifdiction of the cardinal of York as legate, and required him to pronounce the fentence of excommunication against him of the two that should first violate the treaty.

That the treaty fhould be kept private, fo that the common enemy night have no knowledge thereof.

That the pope fhould be entreated to enter into the league as a principal contractor, and reputed as fuch, provided he accepted it within three months.

That the Venetians should be likewife admitted, provided they renounced their alliance with France.

That the two monarchs fhould use their utmost endeavours to perfuade the Switzers to forfake the French, or at least to be neutral.

N

P Rapin by miffake, fays forty thoufand. Whereas in the original it is only thirty thousand or more. See Herbert, p. 48.

VOL. VI.

193

The

194 1522.

The fame day the treaty was figned, the emperor figned alfo letters patents, promifing to pay Henry whatever was due to him from Francis, in cafe Francis, on account of the prefent league, should refuse to continue the payments to which he was obliged.

The empeto Wolfey. Act. Pub. June 8. P. 770. July 4.

Ibid. Guicciard. Herbert. Theemperor makes the earl of Surrey admiral of his fleet. Herbert. Hall. Hollingfh.

Affairs of Italy. Guicciard, Mezerai. Herbert,

But cardinal Wolfey had not waited to do his own affairs ror's bounty till the king's were finished, for on the eighth of June the emperor by letters patents had engaged to pay him the pen-XIII.p.769, fion of twelve thousand livres 9, which the king of France gave him for the bishoprick of Tournay. Some days after, he obliged himfelf to pay him a penfion of two thouland five hundred ducats, till the like penfion was affigned him upon the vacant churches in Spain, in lieu of that he received out of the bifhoprick of Badajos, which the emperor defired to Henry lends discharge. But the emperor's bounties to cardinal Wolfey him money. were amply recompensed by a great fum lent him by the king before his departure. During the emperor's flay in England, which was about five weeks, he fo won the affection of the whole court by his civilities, careffes and prefents, that he was almost fure of leaving none but friends about the king. He gained the good will of the English, chiefly by conflituting the earl of Surrey admiral of his fleet 1. The commission was drawn whilft the emperor was at London, before his journey to Windfor. As he was to make fome farther ftay in England, the earl of Surrey taking with him both the English and Flemish fleets, made two descents into France, and carried away a rich booty . Then he returned and convoyed the emperor to Spain ^t.

I must now briefly relate the fuccels of the wars which were waging in feveral places. The death of Leo X. had put the affairs of the allies in Italy in a very ill fituation.

9 Or nine thousand crowns of gold de foleil, Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 769.

r Lord Herbert has inferted the patent, (which is dated June 8.) as well for the rarenefs of it, as the honour of the perfon, p. 49. Comp. Hift. vol. 11. - The earl returned to England, Jan. 25, 1522, from his government of Ireland, wherein he was fucceeded by Peter Butler, earl of Ormond. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIII. p. 766. Hall, fol. 90 .- And on December the fourth this year, the faid earl of Surrey was made high treasurer. Rymer, tom. XIII. p. 777.

s He landed June 13, near Cherbourg, and after having deftroyed the adjacent country, returned to Portland : he landed a fecond time on July 1, near Morlaix, in Bretagne, with feven thousand men, and burnt and plundered that town ; from whence he brought away a great booty. Herbert, p. 50. See a lift of the most remarkable English gentlemen in this expedition, in Hall, fol. 99, 100.

t The emperor embarked at Southampton; July 6. Hall, fol, 99.

The troops of the church and of Florence had relinquished 1522. the army, immediately after the news of the pope's death. Besides that, Prosper Colonna receiving no more supplies of money, either from Rome or the emperor, was forced to difband most of his remaining troops, and to keep but what was absolutely necessary for the defence of Milan. Mean while, the emperor ordered a levy of fix thoufand Landfquenets ", which Francesco Sforza, and Hieronimo Adorno a Genoese, were to lead into Italy. Shortly after, Lautrec Issue of the received a reinforcement of fixteen thousand Switzers, which campaign in rendered him fuperior to the allies, and yet he could not Italy. hinder the Landfquenets from joining the emperor's army. His only refuge was to try to bring the imperialists to a battle, and for that purpole he belieged Pavia; but Prosper Colonna found means to throw fuccours into the place without running any hazard. Whereupon Lautrec defpairing of fuccefs, raifed the fiege and encamped at Monzas and Colonna, who was afraid for Milan, posted himself at Bicocca, a country feat with a large park, capable of being eafily fortified as furrounded with a deep ditch. Here Colonna intrenched himself in such a manner, that he could not be attacked without rafhnefs. Lautrec had no inclination to attack the imperialists in that post, but could not possibly help it. His Switzers would have money, and he had none to give them. Louifa of Savoy the king's mother having applied to other uses the four hundred thousand crowns defigned for the army in Italy. Mean while, the Switzers preffed The Swittheir general either to give them money, or lead them to French army battle, else they were refolved to return home. This put oblige Lauhim at length upon affaulting the camp at Bicocca, where he tree to fight. was repulied with great loss "; after which, the Switzers Lautrec is defeated at quitting him, he was constrained to repais the mountains, Bicocca. not being able to withftand the imperialists. Presently after Hereturns Colonna became master of Genoa. This rich city being to France. taken by furprife, whilft a capitulation was negotiating, was takesGenoza miserably sacked. In short, Francis had nothing left in Italy Bizan. but the caftles of Milan and Cremona, and even these were very closely blocked up.

In other parts where the war was carrying on during this The Spanicampaign, France was more prosperous. After admiral ards raile the Bonnivet had taken Fontarabia, the Spaniards invested that Fontarabia. Mezerai,

 N_2

" So German foot foldiers were called formerly. Hall calls them lance zers flain. Guicciard, 1, 14. knights.

w There were three thousand Swit-place,

195

THE HISTORY

196 1522. in

The imperialifts and English do no great matters in Picardy. Bellai. Mezerai. Hall. Hollingfh.

Francis's ing Lautrec without money.

carefles the cardinal very much. Act. Pub. Nov. II.

place, and continued the fiege, without being able to accomplish their enterprise. At last, marshal de Chabanes being fent into Bearn to take the command of the French army in the room of marshal de Chatillon, who was dead, raifed the fiege, and appointed one Frauget governor of Fontarabia, who afterwards behaved very ill.

In Picardy and Champagne, the imperialifts and English having joined their forces performed nothing of moment. The two armies, commanded by the count de Bure for the emperor, and by the earl of Surrey for the king of England *, were fo fuperior to those of France, that the duke of Vendôme who commanded in Picardy was not able to refift them. So, having furnished the towns with ammunition, he contented himfelf with inceffantly annoying them with a fmall body of troops. In September the two generals befieged Heldin, but after having been five or fix weeks before the town, were forced to retire. From thence they marched to Dourlens, and finding the place deferted, and the gates pulled down, fet fire to it. Then intending to approach Corbie in October, the bad weather, and the care the French had taken for the defence of the place, hindered their undertaking the fiege. After that, the imperialists retired into Artois, and the English returned home y.

Thus all the efforts of the emperor and the king of Engfault in leav- land would have done Francis no great mifchief this campaign, if he had not himfelf been the caufe of his ill fuccels in Italy, by neglecting to find the Switzers money. Indeed, if Lautrec had not been forced to attack the imperialifts at Bicocca, probably he would have been mafter of Mi-Theemperor lan before the end of the campaign. Charles V. then perceived, that to gain any confiderable advantages upon France, much greater efforts were to be used, and for that reason continued to carefs cardinal Wolfey, in order to fecure the XIII.p.776. king his mafter's affiftance. In the collection of the publick acts, there is a letter of his to the cardinal, full of obliging expressions, plainly denoting his want of him. " I " return you thanks (faid he to him) for the good affection > x The earl of Surrey had about fixteen thousand men. The foreward of his army was led by Robert Ratcliff, lord Fitzwalter; the rear by fir William Sandes, and fir Richard Wingfield; and the main body by the earl himfelf. Sir Edward Guildford, was captain of the horfe, Hall, fol, 101, 103.

y After having burnt and plundered feveral villages. They took fourteen thousand sheep, fourteen hundred oxen and cows, thirteen hundred hogs, and fix hundred mares and horfes. Hall, fol. 102, 103.

cc you

" you have always fhown me, defiring you to continue it, 1522. " as I firmly believe you will, for you are fenfible that I -" place my whole confidence in you." Again, " I entreat " you to give the fame credit to my faid ambaffadors as to " myself, and shew yourself, on this occasion, as I take you " to be, my good and faithful friend, for I shall have a " grateful remembrance of it."

The extraordinary method used by the cardinal to raise 1523. money having been very difagreeable to the English, he. judged it more proper to proceed for the future in the ufual Thecardinal way; and therefore the king affembled a parliament the demands of the clergy a 15th of April 1523 2. The convocation meeting at the fubfidy for fame time according to cuftom a, the cardinal refolved to ef- the king. tablish a good precedent in favour of the king, by exacting Herbert. from the clergy a confiderable fubfidy. His character of Burnet, legate gave him fuch an interest with that body, that he was Stow. almost fure of obtaining whatever he was pleafed to demand. But to find lefs difficulties, he removed on divers pretences fome of those from whom he feared to meet opposition, and gained others by promifes or threats. Matters being thus ordered, he demanded of the clergy a fubfidy of one half of their annual revenues, payable in five years. Richard Fox bishop of Winchester, John Fisher bishop of Rochester, and a proctor of the inferior clergy, one Philips, would have oppofed this exaction; but the cardinal treated them in fuch a manner, as discouraged the reft from supporting them. So the fubfidy was granted, though the clergy privately murmured, that the pope's legate who ought to maintain their rights was the first to violate them.

This affair being thus ended with respect to the clergy, the He receives cardinal repaired to the houfe of commons, where he made a a mortificalong speech, endeavouring to show the necessity of the war house of the king had undertaken, by aggravating the pretended in- commons. juries he had fuffered from the king of France. He concluded Herbert. with demanding a fubfidy of the fifth part of the goods of Stow. every lay subject to be paid in four years b. This demand Hollingsh. caused warm debates among the commons. Several reprefented, that if the kingdom was actually invaded, hardly could the king require fuch a fubfidy, much lefs for a war.

z Which met at the Black Friars, in London. Herbert, p. 55.

a See a particular account of this convocation in Burnet's Hift. Ref. tom. III. p. 24.

b The charges of the war with France, were computed at eight hundred thousand pounds; and the furn demanded was four shillings in the pound. See Hall, fol. 100. Herbert, p. 55. Stow's Survey, B. III. p. 177. 197

N 3

wantonly

wantonly undertaken, and rather for the intereft of the emperor than of England. However as the court party were very numerous in the houfe, it was refolved to grant the king a fubfidy, which was but one half of what was demanded. The cardinal, who was used to be complied with, was extremely offended at the opposition of the commons. He went again to the house, and told them, he defired to reason with those who opposed his demands. But the commons replied by their speaker ', that it was the order of that houfe to hear, and not to reason, but among themselves. At this reply, the cardinal withdrew, extremely mortified, perceiving he could only prejudice the king's affairs, in attempting to treat the commons with the fame haughtinefs he treated the reft of the world. His follicitation however had some effect, fince there was an addition made to the fubfidy d.

Act of attainder againft the duke of Buckingham, Herbert.

The king has power to repeal attainders. Herbert, Belides this affair, for which properly the parliament was called, nothing remarkable paffed in the feffion, except an act of attainder against the late duke of Buckingham, who had been condemned by a fentence of his peers. As all the world was fatisfied this fentence had been procured by indirect and irregular methods, and the cardinal publickly accufed of having facrificed that lord to his vengeance, he had the credit to obtain this act, in order to divert the blame thrown upon him. But withal, the parliament fhewed that the act was paffed out of mere condefcension, fince by another, Henry Stafford fon of the deceased was reftored to his effate and honours °. A flatute was made alfo this fession, impowering the king for his life to repeal all attainders of hightreason by his letters patents under the great feal ^f. Thefe

e The famons fir Thomas Moor.

d At first every man of twenty pounds a year was to pay two shillings in the pound ; and from twenty pounds downward to forty shillings a year, one shilling in the pound; and under forty shillings, every head of fixteen years 'old or more, four pence in two years. But afterwards, by the liberal motion of fome, particularly of fir John Hufe, a knight of Lincolnshire, those of fifty -pounds a year and upwards were induced to give one fhilling more for three years to come, which at length being continued to the fourth year, and extended to those who were worth five pounds in goods, was all that could be obtained. Hall, fol. 110, Herb. p. 56.

e He was only reftored in blood, and not to honours and lands. However, the king by letters patents, bearing date the 25th of September this year, granted to him and Urfula his wife, daughter of fir Richard Pole, by Margaret of Clarence, part of the lands of the late duke his father, among which was the cafile and manor of Stafford, Dugdale's Baron. vol. I. p. 171.

f This parliament was, on July 31, adjourned to Weftminfter, where it fat till the 13th of August, and then was dissolved. The most remarkable statutes enacted now where these: 1, That no foreign artificer in England shall take any apprentice, but what is born under the king's obeisfance; or have

198

Herbert.

p. 56.

OF ENGLAND.

These were the first attempts made in this reign to render the king master of the debates of the parliament. Cardinal -Wolfey was the first author, and unfortunately for the fub- Character of jects, the king too well improved his minister's instructions. Such favourites as this have but too much caufe to fear the parliament, and therefore strive to the utmost of their power to leften its authority, by enlarging that of the fovereign who fupports them. But their labour is in vain; very few fail at laft of falling into the hands of that authority they have endeavoured to destroy. Wolfey is one of those who have the most openly abused their favour, not only against the nation's but also the king's interest, which was much less dear to him than his own. He was never contented with effates or honours. The 24th of March this year he procured for Adrian gives himfelf the bishoprick of Durham, one of the richest in the him the see kingdom in lieu of Bath and Wells, which he was willing and prolongs to refign, Two months after, Adrian VI. prolonged his his legatelegateship for five years, after the expiration of the term thin. granted by Leo X. Thus effates and honours were incef- Aft, Pub. XIII.p. 783, fantly heaped upon him, without however any poffibility of p. 788, 795. fatisfying his greedinefs. Indeed, he carried his defires much Wolfey all higher, fince he still aspired to the papacy, Adrian's age and aspires to the infirmities giving occasion to think his pontificate would not papacy. last long. He still expected to be raifed to that high dignity by the emperor's means, and therefore forgot nothing to preferve his favour. To 'this doubtless must be afcribed the Christiern honourable reception given this year to Chriftiern king of king of Denmark and Sweden, who had married the emperor's Denmark is fifter. This prince having by his cruelties rendered him elf England. odious to his subjects, and for that reason been expelled his Hall. dominions, arrived in England about Midfummer with his Hollingth. queen and was received as a king unjustly oppreffed, and not like one that had by his barbarities drawn his misfortunes upon himfelf. Henry was not contented to do him all pollible Henry rehonour, but moreover renewed with him the treaty of alliance news the between England and Denmark, as if that prince had still alliance with Christern. been in poffession of his dominions.

This was the fruit of cardinal Wolfey's interested coun- XIII.p.795fels, who never regarded either honour or justice in gratify- Jan.

have above two journeymen that are not fo; and that they fhall have a proper mark for their wares, upon pain of forfeiting ten pounds. 2. There is one confirming the college of phyficians. 3. By another, the marriage of the fix clerks in chancery is allowed. 4. It was ordained, that no perfon, of what eftate, degree, or condition foever, shall kill any hare in the fnow, with a dog, or otherwife, upon pain of forfeiting fix fhillings and eight pence for every offence. For the reft fee the Statutes, 1523.

 N_4

Act. Pub.

ing

ing his paffions. He expected every thing from the emperor, and therefore used his utmost endeavours to increase that monarch's power, that he might be better able to perform his promife. It was not the cardinal's fault that France was not utterly ruined. At least he formed this year in conjunction with the emperor projects tending to the entire diffolution of that antient monarchy.

Project afounded on the conftable of Bourbon's rebellion. P. Daniel. Herbert. Stow.

Caufes of the conflable's difguft .. Mezerai. P. Daniel. Hall.

Mezerai.

Though by the treaty of Bruges, ratified by the emperor gainftFrance and Henry at Windfor, they were not to enter France till 1524, an opportunity which offered caufing them to take other measures, they refolved to anticipate their expedition, and invade the king of France in three different places. The emperor was to have a ftrong army on the frontiers of Spain, to become master of Fontarabia and Bayonne. Henry was to employ his forces in Picardy jointly with those of the Low Countries, and the conftable of Bourbon, who had fuffered himfelf to be corrupted by the emperor or perhaps by his own offer, was to make an inroad into Burgundy. As most of the events of the following years turn upon that prince's difgust, it will be requisite briefly to mention the reasons.

The duke of Bourbon, prince of the blood royal of France, had received the conftable's fword ever fince the first year of Francis I. He had all the qualifications necelfary for that high poft. Perhaps he had too much merit, fince, if we believe Mezerai, Louisa of Savoy mother to Francis wifhed to have him for her hufband. But as he feigned not to understand what she desired, he made her his irreconcileable enemy. From that time, he perpetually received mortifications from the king, over whom the duchefs his mother had too great an ascendant. The first mentioned in hiftory was when in 1521 the king commanding the army in perfon, gave the conduct of the van to the Duke of Alencon, contrary to the prerogative annexed to the office of constable. But this was nothing in comparison of another, which however is related in the hiftory of France only upon uncertain reports. The king telling the conftable he fhould be glad to marry him to the duchefs his mother, received an answer so injurious to the duchess, that he gave him a box on the ear. This fact is not perhaps fufficiently attefted. But however, it is certain the duchefs's affection for the conftable turned to hatred. From thenceforwards he was looked upon with an evil eye at court, and no more trufted with the command of the king's armies. This was fufficient to give

Reflecting on her loofe behaviour, P. Daniel, tom. VII. p. 501, 504.

200 1523.

OF ENGLAND.

give him great difguft. But his enemy not being fatisfied with these mortifications, which seemed to her too flight a revenge for her contemned love, commenced a fuit against P. Daniel. him for his v hole effate. The caufe was natural to be tried by the parliament of Paris but the duchefs put it into the hands of the chancellor and fome other commissioners her creatures, which convinced the conftable that his ruin was determined. So perceiving no way to avoid fo fatal a blow, Heentersinhis defpair caufed him to throw himfelf into the emperor's to engage-arms. A Flemish lord ^b was the manager of the negotiation, wherein the king of England interpofed, as being equal- Du Bellai. ly concerned with the emperor to create troubles in France, Herbert. It is hard to know exactly when the negotiation began; but we find in the collection of the publick acts of England, the treaty was advanced the 17th of May 1523. We fee there and Henry. Henry's commission to Richard Sampson and Richard Jer- Act. Pub. XIII.p.794. ningham, to treat with the duke of Bourbon 1 in order to draw him into the league. This commission empowered the envoys alfo to receive of the fame prince a promife or engagement to own Henry for king of France, to do him homage and fwear fealty to him. It cannot be inferred from hence, that the conftable entered into any fuch engagement but only that Henry intended to draw him into it. However, by the P. Daniel. treaty made by the duke with the two monarchs, after the Herbert. conquest of France he was to have for his part Provence, to be erected into a kingdom, and was to marry Leonora the emperor's fifter widow of don Emanuel king of Portugal k. The duke was to bring into the field an army of his friends and vaffals, to whom the emperor promifed to join feven or eight thousand men. This army was to act in the bowels of the kingdom, whilft the emperor and Henry invaded Bearn and Picardy.

Mean while, Francis I, ignorant of the defigns of his Francis preenemies, was folely employed in preparing to recover the pares to go into Italy. duchy of Milan, where he intended to command his army Guicciard. in perfon. He haftened his preparations the more, becaufe P. Daniel. the Venetians were ftrongly follicited to join with his enemies, on pretence that he amufed them with the vain hopes

h The count de Rœux. P. Daniel, tom. VII. p. 508. Together with William Knight, doctor of law, the English refident with the lady Margaret, and fir John Ruffel. Herbert, p. 58.

i The name of Bourbon is in blank, but it is certain that it is the conftable which is there meant. Rapin.

k The emperor promifed to appoint her his heir, in cafe he and his brother Ferdinand died without iffue; and to give her a dower of two hundred thousand crowns. P. Daniel, tom. VH. p. 508.

201 1523.

Hollingfh.

THE HISTORY

The Veneans declare againft him,

Adrian fuffers himfelf to be deceived by the enemies of France. Guicciard.

three years truce among

XIII.p.790.

chriftian

princes. Act. Pub.

May 1.

Herbert.

The pope joins with the enemies of France.

Francis rejects it. of feeing him fpeedily in Italy with a powerful army. But notwithstanding all his diligence, it was not possible to avoid that misfortune. The Venetians feeing no French army arrive, and dreading to be exposed to the emperor's indignation, entered at last into the league against France about the end of July 1.

On the other hand, pope Adrian VI. laboured with all his power to procure a truce between the christian princes, fancying after that there would be no difficulty to unite them together in a war against the Turks. But as his genius was mean, and very different from that of Leo X. and Julius II. his predeceffors, inftead of making the princes fubfervient to his defigns, he was himfelf without knowing it inftrumental to those of others. The emperor told him he heartily defired the truce, but intimated the necessity of its being for fome time, in order to reap the intended advantage. He thereby laid an invincible obstacle in the way, because the king of France being lately dispossefield of the duchy of Milan, would never hearken to a long truce, which would afford his enemies time to fecure their conqueft. That monarch's opposition gave the emperor and the king of England occasion to engage the pope to proceed farther, by hinting to him that after the example of fome of his predeceffors, he fhould exert his apostolick power, which no christian prince would prefume directly to oppose. Pleased with these hopes. He enjoins a Adrian published a bull dated the 30th of April, enjoining by virtue of the power committed to him by God, a three years truce between all chriftian princes under pain of excommunication and interdict, against those that should refuse to observe But the king of France difregarding fuch a truce contiit. nued his preparations for the Milan expedition, and ordered his troops to march towards Italy. Then the pope was told, that Francis alone, by his non-compliance and obflinacy, hindered the christians from joining their forces against the Turk. By these fecret practices the good pope was gradually brought to conclude a league against France with the emperor, the king of England, Ferdinand archduke of Auftria the emperor's brother, the duke of Milan, the Genoefe, and the Florentines. This league was figned the 3d of August, a few days after the Venetians had deferted France.

> Italy feemed by this league to be fecured from all invalions. And indeed, Prosper Colonna, who commanded in Milan,

> > 1 June the 28th, according to P. Daniel, p. 499.

fo

202 1523.

fo little expected to be attacked, that he neglected to take neceffary measures for the defence of that duchy. Mean while, Francis purfued his project, and the more, as he heard there Francis is were no preparations at Milan. The emperor feemed wholly the affected to neglect the defence of that State, on purpose to draw carelesfines Francis into Italy, reckoning that his absence would pro- of his enemote the duke of Bourbon's defigns. Nay, it is faid, that mies to page to induce Francis to ablent himself from his kingdom, Henry had caufed him to be privately told, there was no danger from him that year in Picardy.

Affairs being in this fituation, Francis departed for Lyons He fets out in order to pais into Italy. In the mean while, the empe- for Lyons, ror was preparing an army in Spain to befiege Fontarabia and Mezerai. Bayonne. But the army was railed very flowly, becaufe it Project of was not to act till Francis was engaged in the war of Mi- the allies. Herbert. lan. On the other fide, the count de Bure m his general in Flanders, remained quiet, waiting to join the English, who the better to deceive the king of France were not to land at " Calais till the end of September. In fhort, the emperor ordered eight thousand Landsquenets to march in small divisions into Franche Comté, who were to join the duke of Bourbon as foon as he was ready. Upon that prince's revolt the allies built all their hopes, imagining that Francis being in Italy, France thus unexpectedly invaded in fo many places at once would make no great refiftance. These hopes were the better grounded, as Francis having no intelligence of the duke of Bourbon's plots, had no troops at all in Burgundy, few in Guienne and Bearn, and Picardy was in an ill state of defence.

Mean while, the conftable, not to be obliged to attend the The conftaking, pretended to be fick at Moulins. But Francis, whilft ble feigns on the road to Lyons, happened to be informed by two of Moulins. the conftable's fervants, that their mafter held private corref. The king is pondence with the emperor. Surprized at the news, he informed of turned out of his way to go to Moulins, where he told the racy. duke, who still feigned to be fick, what had been discovered He goes to to him. The duke freely owned, the emperor had founded Moulins. him by the count de Rœux, but that he had refused to hear- ble owns he ken to his proposals : that he defigned to inform his majesty was sounded of it, but being prevented by his illness from coming to court, by the he durft not truft any perfon with the fecret. Whether the Du Bellai, king believed what the conftable faid, or thought he could P. Daniel, not arreft him in his own territories, he was contented with Herbert.

m Florentius, of Egmont.

Stow. Hall.

ordering

THE HISTORY

1523. The king orders him to come to Lyons. He flies into Germany.

The king ftays in France, and vet to Italy. Guicciard. Mezerai. P. Daniel, The war is begun in four feveral places. Hall.

Campaign in Italy. Guicciard. Mezerai. Herbert.

ordering him to follow him to Lyons. The duke fet out indeed as if he had intended to follow the king, being carried in a litter on pretence of his fickness, and travelling by very eafy journies. But upon notice that two of his confidents were arrested at court, he privately withdrew from his attendants, and taking with him only Pomperan one of his gentleinen, he escaped through by-ways, and fafely arrived at Trent in Germany.

The conftable's flight convincing the king, there was fome grand plot in France to be executed during his absence, he fends Bonni- relinquished his defign of going into Italy, and contented himfelf with fending his army " under the command of admiral Bonnivet, who paffed the Alps about the end of August or the beginning of September. About the fame time the emperor affembled his army in Spain, the Landfquenets arrived in Franche Comté, and the English landed at Calais, to act in Picardy in conjunction with the Flemings. It will be abfolutely neceffary briefly to relate what paffed during this campaign in these four feveral places.

> The caffle of Milan, where Lautrec had left a garrifon, furrendered the 14th of April. So the French had no place of importance in the Milanefe, except the caffle of Cremona, which too was fo clofely blocked up, that there was no likelihood of its holding out long. On the other hand, as France could expect no farther affiftance from the Venetians, and as all the reft of Italy was joined in a league against her, Prosper Colonna who commanded in Milan did not doubt that the king would defift from his defign of carrying war into the Milanefe. For that reafon, he had neglected to repair the fortifications of the capital city which were in an ill state, the ramparts being fallen down in feveral places. However upon advice that admiral Bonnivet was going to pass the Alps, he drew together all his forces to try to defend the paffage of the 'Tefin; but he came too late. The French had made such speed, that he was forced to retire to Milan in the utinost diforder. Nay, he resolved to abandon that city, if by an unaccountable negligence, they had not given him tome days time to repair the works. He had but fifteen thousand Men, with which he could not expect to defend against an army of above forty thousand fo large a city, which also was open in feveral places. However, as he had learnt by long experience, that it must not always be thought the enemies will do what is most for their advantage, he never n Confishing of three and thirty thousand men. Guicciard, 1. 15.

ceafed

204

OF ENGLAND.

ceased repairing the places which wanted it most, deeming he could but withdraw at last in cafe the French were as expeditious as they ought to have been. If Bonnivet had marched directly to Milan, he would have found the gates open. But after taking Novarra and Vigerano, and paffing the Tefin without opposition, he preposteroully imagined a few days more or less would fignify nothing. So having loft to no purpole four or five days, he gave the emperor's general time to put Milan in a posture of defence . At last, approaching the city when it was too late, he found it incapable of being attacked by the good management of Colonna. Whereupon he refolved to encamp at Chiaravalla, in hopes of cutting off the provisions of Milan, and of having the imperialists at his mercy. But he took his measures fo ill, that after perfifting in his defign till the end of November, he was forced himfelf to remove from Milan for want of provisions. All he did during that time was to relieve the caffle of Cremona, reduced to the last extremities P. Such was the fuccess of Bonnivet's campaign, which might have been more glorious for him, and more advantageous for the king his mafter, had he taken juster measures and improved his superiority. Colonna died shortly after, and Lanoy viceroy of Naples took the command of the imperial army. The feafon was to far advanced, that nothing remarkable paffed in those parts till the end of the year, when the duke of Bourbon came and took the command of the emperor's troops, not without Lanoy's great difgust, who unwillingly refigned his post to a foreigner.

The allies, as I faid, were refolved not to invade France Campaign in till September, becaufe it was to be prefumed, the king would then be employed in Italy. For this reafon it was the bep. Daniel, ginning of that month before the emperor affembled his army Herbert, in Spain. Lautrec, who commanded in Guienne, hearing the Spaniards were drawing together, haftened to the frontiers, to provide for the defence of Bayonne and Fontarabia, which were most exposed. Frauget, an officer of note, was governor of Fontarabia, having been left there the last year by marshal de Chabanes. Lautrec relying upon Frauget's • Galeazzo, vifcount of Milan, meeting him, and defiring him to flay till he had raifed a tumult in the city, (which he affured him of in two or three days) made Bonnivet lofe the opportunity, Herbert, p. 59. According to others, Galeazzo put Bonnivet in hopes, that this city would furrender by capitulation, whence he might reap great advantages, and at leaft get a large fum of money. P. Daniel, tom. VII. p. 516.

p And which Janot d' Herbouville, the governor, had kept for the French near two years together, after the taking of the tewn. Ibid.

bravery

205

1523.

The Spaniards become masters of Fontarabia. P. Daniel.

Campain in Du Bellai.

defeated by the duke of Guife.

bravery and experience, left him in the fame post, after - having reinforced the garrifon, and laid in fome ammunition. After that, he did not queftion, the place would be able to maintain a long fiege. These precautions being taken with regard to Fontarabia, he repaired to Bayonne. He was no fooner arrived, than the Spanish army appeared before the walls, fupported by a fleet, which threw the inhabitants into great confernation, the town being weak towards the fea. But Lautrec fo managed it, that the Spaniards were difappointed, though they had expected to carry the place without opposition. Perceiving therefore, that the fitge would employ them too long, they, fuddenly, raifed it, and invefted Fontarabia, which was bafely furrendered by Frauget, in very few days. 9. He was like to have loft his head for a fault of that confequence. But though he preferved his life, he faved not his honour being publickly degraded.

The emperor was not fo fuccefsful in Burgundy and Champagne. Champagne. Lamothe of Noyers, the duke of Bourbon's officer, was gone fome time fince into Germany, to conduct into Burgundy, count de Furstemberg, who, with feven or eight thousand Landsquenets, was to join there the duke of Bourbon. Though this project feemed to be fruftrated by the duke's flight, count de Furstemberg however entered Champagne with his army. He immediately took Coiffy and Monteclair, fmall places which made no great refistance. But the duke of Guife, who commanded in that province, knowing Furstemberg had no cavalry, assembled all the nobles of the country, and forming fome fquadrons, clofely Furftemberg followed the Germans. Furftemberg finding himfelf too weak in the heart of the enemy's country, and having no horfe to oppose to those of the duke of Guise, refolved to retire into Lorrain. He could not however make his retreat without receiving a terrible check near Neufchâtel, where' the duke of Guife defeated the best part of his troops.

> Whilft the war was carrying on in Italy, Bearn, and Champagne, Henry embarked his troops under the command of the duke of Suffolk , who landing at Calais, joined the count de Bure, the 20th of September. These two bodies made 9 Being defirous to fave his goods. Herbert, p. 59. But P. Daniel lays the blame on don Pedro, fon of the marshal of Navarre, who held intelligence with the Spaniards, tom. VII. P. 529.

F Charles Brandon. He was attended by feveral lords and gentlemen, whole names sce in Hall, fol. 113. The vanguard was commanded by the lord Sandes; the right wing by fir William Kingston; the left by fir Everard Digby ; the rear by fir Richard Wingfield ; and fir Edward Guildford, was made together an army of twenty five, or thirty thousand 1523. foot, and about fix thousand horse. The duke de la Trimouille, who commanded in that country, was fo inferior Campaign in in number of troops, that he durft not keep the field. All he where the could do was to throw fuccours into the places most ex- Imperialists pofed, and fpeedily inform the king of what paffed in those and English parts. Francis I. being then at Lyons, was extremely embar-raffed to withstand to many unexpected invasions. 'Tis grefs. faid, that deceived by falfe advices from England, he had Bellai, been in hopes Picardy for this year would be unmolefted, Hall. and yet, he faw it was there his enemies intended to make Stow. their greatest effort. In this perplexity, he immediately dif-Hollingth. patched the duke of Vendôme, with all the troops he could affemble, both to defend Picardy, and fecure Paris, where he did not question, the alarm was very great. Indeed, the duke of Suffolk, and the count de Bure passing by Hill. Terouenne, Hefdin and Dourlens, had taken Roye and Montdidier, and were advanced as far as Corbie. But the news of the duke of Vendôme's march caufing them to be more circumfpect, they thought proper to proceed no farther, and the rather because the seafon began to be very incommodious, and they were afraid of being engaged between the dukes of Vendôme and la Trimouille. These confiderations induced them to think of retreating. In their return, they became mafters of Bouchain, the governor whereof brought him the keys, though they had no thoughts of attacking the place. Then leaving an English garrifon in Bouchain, they retired into Artois. But prefently after, the French recovered that town. Thus the progress of the confederate army was not fo great as Francis had reafon to fear. Had the army taken the field fooner, he would have been greatly embarrafied. But, as I faid, the hopes the emperor, and the king of England had conceived of the duke of Bourbon's undertaking, was the caufe of their not beginning the campaign in any place, till about the end of September.

When Adrian VI. came into the league, he had no defign to ruin France, in order to compel Francis to wage war Death of with the Turks, but he had been told, it would be a certain Adrian VI. means to oblige that prince to confent to the truce. Mean while, without the pope's knowing any thing of it, the em-two hundred archers on horfeback, three thousand archers on foot, five thousand bill men, two thousand fix hundred pioneers and labourers : to was captain of the horfe. This army whom were added feventeen hundred

Guicciard,

207

Deror

ter. Guicciard. Cimar. Sardi.

Guicciard.

Tulio de Medici, prime minifter to Adrian VI.

peror and Henry had combined to invade France, and divide it between them. Probably, if he had lived to the end of this year, he would have feen that their defions did not correspond with his, but he died about fix weeks after His charac- figning the league against France. He was a good man, of a character very different from those of his predecessors. Inftead of thinking to enlarge the ecclefiaftical flate by unjust confiscations, he had given the duke of Urbino the investiture of his duchy. He had done the fame by the duke of Ferrara, knowing that the former popes had quarrelled with these princes only to gratify their defire of enriching their own relations. He would have even reftored Modena and Reggio to the duke of Ferrara, if the clamours of his council, who could not understand that justice ought to be the foundation of policy, had not prevented him. He thought likewife of reforming the court of Rome, but death fuffered him not to execute his defign. All these proceedings, fo remote from those of his immediate predecessors, who had used the courtiers and people of Italy to fee the popes purfue the loofe maxims of temporal princes, caufed it to be faid, that he was indeed an honeft man, and a good chriftian, but an indifferent pope. Accordingly the Italian writers speak of Adrian VI. in terms importing no great effeem for him.

The beginning of this year, cardinal Julio de Medici, who retired to Florence upon the death of Leo X. returned to Rome, and was very civilly received. In a fhort time, he gained the good will of the pope to fuch a degree, that he supplanted the cardinal of Volterra, the prime minifter, and caufed him to be committed to the caffle of St. Angelo. From thence forward he had the fole management of the pope's affairs, gaining more and more his ef-, teem, by putting on the devout, and expressing a great zeal to unite all the christian princes against the Turk. By this artifice he led him to publish the bull for a triennial truce, and at length to fign the league against France. A minister like this was doubtles, too politick for fuch a pope. Adrian VI. died the 14th of September, at the very time the armies began to take the field. Had he lived any longer, he would without doubt, have perceived, the league he had imprudently engaged in, was by no means proper to procure the union, he fo much defired among the chriftian princes.

Cardinal Wolfey having notice of the pope's death, writ to the king to inform him of it, defiring his affiftance and protection.

208 1523.

protection 3. The next day he writ to him again, praying 1523. him to recommend him to the emperor, by a letter under his own hand. He flattered himfelf that the emperor would Cardinal have a grateful fense of his late fervice, in caufing the king deavours to his mafter to declare against France, and would now at least obtain the keep his word with him, fince he had no preceptor to be papacy. elected as in the former conclave. But if the Italian hifto- Burnet, rians are to be credited, the emperor little thought of pro-Fiddes. curing him the papacy, and the conclave much lefs, who met presently after Adrian's decease. Of the thirty nine car-Recital of dinals which were in the conclave, Julio de Medici had what paffed fifteen or fixteen at his devotion, belides three who had clave. promifed not to be against him, if he was like to fucceed Guicciard. in the conclave; fo that he had only feven or eight to gain, in order to have two thirds of the voices. But this was not eafy. Cardinal Colonna, his adverfary, was at the head of a much more numerous party, who would have infallibly carried it, if the cardinals of that faction could have as readily united in chufing a pope, as in preventing the election of Julio. This made the conclave hold fifty days. As for Wolfey, if he had any cardinals for him, they could not be many, fince he had against him the Frency party, and the emperor's adherents were the fame with those of Julio de Medici. In fhort, Colonna's faction not agreeing upon the choice of a pope, becaufe the head would have one elected who was not liked by his friends, his indignation at, their obstinacy caused him to be reconciled with the cardinal de Medici. Guicciardini fays, Julio gave him a promife under his hand to make him his vice chancellor and prefent him with his palace, one of the most magnificent in Rome. Be this as it will, Colonna giving him feven or eight votes which were at his disposal, there was no farther obstacle to his election. It being reported in the conclave, that the cardinal de Medici would be elected the next fcrutiny, most of the cardinals flayed not till day appeared, but went and made their court to the perfon who was foon to be their master. Their example drew in the reft, who finding it not in their power to hinder the election, were willing alfo to fhew, they freely concurred. So, that very night, between the 18th and 19th of November, all the cardinals went and paid obeyfance to the new pope, and the next

s He protefts, in that letter which is dated September 30, that he thought himfelf unfit for the papal dignity, and that he defired much rather to end his days with the king. Which was ftrange diffembling. See Burnet's Ref. tom. III. p. 19.

VOL. VI.

morning

morning his election was confirmed by a folemn fcrutiny, wherein he had all the voices. Thus it is that the holy ghoft influenced the cardinals in the choice of a pope, who, contrary to their intention, was to be the caufe of the deepeft wound the church of Rome had ever received. The new pope affumed the name of Clement VII. on account of St. Clement's day, which was to be very fhortly folemnized. He was natural fon of Julian de Medici, uncle to Leo X. But this defect of birth, though contrary to the canons, was not confidered. Leo X. who made him cardinal in the beginning of his pontificate, took care to have it legally attested, that Julian promised his mother marriage. taking for granted that a bare promife was equivalent to a marriage, he declared Julio legitimate. Alexander VI. took the fame courfe when he made Cæfar Borgia his baftard fon cardinal. He produced witneffes, who depofed, that Cæfar was born of a married woman, whence it was inferred the child was to be deemed the husband's fon. In this manner did the vicars of Jefus Chrift abuse laws divine and human to gratify their paffions.

Wolfey hides his difguft.

p. 82.

p. 96.

210

1523.

The news of Clement's election was a great mortification to Wolfey, who, after the promotion of Adrian VI. had expected to be pope upon the first vacancy. He must have been extremely incenfed with the emperor, who had twice deceived him. So, it may be affured, confidering his vindictive temper, he refolved from that moment to be revenged. But as he could not execute this refolution without his master's affistance, he was to take care not to difcover that he acted from a motive of revenge; otherwifehe would have run the hazard of being difappointed. He concealed therefore, under the malk of a feigned modera-Fiddes Coll. tion, the refentment he harboured in his breaft, and contented himfelf with telling the king, that feveral had voted for him in the conclave, but his absence had turned to his prejudice, and the fituation of the affairs of Italy cauled the Fiddes, ibid. cardinals to chuse Julio de Medici. A few days after, the king's ambaffador at Rome had orders to notify to the new He demands pope, the king's and Wolfey's joy at his promotion t. At the continu- the fame time, Wolfey defired the continuance of his leance of his gatefhip, affirming, that by reafon of the king's prerogative, legateship. Herbert.

t A difpatch was fent for that pur-Thomas Hanyball, mafter of the rolls. pole to John Clarke, bishop of Bath and refident at Rome. Herbert, p. 59. and Wells, fecretary Pace, and dr.

it

OF ENGLAND.

it was not worth to him a thoufand ducats a year. Clement 1523. VII. was entirely of the emperor's party, and knowing of what confequence the king of England's affiftance was at the present juncture of affairs in Europe, gladly embraced the opportunity to gratify cardinal Wolfey, and make him his friend, by whofe means he might gain the favour of the king his master. In this disposition, he granted the cardinal more than he defired. By a bull of the 9th of January 1524, Clement he gave him the legantine power for life. This is the first grants it for and perhaps the only inftance of a perpetual legateship.

Wolfey was now raifed to the highest point of grandeur Act. Pub. that a fubject can afpire to. He was archbishop of York, XIV. p. 18. Wolfey bebifhop of Durham, Abbot of St. Albans, cardinal legate a comes every latere for life, lord chancellor of England, prime minister day more and favorite, carefied by the emperor, respected by the pope, proud. regarded by all the princes of Europe, with almost an abfolute power in England, where nothing material was tranfacted, either in fpirituals or temporals, but by his fole direction. It is easy to fee, fo many advantages were but too capable of rendering him proud and infolent. He looked upon the king's subjects as flaves, and unfortunately for them, infpired the king by degrees with the fame principles, and infinuated to him, that he ought to confider the parliament only as an inftrument to execute his will. These infinuations were but too effectual, as will be feen in the fequel. In order to render him independent of the parlia- He caufes ment, he perfuaded him to exact from his fubjects n at once, the fubfidy the fubfidy given by parliament, and payable in four years. four years to Every one ascribed to the cardinal this illegal proceeding, be paid at which established a very dangerous precedent. But he lit- once. tle regarded the complaints of the people, fince he was Herbert. fecure of the king's countenance, and the pope's protec- Stow, tion.

He undertook this year a thing he would never have He forms ventured upon, had he not been fully fatisfied that the the project of founding pope could not be without the king's affiftance. And that two colleges. was, to caufe feveral religious houfes to be fuppreffed, in Herbert. order to appropriate the revenues to two colleges, which he Stow. Fiddes. intended to found at Oxford and Ipfwich. If the pope had reaped any advantage, his confent would not have been very ftrange. But that he should agree to the suppression of several monasteries to gratify a private person, is what could hardly

" From all perfons worth forty pounds. Hall. Herbert, p. 60. 0 2

Herbert.

hardly be expected, and perhaps had never happened. Accordingly, the pope would never have granted it, had not the fatisfying the paffion of this ambitious minifter been abfolutely neceffary to his defigns. The cardinal's project was to found a magnificent college at Oxford by the name of cardinal college, which was to confift of one hundred eighty fix perfons, with falaries. The other college was to be founded at Ipfwich, the place of his birth, but only for grammar, and to qualify young fcholars for his college at Oxford. But as these projects were not accomplished this year, I fhall fpeak of them on another occasion, and close the year 1523, with an account of what passed in Scotland, where affairs were no more undifturbed than elsewhere.

Henry forms defigns deftructive to Scotland. Buchanan. Herbert. Hall. He foments their divifions; and would remove the duke of Albany;

and make his fifter regent.

Henry being engaged in a war with France, justly dreaded the diversion the Scots might make on the frontiers. On the other hand, the king of Scotland's minority frequently tempted him to become mafter of that kingdom, after the example of Edward III. his predeceffor, who dispoffelled the king his nephew at a like juncture. The factions in Scotland increafing his hopes, he never ceafed to foment them by means of his adherents, who were very numerous, becaufe he had wherewithal to give penfions. He used for pretence his being obliged by nature to take care of the king his nephew's concerns, who was not of age to diffinguish what was advantageous from what was prejudicial. So, as an affectionate uncle, he did his endeavour to remove the duke of Albany, under colour there was danger of that prince's feizing the crown. He knew he fhould never accomplifh his defigns fo long as Scotland was guarded by fuch an Argus. The queen his fifter had made him very uneafy in joining with the regent, because he was thereby deprived of all pretence of faying the king was in danger. Indeed, it was not likely, as the parliament of Scotland wifely intimated in their answer, that the queen fhould join with the regent to defroy the king her fon. Henry however, to give fome colour to the acculation, was pleased to suppose, the queen his fifter defigned to marry the duke of Albany. But finding at laft, this fuppolition had not the defired effect, he had recourse to another expedient, which was, to gain his fifter by promifing to procure her the regency. That done, he preffed yet more earnestly the parliament of Scotland to remove the duke of Albany, and confer the regency on the queen. But, to render his inftances more effectual, he refolved to use his utmost endeavours to hinder the duke's return into Scotland. To that end, he fent out a fleet to take him in his paffage.

212 1523.

fage w. At the fame time, he ordered the earl of Surrey to 1523. march into Scotland *, to fhow the Scots what they were to expect in cafe they did not give him speedy fatisfaction. The He invades Scotland; Scots being without a leader, and unprepared against this in-Buchanan. vafion, fultained great damages during the campaign. The Herbert. earl of Surrey took Jedworth, and carried fire and fword into the country y, without meeting any opposition. Mean while, Henry's adherents ceafed not to cry, that a peace must be made with England, fince it was the only way to fave Scotland from utter destruction. Henry supported them and offers by offering to the king his nephew his only daughter Mary his daugh-in marriage, and magnifying the advantages the Scots would riage to the receive from the alliance. But withal, he required of them king his that they fhould break all their engagements with France. nephew. Buchanan. It was however very unlikely, he fhould ferioufly think of Herbert. giving his daughter to the king of Scotland, fince fhe was affianced to the emperor, and he strictly united with that prince. Besides, such a marriage would have been of no advantage to himself or the nation. To this the opposite Opposition advantage to himlen of the hatlon. To this the opport of the con-party replied, the king of England fought to difengage Scot- travy party. land from France, only the more eafily to ruin the kingdom, Pol, Virg. and that to make an alliance with England by abandoning France, was the ready way to be flaves to the Énglish: that this was not the first time the kings of England by fuch marriages had attempted to become mafters of Scotland, and the worft was to be feared from neighbours who had ever aspired to the possession of all Great Britain. In a word, the deftroying with fire and fword a country whole friendship was courted, was a strange way of defiring an alliance, and propofing a marriage. All these reasons were answered by the other party. But it tended only fo to increase diforder and confusion among the Scots, that it was impracticable for them to come to any refolution. Mean while, Henry, who The English only intended to terrify them, by making them feel the ef- army retire. fects of his arms, ordered the earl of Surrey to quit Scotland,

213

w Sir William Fitzwilliams, with thirty fix great ships cruized on the coafts of France, and Anthony Pointz, with a good fleet, guarded the western feas. As Fitzwilliams was cruifing about, he discovered twelve French ships, in which the archbishop of Glascow, and other perfons of quality were, whom the duke of Albany had tent before him into Scotland. Giving chafe to these ships, two of them were lost near Dieppe and Boulogne. Herbert, P. 56.

x With fix thousand men. And ordered Thomas Grey, marquis of Dorfet, warden of the East and middle marches, and the lord Dacres, warden of the Weft marches to join him. Herhert, p. 56. Hall, fol. 114.

y He took all the caftles in Merch, and Teviotdale. Buchanan.

and

and return into England. But he had fcarce fent his men 1523. into winter quarters, when the Scots made inroads on the borders of England, which obliged him to march a fecond time into Scotland, where he became mafter of Jedburrough.

Albany deceives the and goes to Scotland. Buchanan. Hall.

The duke of Mean time, the duke of Albany hearing what paffed in Scotland, burned with defire to repair thither, to appeale by vigilance of his prefence the troubles caufed by the king of England's adthe English, herents, and to strengthen the French party which was in danger of being furmounted by the other. Francis I. had granted him an aid of three thousand foot, and two hundred men at arms, to enable him to make a diversion upon Henry. But it was not possible to transport these troops into Scotland, whilft the English fleet kept the fea to hinder their paffage. Policy therefore was to be recurred to. For that purpose, he feigned to defift from his defign of going into Scotland, and fent his troops into quarters remote from the coaft, with orders however to be ready to march upon the first notice. The transport ships were likewise fent away to certain ports, from whence they were ordered to fail to the appointed rendezvous the moment they heard from the duke. This firatagem deceived the English admiral, who being informed by his fpies, that the duke of Albany was returned to court, and had difinified his troops and veffels, thought there was nothing more to fear this year, and fo returned with the fleet into England. The duke was no fooner informed of it, but he affembled his troops and fhips, and embarking about the middle of September, arrived in Scotland the 24th z, the fame day the earl of Surrey became mafter of Jedburrough.

He marches with an army to the borders. Buchanan. Pol. Virg. Hall.

The regent's arrival revived the courage of the French party, who began to be greatly difmayed, and drew from the king of England feveral perfons who had only favoured him out of fear. Some time after, the regent fummoned the nobility to Edinburgh, and endeavoured to convince. them' that the kingdom would be in great danger, unlefs the king of England's defigns were timely and vigoroufly opposed. But all his eloquence was not capable of caufing a change of opinion in those who preferred Henry's penfions to all the arguments that could be alledged. However, he affembled an army, and advanced towards the borders, where he arrived the 22d of October. But when he came to march into England, he met with the fame obstacles that 1523. had flopped him the laft year. That is, the generals and officers of the English party refused to follow him, main- They refuse taining it was manifestly against the interest of Scotland to him into provoke the English, and therefore it was sufficient to be England. upon the defensive. They added, if the defign was to ferve France, it could not be done better than by keeping an army on the frontiers, which would oblige the English to have the like in those parts. But in the prefent circumftances of Scotland it. was too much to hazard a battle, the lofs whereof would prove the ruin of the kingdom. In fhort, Hall. the regent feeing it was in vain to perfuade them to follow Hollingft. The earl of him, ordered Werk caftle to be affaulted by the French Surrey aptroops; but they were vigoroufly repulfed. Mean while, proaches. upon notice of the earl of Surrey's approach at the head of a' numerous army 2, he did not think proper to expect him, but chofe to retire. Indeed, it would have been too dangerous The regent to give battle with an army wherein the English had fo retired. many favourers. The feafon being no longer proper for one or other to keep the field b, the earl of Surrey, content with having flopped the Scots, fent his troops into winter quarters, and the regent followed his example.

7 With Richard de la Pole, bro- in the 5th of this reign, and three ther of the earl of Lincoln, beheaded thousand French. Herbert, p. 57.

Whilft the flames of war were kindled in almost all parts Progress of of Europe, the reformation made great progress in Germany, the reformation. and began even to fpread in Switzerland, France, and Eng-sleidan, land. In the beginning of this year the canton of Zurick, moved by the preaching of Zuinglius, renounced divers articles of religion they had hitherto profeffed, though Zuinglius and Luther differed about the eucharist c. Many likewife in France and England began to diflike a religion, that feemed to be founded more upon the pope than upon Jesus Christ. Adrian VI. hearing of the daily progrefs of Luther's doctrine in Germany, dispatched a nuntio to the diet of Nuremberg, to exhort the German princes to deftroy Luther

2 Forty thousand men. There were befides fix thousand in Berwick. Buchanan, l. 14. Hall, fol. 115.

b It was about the middle of November. See Hall, fol. 116.

c Their differences about consubstantiation much hindered the progrefs of the reformation. And not being able to be composed, Zuinglius's party were called Sacramentarians, and Luther's, Ubiquitarians. Calvin fucceeded Zuinglius, who by his doctrines of predeftination, &c. fo widened the breach between the Lutherans and Calvinifts that they became irreconcileable. Infomuch that the Lutherans at Leipfick, where they are very rigid, have fet up in their great church the picture of Ignatius Loyola, Calvin and the Devil in one frame, with this infcription, the three great enemies of Chrift and the Christian religion. Such enmity does the differing in opinion prepofteroufly breed among Christian fects, especially where both fides are in the wrong !

O 4.

and

215

and his followers. He confessed however, in a letter to them upon the fame fubject, that many abufes and diforders were crept into the church d, throwing the blame upon those who had governed before him. But he faid, to reform all at once, would be the way to fpoil all, and therefore it was neceffary to proceed by degrees in this reformation. Luther having feen the letter, published it in German with notes of his own, wherein he faid among other things, that the degrees the pope mentioned were fo large, that there was a hundred years interval between each of them. On the other hand, the diet taking advantage of the pope's confession, demanded a free council in Germany, where every one fhould be obliged upon oath to fpeak his real opinion, and that numberlefs abufes under which Germany had fo long groaned, should be reformed.

Mean while, Luther still continued to write in defence of answers the his doctrine. Among other things he published an answer to the king of England's book, wherein he used no ceremony. This behaviour obliged Henry to complain of him to the princes of the houfe of Saxony. At the fame time he exhorted them to hinder the publication of Luther's German bible, for fear the translation should be prejudicial to the truth. But his letter had no great effect.

The progress of the reformation was not yet confiderable enough to be regarded by the chief fovereigns of Europe, whole thoughts were wholly intent upon war. Clement VII. refused to renew the league, though himfelf had engaged his predeceffor in it, and declared he would fland neuter. This declaration at first extremely embarrassed the duke of Bourbon, becaufe the emperor not having provided for the payment of his troops, it was not poffible for the duke to fatisfy them, fince the pope and the Florentines withdrew their ufual fupplies. He found means however to draw fome money from the inhabitants of Milan, and at laft perfuaded the pope to give him twenty thousand ducats, and caufe the Florentines to furnish him with fifty thousand, on condition of fecrecy.

Not long after, the duke of Bourbon receiving a fupply of fix thousand Landsquenets, and the Venetian army under the command of the duke of Urbino joining him, he took the field with thirty-five thousand men. Mean while, Bonnivet was greatly embarrafied. He had not above twenty thou-d His words are, In hac fancta fede aliquot jam annis Multa Abominanda fuisse.

Luther king of England's book. Sleidan.

1524.

Affairs of

Guicciard.

Italy.

Capella. P. Daniel.

216 1523.

fand men, having loft the reft of his army by death or de-1524. fertion during the last campaign. But what was worse, he had no money to pay his troops. This was a misfortune common to both fides. It is true, he expected ten thousand Switzers, and five thousand Grisons, but forefaw they would be of little fervice, becaufe he had not wherewithal to content them at their arrival. This made him refolve to go in quest of the imperialists, and give them battle. But as they were informed of his condition, they determined to avoid it, though they were fuperior in number, in the expectation of dispersing his army without an engagement. And indeed, the five thousand Grisons who were coming to join the admiral, and were advanced as far as Bergamo, not receiving the money promiled them, immediately returned. As for the ten thousand Switzers, they arrived indeed at Jurea, and even advanced to the banks of the Sefia; but it was not poffible to perfuade them to continue their march for want of money to pay them. Mean while, the imperialists became mafters of feveral towns, which very much annoyed the French camp, and at last forced the admiral to retire to Novarra. In the mean time, the cdftle of Cremona, which the French had hitherto kept, furrendered to the imperialifts.

Bonnivet, finding that the Grifons were returned, that the The French Switzers would not fir without being fecure of their pay, army repafs and that his men deferted in great numbers, refolved at last Guicciard. to repais the Alps. As foon as the duke of Bourbon had Bellai. notice of his march, he purfued him with all fpeed, to compel him to a battle. There were even between the two armies feveral fharp skirmishes, in one of which the brave Bayard was flain. But notwithftanding all the efforts of the imperialists, Bonnivet retreated in good order. When the The French French had repafied the mountains, the places they fill lofe the Milanefe. had in the Milanefe furrendered by capitulation to the imperialifts.

The French were no fooner out of Italy, but the empe- The emperor and the king of England thought of means to invade Henry's de-Francis in his own kingdom. They had expected great figns upon matters from the duke of Bourbon's revolt, but hitherto it France. was not poffible to make any use of it, because the conspi- Guicciard, Bellai, racy was difcovered too foon. The affairs of Italy having Mezerai. prospered beyond expectation, they resolved to make use of Herbert. the duke of Bourbon to carry war into France, imagining if he could have fome confiderable advantage, he would cause part of the kingdom to rebel. The duke himself fed them with these hopes, because that was the thing which rendered rendered him confiderable. He would have been glad to act 1524. in fome place near his own territories, from whence he ex-The duke of pected great fupplies. But it was thought more proper that he fhould enter Provence with an army, by reafon he could Bom bon prepares to eafily be affisted by the Spanish fleet, which kept at Genoa; enter Prowhereas by engaging in the middle of the kingdom, the fleet vence. Henry binds would be of no fervice. This refolution being taken, Henry himfelf to readily promifed to find the duke a hundred ° thousand find him crowns a month, on condition that after the first mouth. money. he should be free to discontinue the payment, provided he Act. Pub. XIII.p.794, acted himfelf in Picardy at the head of a royal army, from the first of July to the end of December. Guicciard. The duke of

Though the emperor had put the duke of Bourbon in hopes he would lend him all his army in Italy for his expedimarches into tion into Provence, he could not however difpenfe with leaving a good part at Milan, and other places of that duchy, under the command of Lanoy viceroy of Naples. On the other hand, the Venetians withdrew their troops, becaufe they had promifed by their private treaty only to defend the Milanefe. So, the duke of Bourbon began his march the 24th of June much weaker than he expected f, and entered Provence the fecond of July. He prefently became. master of Aix and some other places, and at last came before Marfeilles, the taking whereof was the chief end of his expedition. But a few days before, Renzo de Ceri an Italian captain in the French fervice had entered with a ftrong garrifon. Whereupon the duke found he fhould meet with more refistance than he had imagined, but however he opened the fiege.

> Mean while Francis I. having intelligence of Bourbon's march, ordered his forces to be affembled, and fome troops fent to Avignon, for fear the enemy fhould feize it. There he refolved to affemble his army, and came himfelf to command in perfon. It is needlefs to fpeak either of the fiege of Marfeilles, or of the king's great diligence in affembling his troops. It fuffices to fay, that the very day he departed from Avignon, in order to fight the imperialists, namely, the 10th of September, the duke of Bourbon raifed the fiege of Marseilles, and retired into Italy. Whilft the king was at Avignon, he received the news of his queen's death, who died at Blois in July.

e According to the computation in Rymer, it amounted to one hundred and twenty four thousand crowns. tom.

XIII. p. 795. f He had thirteen thousand foot, and three thousand horse. Rapin.

The Mezerai.

705.

Bourbon

Provence.

Guicciard.

P. Daniel.

He belieges Marfeilles. P. Daniel. Pol. Virg.

Francis I. flies to its relief;

and forces the duke to tetire into Italy. Bellai. P. Daniel.

The duke of Bourbon's retreat entirely changed the face 1524. of affairs. Francis I. who had been in danger of lofing und Provence, faw himfelf at the head of above forty thousand The king marchesinto men, ready to be employed in any important undertaking. Italyanother So, perceiving that the imperialifts took a great compais to way. retire into Italy, he refolved to improve that advantage, and Guicciard. the fuperiority of his army, to recover the Milanefe. This P. Daniel. refolution being taken, he began his march, and tried to reach Milan before them. On the other hand, the duke of Bourbon having notice that the king was taking the fhorteft road to Milan, made incredible fpeed not to be prevented, perceiving that thereon would depend the prefervation of the duchy. Thus the two armies marching by different routs, The two arrived the fame day, one at Albe, the other at Vercelli. A armies ar-rived on the few days after the duke of Bourbon joined the viceroy of Na- fame day. ples at Pavia.

Whilft the imperial army was in Provence, the court of Henry alters England was otherwife disposed than before, and seemed to his defigns, and forfakes intend to follow new maxims. Henry made no diversion in the emperor. Picardy, though he had paid but one month of the fubfidy Herbert. he was to give the duke of Bourbon. This was fufficient to Guicciard. create fuspicions in the emperor, which were confirmed by Henry's unfeasonable demand of the money lent him at his departure from England 5. He could not believe, Henry would demand his money at fo improper a time, inftead of performing his own engagements, unless he intended to feek an occasion of quarrel. His uneafiness still increased upon Hall. advice from his ambaffador in England, that a perfon h was Stow. come from France to London from the duchefs of Angoulême regent of that kingdom, and had long and frequent conferences with cardinal Wolfey. All this added to the cardinal's revengeful temper, whom he had vainly amufed with hopes of the papacy, made him juftly apprehenfive that the king of England was thinking to abandon him and join with his enemy. However, in the prefent fituation of affairs, there was no other measure to take, fince all depended on the fuccefs of the war which was going to be renewed in Italy, where his generals were not a little embarafied.

As foon as the duke of Bourbon and the viceroy of Na- The impeples were joined, they confulted upon what was to be done rialifts a-bandon at fo ill a juncture. At first, they refolved to leave strong Milan, g And likewife the yearly penfion that used to be paid Henry by France, (fee above, p. 194.) as also the cardinal's penfion of two thousand five hundred ducats, &c. Guicciard. 1. 15. h John Joathim, a Genoese. Hall, fol. 135.

garrifons

Herbert.

Guicciard. P. Daniel. Hall.

The French enter the befieged. Guicciard. Francis I. He befieges Pavia.

The imperialifts raife troops in Germany.

The pope treats privately with the king. Guicciard. Herbert.

Francis fends a detach ment to Naples. Bellai. Mezerai. Clement dittembles with the emperor, incenfed against him. Guicciard.

garrifons in Pavia and Alexandria, and take refuge in Milan. But the plague had made fuch ravage in that city, every thing there was in fo great confusion, and money and provisions fo scarce, that they were forced to defift from their defign and abandon Milan: So, having well ftored Pavia and Alexandria, they withdrew to Soncino, where Francesco Sforza also repaired with them.

Mean while, Francis I. continuing his march towards Milan, and hearing the imperialists were retired, caufed his The caffle is troops to enter the city, and ordered the caffle to be invefted. If, inftead of going to Milan he had marched directly to the imperialists, who were little able to withstand him, False flep of he would have infallibly difperfed them. But Bonnivet's unfortunate advice induced him not only to march to Milan, which must have fallen into his hands if he had defeated or routed the imperialists, but also to resolve to befiege Pavia. When he appeared before that place, the generals of the imperialists began to take courage, in expectation that the length of the fiege and the winter feafon would afford them time to take fome measures. Mean while, they speedily fent for a fupply of ten thousand Germans. The pope, the Venetians, and the Florentines failing them all at once upon the French king's coming into Italy, their only refuge was the length of the fiege of Pavia which began in November.

> Clement VII. who in the late pontificate had openly declared against the king of France, being in great perplexity, fent a nuntio to the two armies to procure a truce; but not fucceeding, he made his peace with the king of France. Moreover, he proposed to him the conquest of the kingdom of Naples, and concluded with him a private treaty, promifing free paffage to the French troops.

Prefently after, Francis detached five or fix thousand men under the command of the duke of Albany, who had left . Scotland the beginning of the fpring, with orders to march towards Naples. As they were neceffarily to pass through the ecclefiaftical ftate, Clement VII. pretended for fome time to oppose it, to make believe it was against his will. When the French were in the middle of his dominions, he publifhed his agreement with the king of France, as if newly made, and fent the emperor notice, excufing himfelf on the who is much neceffity and conftraint he was under. Though the emperor was very flegmatick, he could not help flowing, on this occasion, an extreme refentment against the pope. He faid, it was folely at the inftance of Leo X. that he had undertaken the defence of Italy : That Clement himfelf had preffed fed Adrian VI. to fign the league, and now he was become pope, forfook him in his greatest need, and left him to pro- fecute alone a war kindled by himfelf: that however he hoped to come off with honour, and to the confusion of thosewho fo basely deferted him. The event showed however, the pope had done him fignal fervice, 'in perfuading his enemy to carry war into the kingdom of Naples, fince he thereby caufed him to divide his forces. But it is uncertain whether the pope had any fuch intention.

Another accident farther contributed to deprive Francis Francis fends of his great superiority over his enemies. Renzo de Ceri, another dewho defended Marfeilles, having received the king's orders tachment to to embark ten thousand men on the gallies, and join the Guicciard, duke of Albany, who expected him in Tufcany, took Savona in his way. This fuccefs which feemed very advantageous for Francis, turned to his real misfortune, as it put him upon fending a fresh detachment to Savona, under the conduct of the marquifs of Saluzzo, to take against Genoa what advantages should offer. The two detachments for The impe-Naples and Savona¹, fo weakened the French army, that rialifs take the field. the imperialists no longer feared to take the field, in order to prolong the fiege of Pavia, till the arrival of the German fuccours, which the duke of Bourbon himfelf was gone to haften. And indeed, within a few days Pefcarra be- They annoy came master of Cassano, a post very convenient for his pur- thebefiegers. pose. With this event ended the year 1524. But before I proceed to the next, at will be necessary briefly to mention what had paffed this year in Scotland.

The duke of Albany returning into France in May, the Affairs of queen dowager and the earl of Arran of the houfe of Ha-Scotland. Buchanan. milton, advifed the young king, who was between thirteen Herbert, and fourteen years old, to affume himfelf the reins of the Hall. government. This advice was very interested, but James was too young to perceive it. He followed it, and fum- End of Almoning the states, declared the authority of the regent was bany's reended, and for the future all orders were to be received from the king himfelf. After that, the queen and the earl of Arran governed in the king's name. This change was not made with univerfal approbation. The earls of Lenox and Argyle, concerned to fee the earl of Arran in possession of the government, under colour of the king's anticipated majority, fent for the earl of Angus from France, to fupport themselves by his interest, because he was entirely fallen i Both which were fixteen thousand men. Herbert, p. 62.

1524.

Angus is declared regent,

Act. Pub. 21, 23--28. Hall. Hollingfh.

Clement confirms Henry's title of defender of the faith. p. 13. Hefuppreffes monasteries for the cardinal's colleges. p. 15.

to the cardinal. p. 18.

Another bull. p. 23. Hall. Stow.

out with the queen his wife. Upon that lord's arrival, they combined with him, and on pretence of freeing the king from the pretended captivity, the queen and the earl of Arran held him in, levied troops and took Sterling, after which The earl of they marched to Edinburgh where the king was. At their approach, the queen and the earl carried the king into the caftle, but as they had not taken care to lay in provisions, were forced in few days to deliver the king to the three lords, who affumed the title of regents. Thus the king was again put in guardianship under these three lords, who agreed to rule by turns, four months each. The earl of Angus begun, and as he was in the king of England's in-XIV. p. 20, tereft, fent ambaffadors to treat of the king of Scotland's marriage with the princess Mary, according to Henry's own scheme. To facilitate this negotiation, the truce which was to expire the 1st of December, was prolonged to the 26th of January 1525.

As England was very quiet during the whole year 1524. the affairs of that kingdom will not take me up long. I shall only observe, that Clement VII. finding himself in a very ill fituation between the emperor and the king of France, fnewed great regard for the court of England, whole affistance. he thought, he might want. To that purpose, he confirmed the king's title of defender of the faith, conferred on him by Leo X k. and, to please cardinal Wolfey, fuppreffed St. Fridefwid's priory in Oxford, on the ground whereof the cardinal intended to build his college, and appropri-Bull granted ated the revenues to the new foundation. But as this was not fufficient for the maintenance of the college, the cardinal procured powers to vifit all the religious houfes, notwithftanding their immunities, and particularly those of the Francifcans, who pretended to be exempted. This was to make a certain lift of fuch as might be fuppreffed, in order to transfer the revenues to his colleges. The bull which gave him these powers, was dated the 21st of August. On the 11th of September following, the pope granted him another bull, empowering him to suppress as many monasteries as he pleafed to the value of three thousand ducats a year for the fame ufe 1.

> In the beginning of December, cardinal Laurentius Campeius, who had been the pope's legate in Germany, was k This bull is dated March 5, and has a golden feal appendent to it, which is engraved in Rymer's Ford, tom. XIV. p. 14.

> > 3

I In this bull the pope fays, there were some monasteries which had not above five or fix perfons. Ibid. p. 24.

made

222

made bifhop of Salifbury with the king's confent. We muft 1524. now return to the fiege of Pavia, to behold an event which made a very great alteration in the affairs of Europe, wherein Cardinal Campejus England was deeply concerned m. made bifhop

Francis I. still perfisted in the fiege, though without mak- of Salibury. ing much progrefs, becaufe of the rigour of the feason, and Act. Pub. the imperial army, which being posted at Cassano, annoved XIV. p. 29. his convoys very much. Befides, he had made three detachments, one to befiege the caftle of Milan, another for Guicciard, Naples, and a third for Savona. On the other hand, the Bellai. duke of Bourbon came from Germany about the end of Ja- Mezerai. nuary, with a supply of ten thousand foot, and a thousand Bourbon horse ", which made the imperial army two and twenty brings thousand firong. As the generals wanted money, and for that troops from reason were not fure of hindering the army from difbanding, Germany. they refolved to attempt the relicf of Pavia. To that end, they began to march the 3d of February towards the town, bent to improve what opportunities should offer. But as the camp of the befiegers was ftrongly intrenched, they waited three weeks before they executed fo dangerous a refolution, which might be attended with terrible confequences. Mean while, the Grifons having recalled their fix thousand men in the French fervice, and these troops departing, notwithftanding all the king's endeavours to detain them °, the duke of Bourbon thought he should no longer defer attacking the enemy's camp. This refolution was executed the even of St. Matthias P, with a fuccels very fatal to The French Francis, fince his army was routed, and himfelf unfortu- are attacked, nately taken prifoner 9.

and their king made The prisoner. Guicciard.

m In the beginning of the year 1524, fir Anthony Fitzherbert, one of the juffices of the Common Pleas, fir Ralph Egerton, and dr. Denton, dean of Litchfield, were fent commissioners into Ireland; where they reformed feveral abuses, and constituted Gerald Fitzgerald, deputy of that kingdom, of which the earl of Ormond was appointed treasurer. Hall, fol. 130. Hollingfh. p. 883. --- About this time alfo, divers things were newly brought into England, whereupon this ryme was made :

Turkeys, Carps, Hops, Piccarel and Beer, Came into England, all in one year. ,

Five hundred men at arms, and fix thousand Landsquenets. Guicciard.

 I. 15.
 Befides, three thousand Italians, Communide Mewhole commander Genovanni de Medici was hurt, difbanded themfelves. Herbert, p. 62.

p Being the emperor's birth day. Guicciard.

9 In this battle Richard de la Pole, often mentioned before, was slain. Stow, p. 522. It appears from Du Tillet, that June 20, 1523, king Francis concluded a treaty with fome maleTHE HISTORY

-The emperor becomes formidable to all Europe.

The Venetians propose a league againft the emperor. Guicciard,

The pope durft not venture upon it. He treats with the emperor. Guicciard.

The emperor's generals at a loís. army. Guicciard.

The fuccefs of this battle filled all Europe with confternation and dread. The emperor was without a rival, and in condition to overrun Italy with his victorious army, whilft the king of England his ally, had it in his power to give France a mortal wound on the fide of Picardy. Confequently, the balance of Europe being taken away, the fovereigns, for the most part had great reason to dread falling at last into flavery. The Venetians alone, perfectly knowing the danger, proposed to the pope a league against the emperor, not questioning the king of England would also join in it, because it was his interest. This league added to the forces France could still bring into the field, and the fupplies which might be received from the Switzers by paying them well, would have been fufficient to keep the emperor in awe, if it could have been fpeedily concluded. But the pope preferring his own interest to that of Europe in general, haftened his treaty with the viceroy of Naples, who acted in the emperor's name. By this treaty, the emperor, among other things, was to give the investiture of Milan to Francesco Sforza. There were also three separate articles concerning the pope in particular, namely, I. That the inhabitants of the Milanese should furnish themfelves with falt from the pope's territories. 2. That the emperor fhould compel the duke of Ferrara to reftore to the church the town of Reggio, feized after Leo X.'s death. 3. That the pope fhould have the difpofal of the benefices in the kingdom of Naples. By this treaty, which was of no force till ratified by the emperor, the politick viceroy found means to defer the project of league against the emperor, proposed by the Venetians, and to render the other powers jealous of the pope. This was the greatest fervice he could poffibly do his master on this occasion.

Mean while, the emperor's generals were greatly embaraffed after fo glorious a victory, for want of money to pay their troops. They had indeed received a hundred Theydifband thousand ducats from Florence, but that not fufficing to pay part of their the arrears and fubliftence of the army, they were forced to difband the best part of the troops, when by the treaty with the pope, they were fure of having no league to fear. Besides Triulzi, who was besieging the castle of Milan, had > malecontents in Ireland, wherein he engaged to fend over fifteen thousand men, not only to conquer part of that kingdom, but also from thence to invade England, and procure the crown for the faid Richard de la Pole, who had fome pretenfions to it, as being fon of Elizabeth, fifter of king Edward IV. Du Tillet, p. 397, 412.

now .

now repassed the Alps, and the duke of Albany was only 1525. thinking of retiring into France with his army. This dif- banding of troops, would have been of very great confequence to the emperor, whole interest it was to prevent by his moderation the measures which the alarmed states of Italy might take against him, if his generals had proceeded accordingly. But profperity caufing them to be wanting in policy, they treated the flates of Italy, and efpecially the Venetians, with a haughtinefs that gave them occafion to think their liberty in danger, and made them refolve to ufe all poffible endeavours to avoid the threatened flavery.

The emperor could better diffemble his fentiments. He The empereceived the news of the victory of Pavia, and the French ror's mode-ration at the king's captivity, with great moderation, forbidding any de-news of the monstrations of joy, and faying, christians ought to rejoice victory of only for victories over infidels. He feemed to fympathife Pavia. with Francis's misfortune, and, as I may fay, to put himfelf in his place, by acknowledging it to be a mere chance, and no prince, how brave foever, exempt from the like accident. Prefently after he called his council to debate what He debates was to be done with the prifoner. His confessor, who spoke about what first, was for releasing him without terms. He represented with his to him, that by fuch a generous action, he would not only prifoner. acquire immortal fame, but alfo make the king of France His confefhis real friend, who, not to be outdone in generofity, would for's advice. doubtlefs ftrive to express his gratitude: that with his help, P. Daniel. he would give law to Germany and Italy, without being obliged to demand the affiftance of other inferior princes. But the duke of Alva answered all these arguments, and The duke of concluded it was best to reap from this victory, all the ad-Alva's opi-nion, which vantages it could naturally procure; and the emperor em- is followed. braced his opinion. This plainly flows, that his pretended moderation was but a difguife to hinder the princes of Europe from being alarmed, and from concerting meafures to oppofe the execution of his ambitious defigns.

To continue this difguile, he fent the count of Beaurain Theemperor into Italy with certain terms, on which he was willing to for Francis's release his prifoner. He was very fure Francis would not liberty. accept them. But it was his intereft to make the world be-Guicciard. lieve it was not his fault that the French king was not releafed. Herbert. Wherefore, it was every where industriously reported, that the emperor had fent the king very reafonable terms. But great care was taken not to publish them. Among other things, he demanded for himfelf the duchy of Burgundy r.

r And that Francis should renounce all pretensions to Italy. Guicciard. 1. 16. VOL. VI. More-

Moreover, he had a mind to join to the duke of Bourbon's territories, Provence and Dauphiné, and erect the whole for that prince into a kingdom independent of the crown of France. Laftly, he demanded that Francis should give the king of England entire fatisfaction, concerning what was due to him. The first of these conditions in justice and equity, contained nothing ftrange. King Lewis XI. took poffeffion of the duchy of Burgundy, after the death of the last duke, under colour of a title which was contefled, and of which however he made himself judge. It could not therefore be taken ill, that the emperor fhould demand reflitution of what was wrested from Mary of Burgundy his grandmother, at least, till the cause was legally decided. But what was furprizing, and very hard in the emperor's propofals, was, his defire to establish in the heart of France, an independent kingdom, to gratify a rebellious fubject, the prime author of the king's misfortune. Probably, he infifted on this article only to make the first pass the better, or to give occasion rejects them. for a rupture, Francis I. rejected these conditions with the utmost indignation s, and fwore, he would rather be a captive all his life than accept them t. But he offered, in his turn, conditions which he thought very advantageous to the conqueror, namely, that he would marry Leonora queen dowager of Portugal the emperor's fifter, and give the duke of Bourbon his fifter the duchefs of Alençon, who had lately loft the duke her hufband: that he would agree to hold the duchy of Burgundy as the queen dowager's dowry, and leave it to their male heirs : that he would reftore to the duke of Bourbon, all his confifcated effates: that he would renounce all claim to Naples and Milan: that he would fatisfy the king of England concerning what was due to him : finally, that he would pay the fame ranfom as king John, when taken prifoner at the battle of Poictiers. But the emperor Theemperor was not fatisfied with these offers. He still infissed that the rejects them. duchy of Burgundy should be restored to him without condition. Moreover, he affirmed that Francis had no right to Naples and Milan, and therefore his offer to relinquish it, was needlefs and chimerical.

> s Adding, that it was not in his power to alienate any of the demessished belonging to the crown of France, without the confent of the parliament, and other perfons vefted with the government of the kingdom. Ibid.

t When the articles were prefented to Francis, he was fo difpleafed at them, that he is faid in a fury to draw his dagger and cry, it 'is better for a king of France to die thus: upon which Hernando de Alençon who was prefent, hastily took the dagger from him. Herbert, p. 66.

226 1525.

The king

He offers others.

Guicciard.

Herbert.

It

It was not without reason that the emperor persisted in 1525. his demands. It is easy to judge the confternation of France, after the loss file had lately fuftained, the king was a cap- Great contive, and almost all her generals taken or flain in the bat-frenation in France. tle of Pavia. The kingdom being exhaufted by continual Guicciard. wars under this and the former reigns, was destitute of men and money. The Switzers were disheartened. The canton of Zurich which had refused to furnish the king with troops for the war, was still in the fame disposition from a principle of confcience. Zuinglius, who had great intereft in that canton, perfuaded the fenate, that to barter the blood of their citizens for money, and ferve the ambition of princes, was an infamous thing. But though all the cantons had been equally inclined to find troops, it was well known, they would not do it without being paid; and to procure the money was no eafy thing.' On the other hand, there was reason to fear, the king of England would improve the opportunity to invade France through Picardy, whilft the emperor attacked the provinces bordering upon Spain. In fine, there was nothing to be expected from Italy, fince the pope had made his peace with the emperor, it being impoffible the Venetians would alone maintain the war for the fake of France. Thus was seen on all fides just cause of alarm. Certainly, had the emperor and Henry renewed their league, and vigoroufly attacked France, that kingdom in its prefent ill circumftances, must have been ruined. But at the time the regent, and all true Frenchmen were under these apprehensions, a ray of hope appeared, which hindered their courage from finking entirely. The pope and Several the emperor could not agree, though outwardly they feem- things coned willing to unite. The Venetians were inclined to join vive the in a league with the other ftates to oppose the emperor's courage of progrefs. In fhort, the king of England, inftead of taking the French. advantage of the king of France's misfortune, generoufly Guicciard. took his part. On the other hand, Francesco Sforza, seeing himfelf as it were the emperor's flave, ftrove to throw off his yoke, and though he milcarried his attempt however produced a good effect, as it fhewed the emperor the difpolition of the princes who entered into the plot, which it will be neceffary to explain, in order to give a diffinct idea of the affairs of those times, wherein England was concerned. But first it must be seen what became of the captive king.

The unfortunate prisoner was kept in the caftle of Piz-Francis I. zighitone till Easter, but with so much uneasiness on the part is carried into Spain, of the imperialists, that they durft not remove their troops June.

from

1525. Guicciard, P. Daniel. from that quarter, for fear of his being refcued. At laft, Lanoy hearing, the Venetian ambaffador at Rome had frequent conferences with the pope, was afraid fome plot was forming to deliver the prifoner. Wherefore, without imparting his defign to the duke of Bourbon, whom perhaps he mistrusted, he refolved to convey him into Spain. But this was difficult, fince he had no naval force, and the French gallies were at fea. To remove this obstacle, he infinuated to the king, that the only way fpeedily to obtain his liberty was to confer in perfon with the emperor : that as the emperor was a generous prince, and had fhown a concern for his misfortune, their interview could not but produce a good effect, and promote a fpeedy peace. Francis agreed to it, full of hopes that he fhould do more himfelf in two or three conferences with the emperor, than his ministers in many months. He even lent the viceroy his gallies to carry him into Spain, where he arrived about the middle of June.

· He is fhut up in the caffle of Madrid. Guicciard.

> comes to treat about him.

vifits him. Guicciard.

Difficulties about the peace.

He flattered himfelf, he fhould be treated in Spain as king John was in England : but at his arrival, he had the mortification to be confined in the castle of Madrid, where the emperor, inftead of treating with him in perfon, did not fo The duchefs much as pay him a vifit. All he could obtain was a fafe of Alengon conduct for his fifter the duchefs of Alençon, who came to Madrid in September. She was empowered by the regent her mother to negotiate with the emperor. But at last the Hefallsfick, was forced to return and nothing obtained. When the came to Madrid, she found the king her brother so ill, that his Theemperor recovery was defpaired of. As there was no room to doubt. that his grief at feeing his liberty fo remote occafioned his illnefs, the emperor posted from Toledo to Madrid, to visit and comfort him, in the apprehenfion of lofing by his prifoner's death the advantages he expected from his captivity. He put him therefore in hopes of his deliverance in the two vifits he made him, though in general terms, which however produced the defired effect, fince the king recovered his health. But when after his recovery he would have renewed the negotiation, he quickly perceived he was farther from his deliverance than he imagined. The emperor still infisted upon the reflitution of Burgundy, and when the king offered to espouse the princess Leonora and hold that duchy as her dowry, Charles excufed himfelf as having promifed to give the queen his fifter in marriage to the duke of Bourbon. It was no fmall mortification to Francis to fee one of his fubjects preferred before him. But what troubled him still more was, that that he faw it to be only a pretence to retard the conclusion 1525. of the treaty. So, in the despair the emperor's rigor threw him into, he gave the duchefs of Alençon a writing under Francis orhis hand, whereby he confented and even ordered, that the ders the dau-phin his fon ftates of France should crown the dauphin his fon. This in to be France is called the edict of Madrid. But the parliament crowned. of Paris thought not fit to record it, either becaufe it was a- The parlia-ment of Pagainft the laws of the realm, or they deemed fuch an imper- ris refufe. fect edict to be of no authority fince the king was not free. P. Daniel. It may be, Francis thereby defigned to let the emperor fee, that inftead of having a king in his power, he ran the hazard of having only a prince without dominions.

Whilft the emperor amused his prisoner in Spain, he acted Theemperor with no greater fincerity with the pope, who did not know deals deceitwhat to think of his proceedings, The victorious monarch the pope. had courted him very earnestly. But after making a treaty He fends an with him by the viceroy of Naples, he long delayed to ratify imperfect it, and at last had fent his ratification without including the of the treaty three separate articles. He faid, that as to the duke of Fer- of Rome, rara, he could not oblige him to deliver Reggio to the pope, Guicciard. being a fief of the empire. As to the fecond article, whereby the emperor was bound to oblige the inhabitants of the Milanese to take their salt of the pope's subjects, he said, that concerned only the duke of Milan, and for his part he could not promife for others. That for the benefices of Naples, he could not agree to that article, unlefs a limitation was added, which rendered it of no effect, namely, that what had been practifed in the reigns of the former kings of Naples should be conformed to. The pope finding, the empe- The pope ror refused to ratify these three articles, would not accept of rejects it. the ratification, and they both remained upon the fame terms as before the treaty. But the emperor had obtained his de- Theemperor fires, fince he had obstructed the league which was project- offers the ining against him, in rendering the pope fuspected by the reft Milan to of the fovereigns.

There was another thing which fhewed the emperor's in- condition fincerity, namely, having fent the investiture of Milan to performed. Franceico Sforza, he clogged it with the condition that Sfor- Guicciard. za thould pay him twelve hundred thousand ducats in recompense for his charges in keeping that duchy for him. As it was evident, Sforza could not poffibly perform this condition, it was no lefs fo that the emperor only fought a pretence to continue mafter of Milan. These things alarmed The pope the pope, who heard befides, that the council of Spain was falls off more not favourable to him. And indeed, fome of the emperor's and more. minifters

Sforza, on a

P 3

1525.

The Veneyour to form a league against the cmperor. Guicciard.

A& Pub.

The pope continues undetermined.

Guicciard.

Sforza is, kept in fervitude by the imperialifts. Guicciard.

ministers had advised him to chastife the pope for joining with France at fo critical a juncture, and compel him to reftore Modena to the duke of Ferrara, and Bologna to the Bentivoglios.

On the other hand, the Venetians feeing there was no tians endea- likelihood, that the emperor really intended to reftore Sforza, could not but be alarmed at his keeping the duchy of Milan. Wherefore, they used their utmost endeavours to perfuade the pope and the king of England to join with them and France against the emperor, well knowing that otherwife all Italy would fall under the dominion of the houfe of Austria. A letter of Andrea Gritti their doge to cardinal XIV. p. 36. Wolfey of the 31ft of March, extant in the collection of the publick acts, thows, that thefe able politicians had formed this project fhortly after the battle. The letter indeed is only an ambaffador's credentials, who had orders to treat with the king upon a very important affair. But at fuch a juncture, this important affair could be only the league they were projecting.

> Mean while, the pope was extremely embarraffed. In attempting to manage too artfully, he made fo many falfe fteps, that he knew not which way to turn. This is frequently the cafe of those, who quitting the great road walk through by-ways. Clement VII. could not refolve either to be fatisfied with the emperor's offers, or enter into a league against him. In this uncertainty, he chose to follow the example of Leo X. and Julius II. his predeceffors, that is, to treat with the emperor and his enemies at the fame time, in order to be determined by the events in what would be most advantageous. To that end, whilst he was treating at Rome with the Venetians, he fent cardinal Salviati to Spain, to negotiate with the emperor, putting into his hands a difpenfation, defired by that monarch, to marry his niece Isabella of Portugal. But the dispensation was not to be delivered to the emperor till after the conclusion of the treaty.

> The affairs of Italy being in this fituation, another accident happened, which plainly fhowed the emperor only fought to amule all the fovereigns by a feigned moderation, whilft in truth he was folely thinking of extending his dominions. His league with Adrian VI. and the reft of the ftates of Italy, was founded upon Francesco Sforza's reftoration to the duchy of Milan. As this was the common interest of Italy, fo was it likewife the only bond by which the emperor had found means to unite all the potentates against France, then 10 in possession of the Milanefe. That league had succeeded according to the defires of the allies. The French were driven out of Italy, and Sforza reftored. But though the emperor had pretended to give him the inveftiture, he had not yet done it, becaufe Sforza was not able to pay the twelve hundred thousand ducats he demanded. He was made to hope he fhould obtain more moderate, terms, but that was only to amufe him, and remove his as well the pope's and Venetians fufpicion, that the emperor intended to keep the duchy for himfelf, or give it to his brother the archduke Ferdinand.

230

What was then but a bare fulpicion, foon became a cer- Theemperor tainty. The duke of Bourbon going into Spain, to take care lays a fnare for Sforza in of his concerns, Ferdinand d'Avalos, marquis of Pescara, order to difwas commiffioned by the emperor to command in Italy. poffers him. Shortly after, Pescara affected to appear very diffatisfied, and Guicciard. openly to complain of the emperor's ingratitude. He carried his diffimulation fo far, that at laft he infpired Jeronimo Moronè, the duke of Milan's chancellor, with the boldnefs to found him, to fee whether by his means the Spaniards might be driven out of the Milanefe. Pescara hearkened to his infinuations, had feveral conferences with him, and managed fo dexteroully, that he engaged Morone to caufe the duke himfelf to fpeak to him about the affair. Morone's project was to kill all the Spaniards in the duchy of Milan, and make Pescara king of Naples. As this could not be effected without foreign aid, Pefcara proposed to engage in the plot, the pope, the regent of France, and the Venetians. Accordingly, these three powers came into it, and promised their affistance. When matters were almost ripe, Pescara re- Pescara ceived the emperor's orders to difpoffels the duke of Milan takes away all his places, entirely. He began with feizing Morone, and then con- and befieges ftrained the duke, who was not able to refift, to refign the the caffle of city of Milan and all the reft of the towns in his poffeffion, Milan, Only the caffle of Milan Sforza would not deliver, which was therefore immediately befieged. Thus the emperor had a plaufible colour to render himfelf mafter of the duchy, and the pope and Venetians could not complain of his punishing Sforza's treachery, fince there were evident proofs that they themfelves were concerned in the plot.

The artifice practifed by the emperor to feize the Milanefe, The Vene-ferved only to confirm the Venetians in their refolution to uponSforza's hazard all to hinder that duchy from remaining in the hands reftoration. of the house of Austria. Without troubling themselves to Guicciard, juflify their conduct, they plainly told the Spanish ambassa-P 4

P. Daniel.

dor,

231 1525. The pope is in fuspence to declare himfelf.

He fuffers himfelf to be over reached by the Spanish ambaifador. Guicciard.

Pefcara's death,

Henry thinks of fiding with France. Guicciard. Hollingfh.

another.

Caufes of their falling out. Guieciard.

dor, who prefied them to join with the emperor, that Sforza's reftoration was a preliminary they would never depart from. If Clement VII. had fhown the fame refolution, the emperor would have been a little embarraffed. But the pope by acting too politickly fuffered himfelf to be deceived, as he had been before. He had a legate in Spain, who was treating with the emperor, whill himfelf was negotiating at Rome with the French and Venetian ambaffadors a league against that monarch. He impatiently waited the fuccess of his legate's negotiation, and as the conclusion was long delayed, he appointed a day to fign a league with France and Venice. But in the interval, receiving advice that his treaty was concluded at Madrid, he would hear no more of the league. Soon after, the emperor fent him by an express the treaty concluded in Spain, which he found fo equivocal and ambiguous, that he refused to ratify it. The Spanish ambaffador pretending to be himfelf furprifed at the ambiguities of the treaty, ftrenuoufly maintained, they were undefigned, and told the pope, he might draw the treaty as he pleafed, and engaged to have it figned by the emperor within two months. This delay was only to hinder the pope from entering into the league during that time, and Clement fuffered himfelf to be deceived by the affurance wherewith the ambaffador spoke. This was transacted in December 1525, and in the fame month died Pefcara.

Having thus fhown the fituation of affairs in Italy, we must fee what paffed at the court of England, where was no lefs caballing than at Rome and Venice, fince it was then really debating to preferve the balance of Europe, which leaned too much to one fide. The equality between the two houses of France and Austria was properly what made England confiderable, and confequently was an advantage not to be neglected. But there were other reasons that incited Henry Theemperor to forfake the emperor, and join with France. Though the and Henry treaty of Bruges or Windfor feemed to have infeparably unied with one ted the emperor and Henry, it is however certain, they were not pleafed with one another, becaufe each was defirous to make their union fubfervient to his own affairs, without any regard to his ally. Probably cardinal Wolfey, who was very angry with the emperor, did not a little contribute to dispose his master to a rupture.

The princels Mary, Henry's daughter, was affianced to the emperor, and yet the king her father had offered her to the king of Scotland. On the other hand, the emperor had not fcrupled to conclude his own marriage with Ifabella of Portugal,

Portugal, as if he had not been engaged to Mary, and from 1525. hence these two monarchs showed they had very little regard for one another. Charles hearing that Henry was treating of a marriage between his daughter and the king of Scotland, took that occasion to throw upon him the rupture of his marriage. In March " he fent into England the lord of Bu- March. ren, and the prefident of the council of Mechlin, to require Herbert. the king to fend him immediately the princefs, pay down the Hollingfh. covenanted dowry, and purfuant to their league, enter Picardy with a powerful army, as he fhould have done the last year. It was easy for Henry to perceive, the emperor fought only to justify himself, without any intention to accomplish his marriage with Mary, and this way of proceeding was not very proper to preferve a good understanding. But on the other hand, the emperor had no less reason to complain of him. Henry had promifed to find a hundred thousand crowns a month for the duke of Bourbon's expedition into France, or to make a powerful diversion in Picardy. But after fetting the affair on foot by the first monthly payment, he had stopped there without making any attempt against France, Nay, he had demanded the money due to him, when he knew the emperor was not able to pay him. This proceeding feemed to demonstrate he only fought a pretence. Moreover, the emperor was' informed, that in October last, when Francis I. was marching into Italy, a perfon without character " came to London from the regent, and had feveral conferences with cardinal Wolfey. But then Charles had promifed to invade France on the fide of Spain, without having done any thing towards it. And yet he took it very ill that Henry flould difappoint him. Thus these two monarchs who were thought fo ftrictly united, and whofe union made France and Italy tremble, were in reality eftranged from one another, and ready to quarrel. In all ap- Wolfey conpearance, the conferences of the perfon from France with tributes to cardinal Wolfey had taken effect. Befides, the cardinal who the rupture. was very revengeful, must have been extremely incenfed with the emperor for deceiving him twice, after a politive promife to help him to the papacy.

It was in the beginning of March that the emperor's two Henry fliews ambaffadors difcharged their commission. But before they a regard for had received an answer, the name of the bettle of Paulo France. had received an answer, the news of the battle of Pavia, Herbert, Hall.

" They arrived in London, March 5. Hall, fol, 136, w John Jachim de Paffau. See above.

and 234 1525.

Herbert.

Henry advifes with his council about the courfe he and the taking of the king of France reached England x, by a letter from the governess of Flanders, with another from Lanoy, written on the very day of the battle. As the court of England then flood inclined, this news was by no means agreeable. Nevertheles, as it was still necessary to diffemble, Henry ordered a folemn mass to be celebrated at St. Paul's, where he was pleafed to be prefent in perion y, without however caufing te deum to be fung z. His aim was to make the emperor's ambaffadors believe, it was on account of the victory, and withal to fhow a regard for France, by avoiding to express any joy at her misfortune.

Some days after, the council was affembled to confider what was to be done at this juncture. The queffion was, whether the opportunity fhould be embraced to make conquefts upon France, in profecuting the king's title to that thould take, kingdom, or whether it was more expedient to affift and preferve France entire, and oppole the growing power of the house of Austria. As to the first point, it is certain, if on this occafion, England had ftrictly united with the emperor, and made vigorous efforts on the fide of Picardy, France in her prefent condition would have been irrecoverably loft. For, inftead of being able to withftand the arms of thefe two powerful enemies, it was not possible for her to refift the emperor without the king of England's affiftance. But on the other hand, it was confidered, that France could not be ruined without rendering the emperor too powerful: that he was already in poffession of Spain, and had also an eye upon Portugal, by marrying his niece Ifabella as it was publickly reported : that his late victory in Milan gave him fuch a fuperiority in Italy, that probably the pope and the Venetians would not be able to make head against him : that he posfeffed almost all the Low Countries with large and rich provinces in Germany; not to reckon the imperial dignity which was become as hereditary in his family : that if by a powerful diversion, an opportunity was given him to conquer the French provinces bordering upon Spain and Italy, the most the king could expect was, to fhare France with him : but it was to be feared, that afterwards the emperor would become his enemy, and the more formidable, as there would be no proportion between their forces, nor any flate in Eu> x On March 9, Hall, fol. 136. Herbert, p. 64.

y March 12. Accompanied by the ambaffudors of the pope, the emperor, Scotland, Venice, Milan, and Florence. The day before, there were bonfires in London on account of this victory. Hall, fol. 136.

2 Hall affirms the contrary. Ibid.

rope

rope capable of fupporting the weakeft : that therefore, fuppofing the king had in France all the fuccefs he could wifh, in aggrandifing himfelf in that kingdom, he would only be involved for the future in an unequal war with the emperor, who very probably would never be fatisfied till he had difpoffeffed the English of their conquests : that what had passed between Lewis XII. and Ferdinand, in respect of the kingdom of Naples, was a clear evidence how difficult it is for fuch partitions long to fubfift : that upon all thefe accounts, it was more for the interest of England, to make a vigorous effort to support France, and enable her to be always a balance to the power of the house of Austria: that the happinefs and glory of England confifted in the equality between the king of France and the emperor, fince thereby England was always in condition to remain arbiter of Europe, and make herfelf courted by both fides : that there was no other way to cause trade to flourish, wherein confisted all her ftrength, and without which the English could never hope to render themselves formidable : that if, on the contrary, it was refolved to compleat the destruction of France, and a war should afterwards happen with the emperor, of which there was great probability, at once would be loft the trade with France, Spain, Italy, Flanders, Germany, which would quickly reduce England to extreme poverty : that at leaft, it would thereby be out of her power to have land and fea forces fufficient to balance the emperor's power. In fhort, if France came to be divided between the emperor and the king, Scotland would certainly join in alliance with the emperor, and continue to annoy England by frequent diverfions as the had always done in favour of France. To thefe confiderations another of greater weight was added, namely, that a league with the emperor to conquer France was not the fame thing, as one with the regent in defence of that kingdom: that in the first, the emperor's fole aim would be to make the English forces ferve to enable him to push his conquests elsewhere; but at the fame time he would oppose directly or indirectly the king's increase of power: that this was the ufual policy of princes when they joined with those weaker than themselves : that it could be the less doubted that the emperor would follow this maxim, as even before the battle of Pavia, he had fhewn, that he confidered the king only as his inftrument to promote his defigns in Italy; but if the king joined with France, the two allies having the fame view, would as is usual in defensive leagues act unanimously : that on the other hand, in the prefent juncture, France not being being able to support herself without the affistance of England, 1525. would readily accept what terms fhould be imposed upon her, which was an advantage more real and certain than any to be expected from the invafion of that kingdom : in a word, nothing could be more glorious for the kingdom, than to relieve France in her diffress and free her captive king : that by fo doing he would truly acquire the title of arbiter and deliverer of Europe, and make of the king of France a friend, who probably would eternally remember fuch a favour. These were the reasons that induced the king and council

235

Henry refolvesto fupport France. He uses for injuries done him by the emperor.

He fends ambaffadors to Spain. Hall. Stow. Herbert. His demands upon the emperor.

to take part with France. They were perfectly agreeable to to the king's and the cardinal's inclinations, and to the meapretence the fures they had now begun to take. The only bufinefs was to feek a pretence to break with the emperor by throwing upon him the blame of the rupture. This is a thing to which princes are very attentive. When they wage unjust wars, they would perfuade the world that they are founded upon juffice and equity, without any motive of envy, jealousy, ambition and avarice. The war Henry was meditating against the emperor was, as we have feen, wholly founded upon policy. And that would have been fufficient to justify it. But he chofe rather to ground it upon the pretended injuries received from the emperor. The reason of this conduct is evident. It feldom happens that policy and equity agree, and Henry, like most princes, had rather be counted a great politician than an honeft man. However, the refolution being taken to support France, Cuthbert Tunstal bishop of London and fir Robert Wingfield were fent into Spain, to demand of the emperor feveral things which it was known he would not grant. First, That as the war was made at a common charge, it was reasonable the king of England should partake of the fruits of the victory of Pavia. That therefore, purfuant to their alliance, it fhould be flipulated in the treaty with the captive king, that Henry fhould be reftored to what belonged to him in France. Secondly, That if this could not be obtained by fair means, the emperor, according to the treaty, fhould prepare to invade France from Spain, whilft the English acted in Picardy, and that the war should not cease till the king of England had acquired all that belonged to him: that the emperor ought to be the readier to affift the king of England in obtaining his defires, becaufe by his marriage with the heirefs of England, all these acquisitions would finally devolve to him. Thirdly, That as it was faid in the treaty of Windfor, the two allies should mutually deliver all usurpers upon each other's right, Henry required,

purfuant

236

pursuant to that article, that the king of France should be 1525. delivered to him the fame day princefs Mary was configned to the emperor.

These demands were for the most part of such a nature, Theemperor that the emperor eafily perceived, Henry only fought a pre- answers in tence to break with him. Indeed, he could not receive the terms. princess Mary, fince he was determined to marry Ifabella of Portugal, and much lefs would he deliver the captive king, and fo part with the advantage he expected from his victory. Having therefore framed his answer in general terms, denoting his unwillingness to grant what was demanded, he afforded Henry the pretence he was feeking to join with the regent of France. When this refolution was divulged, the court Henry reof England took care to publish the reasons of the rupture solves to fide with the emperor. They were briefly thefe : that the governess with France. of the Low Countries, inflead of providing for the war her He publishes quota of forces, had privately treated with France : that the the reafons. Flemings had broken the treaty of commerce in feveral arti-Herbert, cles ^a: that the emperor had not paid the king the fums due to him : that in the terms on which he had offered to release the king of France, he had very negligently and in general only mentioned Henry's right, as a thing of little moment : that he was now treating of his marriage with the princefs of Portugal, in contempt of the prince's Mary to whom he was contracted. Laftly, That the Turks being about to invade Chriftendom b, it was neceffary that all chriftian princes fhould join their forces against them, which could not be done without a general peace; but this peace could not be effected, whilft the emperor remained in arms to aggrandize himfelf at the expence of other princes. Thefe are the reafons alledged in vindication of the king's conduct. But the true reafon was the just jealoufy with which the emperor's power inspired England and the reft of Europe. However, Henry did not think proper to proclaim war against the emperor, being unwilling by fo rafh a ftep, to prejudice his intended treaty with France. He contented himfelf with ordering his ambaffadors in Spain to intercede in his name, in behalf of the captive king, though he expected little from that interceffion. Mean Embaffy of while, he acquainted the regent of France, that if the would France to London.

² They had not only infolently treated divers of our merchants, but, contrary to a remonstrance made in that behalf, had raifed the value of our coin, and thereby fecretly derived great fums into their country. Inftead of the Flemings, Rapin hath, by mistake, Florentines. See Herbert, p. 65.

b They had now taken Belgrade and Rhodes, and thereby opened feveral ways into Italy and Germany. Herbert.

237

fend

238

1525. ----Act. Pub. XIV. p. 37, 45. Hollingfh.

fend ambaffadors to treat with him, there might follow a treaty advantageous to the king her fon and to both kingdoms. The regent immediately appointed Jean Joachim de Paffau lord of Vaux, the fame that had begun the negotiation with cardinal Wolfey, and Jean Brinon prefident of Roan. Their commission was dated at Lyons, June the oth.

Wolfey remoney withliament. Herbert. Stow. Hall. Hollingfh.

The king difavows it.

a benevolence.

The city of London opkeeps his ground. Hall. Stow.

Whilft the treaty between France and England was negofolves to levy tiating at London, Henry, knowing how it would end, comout the par- mitted the raifing of money to cardinal Wolfey's care. The most natural way was to apply to the parliament. But Wolfey was too haughty to expose himself to a refusal or contest with the house of commons, as it had once before happened. So, refolving to use a speedier means and more agreeable to his temper, he granted commissions in the king's name^c, to levy throughout the kingdom the fixth part of every lay-man's goods, and the fourth of the clergy's ^d. Thefe commissions were no fooner published, but the nation was in a great fermentation. This method of raifing money was univerfally deemed a manifest breach of magna charta, and an incroachment of fo great confequence, that there was like to have been a general rebellion. The king being informed of it, immediately isfued out a proclamation, difavowing thefe commissions which had been published in his name, and declaring he would exact nothing of his people by force, nor demand any thing but by way of benevolence, as practifed in He demands the reign of Edward IV. But it was quickly perceived, this was only an artifice to extort under another name, what the people refused to give by force. For, the benevolence demanded by the king was almost equal to what was at first required by way of authority. The Londoners being taxed first, the magistrates excused themselves as benevolences were abo-The cardinal lifthed by Richard III. The cardinal exclaimed against it as if it had been the most extravagant affertion in the world. He told them Richard III. was a tyrant and ufurper, and therefore laws made in his reign could not limit the fovereign's power. But as this argument had no great effect; he fent for the chief of the common council of the city one by one

" c To the most confiderable persons in each county. Hall, fol. 137.

d The cardinal pretended, that this money was to be applied towards carrying war into France. See Hall, fol. 137, 138. He demanded of perfons that were worth fifty pounds, three fhillings and four pence; of fuch as were worth twenty pounds, two fhillings and eight pence; and of those that had from under twenty pounds to twenty shillings, twelve pence in the pound, Hall, fol, 138,

to

to intimidate them, defiring at any rate to compass his ends 1525. without being obliged to call a parliament. But whilft he was thus employed, there was an infurection near London e, Infurection which probably would have drawn in the whole kingdom, if in the country. a timely ftop had not been put to it. The fpeedy courfe that Hall, was taken to difperfe the feditious fucceeded as the court could It is apwifh. They who had taken up arms feeing themfelves not yet peafed. fufficiently fupported, fubmitted to the king's mercy, and fome of the ring-leaders were imprifoned. The king finding The king how the nation flood affected, thought proper to fatisfy them throws the by fhewing he was not concerned in the violent proceedings cardinal. of his minister. Wherefore he declared in full council, that Hall. his intention was not to punifh any perfon for the commoti- Stow. The cardinal perceiving, the king threw all the blame Hollingth. upon him, vindicated himfelf as well as he could, without accufing the king, alledging, he had the judges opinion for what he had done. If fuch an excufe were admitted, it would be no longer neceffary for a king of England to apply to the parliament for money. The judges being appointed by the king, it would not be difficult for him to have their opinion on his fide. But though there have been judges fo hardy as to decide points of this confequence, as in the reigns of Richard II. Charles I. James II. very few escaped the punifhment due to their prefumption. The parliament never intended that the privileges of the nation fhould depend upon the decifion of the judges. The council finding the king The affair was not inclined to support what the cardinal had done, and ends mildly. on the other hand, not daring to come upon the cardinal himfelf, thought fit to throw all the fault, without naming any perfon, upon those that had given the king wrong information, and to releafe the prifoners after a fevere reprimand. Pursuant to this resolution, the prisoners being brought before the council, the cardinal fharply rebuked them, aggravating the heinousness of their offence, and adding that the king was pleafed to grant them his pardon, provided they would find fureties for their good behaviour for the future. But the pri- Herbert. foners replying, they could find none, the cardinal and duke Hall. of Norfolk faid, they would be bound for them ; whereupon they were discharged.

When the king had difcovered that he approved not all Henry rethe cardinal's actions. People ventured more boldly to com-plain of his conduct. The truth is, he opprefied the nati-against the other artificers affembled out of Lanham, Sudbury, Hadley, &c, to the e In Suffolk, where the weavers and number of about four thoufand, Hall, fol. 141, ter Al 5 5 cardinal.

on,

- 239

Herbert. Hall.

appeales him.

on, and more especially the clergy, in a strange manner. The inftrument of his oppressions was John Allen f his chaplain, who kept no measures, well knowing his master's protection would not fail him on occafion. Mean while, how great foever the cardinal's power was, a private perfon ventured to commence a fuit against Allen, and profecuted him fo vigoroully that at last the affair came to the king's knowledge, who was informed at the fame time of feveral other complaints of the people. He had hitherto fancied, there had never been in England fo mild a government as his, being ig-He is like to norant of the ill use Wolfey made of his authority. This inturn him out formation threw him into fo terrible a rage, that the cardinal The cardinal was like to have been entirely difgrac'd. It was not without the utmost submission that he appealed the king's anger, fhowing him withal his laft will, wherein he had made him his heir. This he did to intimate that he was labouring for him, and that the outrages he committed were only to increase the inheritance the king was one day to enjoy. Nothing can more fully express the king's fentiments concerning him, than his letter to the cardinal after having pardoned him. A fragment whereof inferted by lord Herbert in his hiftory, is as follows:

The king's letter to the cc cardinal. Herbert, p. 67.

S touching the matter of Wilton 8, feeing it is in no other strain than you write of, and you being al-" fo to fuddenly (with the falling fick of your fervants) afraid, " and troubled; I marvel not that it over-flipped you as it " did. But it is no great matter, flanding the cale as it doth; " for it is yet in my hand, as I perceive by your letter, and " your default was not fo great, feeing the election was but " conditional. Wherefore, my lord, feeing the humblenefs so of your fubmiffion, and though the cafe were much more " heinous, I can be content for to remit it, being right glad,

f John Allen, doctor of law, the fame that was judge of the cardinal's court, was made archbishop of Dublin in 1528, and barbaroufly murdered by Thomás Fitzgerard, eldeft fon to the earl of Kildare, 1531. Antiq. Oxf. This Allen, who is faid by Hall to have been a man of more learning than virtue, or good confcience, was com-miffioned by the cardinal, in confequence of his legatine power, to vifit all religious houses; and accordingly he id from one religious house to another, with a great train, in a kind of perpetual progrefs or vifitation, and did the cardinal no little fervice. Hall, fol. 148. Herbert, p. 67. g This matter of Wilton was this :

the cardinal had elected a perfon prior fs of the nunnery there, for whom the king had fome way previoully expreffed his diflike. The priorefs of the nunnery of Wilton, was a baronefs by her title, as were allo those of Shaftsbury, Barkin, and St. Mary's, in Winchefter, which were the only ones that were fo in England. See Fiddes Lif. Wolf. p. 398.

" that 240 1525.

OF ENGLAND.

" that according to mine intent, my monitions and warnings 1525. " have been benignly and lovingly accepted on your behalf, L " promifing you, that the very affection I bear you caufed " me thus to do. As touching the help of religious houfes " to the building of your college, I would it were more, fo " it be lawfully; for my intent is none, but that it fhould fo " appear to all the world, and the occasion of all their " mumbling might be feeluded and put away; for, furely " there is great murmuring of it throughout all the realm, ic both good and bad. They fay not that all that is ill-gotten " is bestowed upon the college, but that the college is the " cloak for covering all mifchiefe. This grieveth me, I af-" fure you, to hear it spoken of him, which I so entirely " love. Wherefore, methought I could do no lefs, than " thus friendly to admonifh you. One thing more I perceive " by your own letter, which a little methinketh toucheth " confcience, and that is, that you have received money of " the exempts for having of their old visitors. Surely, this " can hardly be with good confiience. For, and they were " good, why fhould you take money ? And if they were ill, " it were a finful act. Howbeit, your legacy herein might, " peradventure, apud homines, be a cloak, but not apud " Deum. Wherefore, you, thus monifhed by him who fo " entirely loveth you, I doubt not, will defift, not only from " this, (if confcience will not bear it) but from all other " things which would tangle the fame; and, in fo doing, " we will fing, te laudant angeli atque archangeli, te laudat " omnis spiritus : and thus an end I make of this, though " rude, yet loving letter, defiring you as benevolently to take " it, as I do mean it, for I enfure you, (and I pray you think it " fo) that there remaineth, at this hour, no fpark of displea-" fure towards you in my heart. And thus fare you well, and " be no more perplext. Written with the hand of your loving " fovereign and friend,

HENRY R.

This letter shews the king was informed of feveral of the The cardinal cardinal's mildemeanours. But he did not yet thoroughly removes from court know him, his affection for him combating in his heart the those whom heinoufnefs of his proceedings, and making him believe, that he mittrufts. his faults were the pure effects of his great zeal for the founding of his college. Had he not been thus prepoffeffed in his favour, he might have been more fully informed. But it was very dangerous to speak directly against a favourite, to whom the king still showed so great kindness. Mean while, the VOL. VI. cardinal

241

242

Hall. Stow. Herbert.

The king reftores him to his friendship. Act. Pub. XIV. p. 39. Henry the king's natuduke of Richmond. Act. Pub. XIV. p. 42. July 16. Negotiation with the French Hall.

cardinal finding by this inftance, what his enemies would be capable of doing against him, if they had the king's ear, was very careful to remove from court all he fufpected. At the fame time, he ftrove to preferve the king's love and efteem by all forts of condescentions. He had now built at Hampton Court a flately palace, which outfhone in beauty all the king's houfes. But what had lately happened convincing him it might breed a jealoufy in the king, he made him a prefent of it h, as if from the very first he had intended to build it for him. He meant to infinuate by this prefent, that he heaped up riches purely for his fake, which fucceeded accordingly. The king had the fame confidence in him as before, which the murmurs of the people feemed to have altered a little. This year he obtained the king's letters patents for founding the college at Oxford.

About the fame time, the king created Henry Fitz-Roy his natural fon duke of Richmond and Somerfet, and highral fon made admiral of England, though he was but fix years old 1. As he had no legitimate fon, he was extremely fond of this baftard, whom he had by the lady Elizabeth Blunt k.

Whilft these things passed, the cardinal was employed in treating with the French ambaffadors. The beginning of June the regent had fent general full powers to her two ambaffadors. But in the course of the negotiation they found ambaffadors. they fhould have occafion for more particular powers, to fettle the fums due from the king of France to the king of England, and which confifting of feveral articles were to be put

> . h And the king, in exchange, permitted him to live in his palace at Richmond : at which, it feems, the people were highly offended. See Hall, fol. 144.

i He was born in the prior's house at Blackmore, in Effex, and first made knight of the garter, then earl of Nottingham, and the fame day duke of Richmond and Somerfet, on the 18th of June. He was conflituted likewife lieutenant general beyond the Trent, and warden general of the marches of Scotland. After which he was bred up with Henry, earl of Sur-rey, at Windfor, from whence they went both together to fludy at Paris. Their friendship was endeared by the duke's marrying Mary, the earl's fifter, daughter to Thomas, duke of Norfolk, by whom he had, no iffue. He was very perfonable and of great expectation, and for abilities of mind and body, one of the rareft of his time. But he departed this life in the 17th year of his age, and was buried at Thetford, in Norfolk. Herbert, Dugdale's Baron. vol. II. p. 305.—On the fame 18th day of June, was Henry Courtney, earl of Devonfhire, created marquis of Exeter, Henry Brandon, fon of the duke of Suffolk, earl of Lincoln, fir Thomas Manners, earl of Rutland, fir Henry Clifford, earl of Cumberland, fir Robert Ratcliff, lord Fitzwalter, vifcount Fitzwalter, and fir Thomas Bulleyn, viscount Rochford. Hall, fol. 148.

k Daughter of fir John Blunt, widow of fir Gilbert Talboys, who was thought for her rare endowments of nature and ornaments of education, to be the beauty and mafter piece of her time. Ibid.

inte

1525.

into one according to Henry's intention. These new powers were difpatched the 16th of August. Upon such an extraor- L dinary occafion, the French ambaffadors had properly nothing to do but to comply with the king of England's pleasure. Their aim being to difingage him from the emperor, and unite him with the king their mafter, there was no difputing upon the terms. But it must be confessed that on this occa- Henry's gefion, Henry behaved with uncommon generofity. Though nerofity to the king of he might have demanded towns and even provinces, in return France. for the friendship he was pleased to contract with Francis I; and for the charges he was going to be engaged in, he contented himfelf with fecuring by new treaties the fums that were justly due to him. These treaties being ready, were figned at Moore, a house of the king's 1, on the 30th of August.

The first contained a defensive league between France Treaty of and England, against all powers spiritual or temporal, that wore di-should invade either of the two kingdoms. The allies of the feveral two kings were included by name in the league m, but with treaties. the limitation, that this article was not to be underftood of Act. Pub. those who had usurped any thing upon either of the two prin- xIV. p. 48, cipal contractors fince the league concluded at London, Du Tillet, October the 1st, 1518. Hence the emperor, who had lately Herbert. conquered the duchy of Milan, was excluded. Moreover, Henry I. engaged to use his best endeavours to procure the liberty of Francis.

The fecond treaty concerned the payment of the fums due Act. Pub. to Henry from the king of France, namely, 1. by a treaty XIV. p. 58. of the 7th of August, 1515, one million of crowns of gold. 2. By another of the 12th of January, 1518, for the reftitution of Tournay, five hundred thousand crowns of gold. 3. By another of the fame date, twenty three thousand livres Tournois. 4. By another of November the 13th, 1520, four hundred fixty two thousand crowns. For all these fums. the regent bound herfelf in the king her fon's name, to pay Henry two millions of crowns of gold, of thirty five pence Tournois each, which being reduced to crowns de foleil, of

 Q_2

I In Hertfordshire.

m Their common allies were the pope, Venice, the kings of Hungary and Portugal, and the duke of Ferrara ; and those named by France in parti-cular, the kings of Scotland and Navarre; the dukes of Savoy, Lorrain, Gueldres; the Switzers; the marquis of Saluzzo, the marquis of Montferrat, and his mother : those named by king Henry, were the emperor, and his brother Ferdinand, the king of Denmark, the queen dowager of France, Margaret, archduchefs of Auftria, the bifhop of Liege, the dukes of Urbino, Cleves, and Juliers, the house of Medicis, the Florentines, and the Hanfe towns. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 51.

243 1525.

thirty

thirty eight pence, amounted to the fum of eighteen hundred and ninety four thousand, feven hundred, thirty fix crowns, and thirty two pence Tournois ⁿ. This fum was to be paid at feveral times, viz. forty feven thousand three hundred and fixty eight crowns, within forty days after the date of the treaty; the like fum on the first of November next, and the fame every fix months till the whole was paid. This made in all forty payments, confequently the whole fum was to be paid in twenty years.

It was farther agreed by the fame treaty, that if Henry died before he had received the two millions, the arrears were to be paid to his heirs and fucceffors. But in cafe he out lived the payment of the whole, he fhould receive during life, a yearly penfion of a hundred thousand crowns to cease at his death.

To fecure the performance of the treaty, the regent was to fwear to it folemnly before the English ambasiladors, and Francis I. was to ratify and swear to it immediately after his return into France. Moreover, Henry had for security, the cardinal of Bourbon, the dukes of Vendôme and Longueville, the earls of St. Paul, Maulevrier, Brienne, the lords of Montmorency, Lautrec, and Brezé, the cities of Paris, Lyons, Orleans, Toulouse, Amiens, Bourdeaux, Tours, and Rheims o.

It must be observed, that in the sum of two millions of crowns due to Henry, there was no deduction of what he had received from Francis I. from the year 1515, to their rupture. This was all the advantage Henry made, which was not very great, confidering how little punctual the king of France was in his payments.

By a third treaty, the regent engaged to pay to Mary, Henry's fifter, queen dowager of France, all the arrears of her dowry at feveral payments, namely, five thousand crownswithin forty days after the date of the treaty, and a like fum every fix months till the whole was discharged. Moreover, the promifed to let her enjoy her dowry for the future.

There was also a fourth treaty, which ran, that the king of Scotland should be reckoned in the number of the allies of France, but on condition the Scots committed no n—Decies oclies centum millium coronarum auri de fole, & nonaginta quatuor millium coronarum auri de fole, feptingentarum triginta fex coronarum auri de fole, & triginta duorum folidorum turonenfium,—Ibid, p. 59.

. . .

e. .

• All thefe lords and cities were to fend a bond with their feal annexed, within two months, under the obligation and forfeiture of all their goods. Ibid. p. 65.

act

p. 65, 67, 90-101.

p. 69.

P. 74.

244

act of hoftility against England, after the 25th of December 1525.

Laftly, by a fifth treaty it was agreed, that the court of p. 75. France fhould confent neither directly nor indirectly, that the duke of Albany fhould return into Scotland during the minority of James V.

All these feveral treaties, which properly were only diffe- p. 76, 126. rent articles of one and the fame treaty, were ratified and fworn by the regent of France P, and confirmed by the parliaments of Paris, Toulouse, and Bourdeaux. The lords and cities that were to be fecurities, gave their bonds. Fi- p. 113. nally, Francis I. himself sent a ratification under his own hand, and dated the 27th of December.

But after having done the king's affairs, the cardinal for-Grant of the got not himfelf. There is in the collection of the publick acts, the regent's bond of the 18th of November, to pay Ac. Pub. the cardinal the arrears of the penfion granted him in lieu of XIV.p. 100. the administration of the bishoprick of Tournay, being four years and a half, amounting to the fum of twenty nine thoufand feven hundred and ninety three crowns of gold de foleil a. Moreover, fhe declared, that for feveral other weighty reafons, there was due to the cardinal a hundred thoufand crowns of gold, thefe two fums making together one hundred and twenty one thoufand eight hundred and ninety eight crowns de foleil, were to be paid in feven years, by half yearly equal payments.

The defensive league between France and England being The regent thus concluded and figned, the regent began to be a little takes heart, more at eafe, and better able to difpute upon the terms of the king her fon's liberty. Befides, the had reafon to hope, the king of England's declaration would help to determine the pope and Venetians, whofe fears alone hindered them from forming a league against the emperor. And indeed, it Henry and will hereafter be feen, they altered their measures upon hearcall their ing what the king of England had done. Mean while, the ambafiadors, emperor receiving advice of the treaty of Moore, recalled Hall. his ambafiadors, who were fill in England ^r, and Henry Guicciard. Hollingth. did the fame with refpect to his in Spain. Shortly after, Herbert,

In October, fir William Fitzwilliams, treafurer of the houfhold, and dr. Taylor, were fent into France, to fee the queen regent fwear to the obfervance of these treaties. Hall, fol. 345-

9 Crowns fol, or de foleil, were golden coins, of old worth thirty eight pence Tournois.

r Monfieur de Prat, his ambassador, departed out of England April 9. Hall, fol. 139. Hollingsh, p. 891.

Q 3

Charles

Charles concluded his marriage with Ifabella of Portugal, 1525. by virtue of a difpensation brought him by cardinal Salviati, who delivered it to him after the conclusion of the forementioned treaty.

Affairs of Scotland. Buchanan.

246

Whilft the affairs of Europe took a new turn, by the effects of the battle of Pavia, and the French king's captivity, there was no other alteration in those of Scotland, except that the earl of Angus, who was to hold the administration but four months, did not think fit to refign when his time was expired. Whereupon the earl of Argyle withdrew greatly diffatisfied, but the earl of Lenox, though likewise displeased, still remained at court. Mean while, the queen, and the earl of Arran, who had been dispossefield, were not unmindful of their affairs. The earl of Lenox's difcontent giving them room to hold intelligence with him, they perfuaded him to inftill into the king a defire to be freed from the earl of Angus. But as there was occasion for great precaution to deceive that lord's vigilance, it was not till the next year that the king found an opportunity to attempt the execution of his defign.

Truce be-- tween England and Scotland prolonged, Act. Pub.

In the beginning of the year, the court of Scotland had fent an embaffy to England, at the head whereof was the earl of Caffils, to treat of the king's matriage with the princefs Mary. But as feveral difficulties occurred, the truce which was to expire the 26th of January, was prolonged to the XIV. P. 30. 23d of March, to give the earl of Caffils time to take a journey to Scotland for new instructions. Mean while, it was not poffible to conclude any thing, becaufe, in all appearance, Henry had no intention to give his only daughter and heir to the king of Scotland. Indeed, it does not appear what advantage could be reaped by the marriage. Befides, as he then intended to join with France, it was no longer his intereft to manage the Scots *.

> 3 This year, the king following his hawk, and leaping over a ditch with a pole, fell in upon his head, and had not one Edmund Moody, a footman, jumped in, and raifed up his head, which was fluck fast in the clay, he had been drowned. Hall, fol. 139. Stow, p. 523 .- Vlafco Nunnez, having in 1513, first discovered the South fea, and Hernando de Magellanes, paffed in 1520, through the Straits in South America, that bear his name ; . this year 1525, Francesco Picarro, a,

> > . .

Spaniard, refiding at Panama, first attempted the difcovery of the South fea coaft, and at laft came to Peru, which he ranfacked. - Hernando de Magellanes aforementioned, dying in the voyage, his companions went on to Borneo, and the Moluccas, whence one of the fhips returned to Spain, by the Cape of Good Hope, and, fo first com-passed the Globe; Juan Sebastian de Cano, a Biscainer, being pilot. Herbert, p. 70.

Before

Before the treaty of Moore was concluded, the emperor 1526. had a great advantage in his negotiations at Rome and Ma- L drid. By reftoring Sforza to Milan, he was almost fure the Negotiations pope and Venetians would abandon France, and by defifting Guicciard. from his demand of the duchy of Burgundy, he could be certain Francis would readily refign Milan, and not trouble himfelf much with the concerns of Italy. But he could not refolve to do either, and that made the negotiations fo tedious. After the treaty of Moore was figned, the ftate of his affairs was changed. The pope was grown more courageous, The pope and finding himfelf deceived by the emperor, who in a fe- refufes all cond ratification of their treaty, left the reftoration of Sforza out Sforza's in a ftate of uncertainty, plainly told him, that without the reftoration. reftitution of the Milanefe, there was no peace to be expec- Guicciard. ted. The emperor had also reason to fear, that Francis I." feeing himfelf like to be fo well fupported, would be still more incompliant with respect to Burgundy. So, perceiving there was no way to prevent a league which was going to unite fo many princes against him, he was in great perplexity. There was a neceffity of fpeedily refolving either to maintain, without any ally, the impending war, or to make peace with France. Both were equally perplexing. In choosing Theemperor, war, he knew not where to find money, and in making with a peace. his prifoner a forced peace, he could not expect to reap from Herbert, his victory the advantages he proposed. Happily for him, Francis, tired of his captivity, freed him from this perplexity, by offering to relign the duchy of Burgundy, which had hitherto been the main obstacle to a peace. After that the emperor readily and ferioufly treated with him, whereas before he had only amused him. Shortly after, they concluded together the famous treaty of Madrid. The chief articles to which Francis fubmitted were thefe, befides many others which it would be needlefs to recite.

That the king of France fhould marry queen Leonora, the Treaty of emperor's fifter, and have with her two hundred thousand Madrid. crowns of gold.

That Francis fhould be releafed on the 10th of March, Act. Pub. and the fame day fhould deliver to the emperor his two fons XIV.p.308. Herbert. Guicciard.

That he should refign to the emperor the duchy of Bur-Hall, gundy in full fovereignty.

t And fome other lords, among whom was the duke of Albany. See Rymer, tom. XIV, p. 311.

Q4

That

1526. That he fhould defift from the homage, the emperor owed him for Flanders and Artois.

That he should renounce all claim to Naples, Milan, Asti, Tournay, Lisle, and Hesdin, &c.

That he should perfuade Henry d'Albret to refign the kingdom of Navarre to the emperor, or at least should give him no affistance.

That, within forty days, he fhould reftore the duke of Bourbon and all his party to their eftates.

That he should restore Philibert de Châlons, prince of Orange, and Michael Antonio de Saluzzo, to their principalities.

That he fhould give no fort of affiftance to the duke of Guelders, and after that prince's death, fhould use his best endeavours to cause his towns to fall into the emperor's hands.

That he should pay the king of England five hundred thousand crowns which the emperor owed him.

That when the emperor went to Italy to receive the imperial crown, he fhould lend him twelve gallies, four large fhips, and a land army, or two hundred thousand crowns inftead of the army.

Laftly, he promifed upon the word and honour of a prince, to execute all these articles, or in case of non-performance to return prifoner into Spain.

State of the emperor's affairs at the time of the treaty of Madrid.

If Francis had not been to hafty to offer the duchy of Burgundy, he would probably, have faved himfelf many troubles, and avoided reproaches which much concerned his honour ". At the time, the treaty of Madrid was concluded, Charles was under very great perplexities. Befides those already mentioned, he knew that the princes and Hans-Towns of Germany, that had embraced Luther's doctrine, began to take measures to fecure themfelves from the calamities they were daily threatened with. To this was added the dread of a Turkish invasion in Hungary, which greatly concerned the emperor, by reason of the neighbourhood of Austria. So, in all likelihood, if Francis had not been so u At the conclusion of this treaty, Francis coming to the altar, and puting his right hand upon the bible, did fwear by the facrament and the holy evangeliffs, not to break this capitulation all the days of his life, nor to give counfel or favour that any fhould break it. Herbert, p. 74. But it feems all this was a farce : for before Francis figned the treaty, he made a formal, though private proteflation againft it, in the prefence of a few trufty witneffes and notaries. See P. Daniel, tom. VII. p. 614.

hafty,

248

hafty, the emperor would have rather defifted from Bur-1526. gundy, than been exposed to fo many enemies at once. -These were the real motives that obliged him to hasten the conclusion of the treaty of Madrid, contrary to the instances and opposition of many of his counfellors, who reprefented to him, that he would be infallibly difappointed. His chan-Guicciard. cellor even refused to fign it, but as he believed he had ftrong reasons to run that hazard, he absolutely concluded, in a belief that it was the fole means to prevent the league against him. Whatever happened, he hoped to come off by reftoring Sforza to Milan, which however he did not intend to do but at the laft extremity. Mean while, by refolving to infift upon that article, he rendered all his measures ineffectual; he loft his prifoner, without obtaining Burgundy, or preventing the league; in fhort, after fuftaining many attacks, he was, as will be feen, forced to part with the duchy of Milan. But where is the prince, let his abilities be ever fo great, that can forefee all the confequences of his own policy? when Charles V. figned the treaty of Madrid, he thought it very advantageous. Indeed Francis would have dearly purchafed his liberty, if, when he figned the treaty, he had really intended to keep it. But it is too manifest, that when he gave his word, he defigned to break it, fince he had no fooner fet foot in his own dominions, but he refused to ratify the treaty. This was fo little expected by the emperor, that Theemperor immediately after the conclusion of the peace, he wrote to adds a new the pope, that though he had promifed to reftore Sforza to with regard Milan, it was however on condition that Sforza cleared him- to Sforza. felf of the crime of felony and treason laid to his charge. Guicciard. Adding, that fince the princes of Italy wifhed, he would not give the duchy of Milan to the archduke Ferdinand his brother, he would prefent it to the duke of Bourbon, in cafe Storza was found guilty. Clement VII. being informed of The pope the conditions of the treaty of Madrid, prefently gueffed believes that Francis had accepted of them only to obtain his release, not keep the without intending to perform them. In this belief, he ftill treaty of infifted upon Sforza's reftoration without terms, being will-Madrid. He infifts ing, before he engaged with the emperor, to fee what the upon Sforking of France would do. The fenate of Venice being of za's reftorathe fame mind, not a little contributed to keep the pope in tion. his refolution.

What these subtle politicians had foreseen, came to pass. Francis ar-Francis was no fooner arrived in his own territories, but he rives in his mounted a Turkifh horfe and rid full fpeed to St. John de nions, Luz, from whence he went the next day to Bayonne. The 17th

249

THE HISTORY

Hall. Act. Pub. XIV.p.129. Guicciard. Herbert. Lanoy prays him to ratify the treaty. He shifts it off Guicciard. Herbert. Bellai.

1526.

He ratifies the treaty of Moore. Act. Pub. Lanoypreffes him. Guicciard. Mezerai. Herbert. P. Daniel. The king alledges reafons to be excufed. Hall.

Lanoy's reply.

17th of March, he figned bonds to the king of England for the fums in which his mother the regent had engaged him. By the way, the hiftorians place this prince's deliverance on the 18th of March, and yet these bonds are dated at Bayonne the 17th of the fame month. When he came to Bayonne, Lanoy, who accompanied him as ambaffador, prayed him to ratify the treaty of Madrid. But the king told him, that having exceeded in the treaty, the power of a king of France, in granting the duchy of Burgundy to the emperor, he must endeavour to obtain the confent of the Burgundians. and the approbation of the reft of his fubjects: that however, he defigned to execute the treaty, but wanted a little time to prepare for it. This answer might have fufficiently shown the amballador the king's intention. He followed him however to Bourdeaux, where the king's first care was to ratify the treaty concluded at Moore with the king of XIV.p.134, England w. From Bourdeaux he came to Cognac, where -154, 175. he made fome ftay, with the viceroy of Naples still in his train, who prefied him from time to time to ratify and execute the treaty of Madrid, or return to Spain, according to his oath. To this the king to be excufed, alledged three reasons, which were far from being fatisfactory to the ambaffador. The first was, that it was not in his power to refign Burgundy, becaufe the kings of France not being proprietors of their dominions, it was not lawful for them to alienate any part *. The fecond, that he was compelled to fign the treaty of Madrid. The third, that by his coronation oath, he had fworn not to alienate any part of his kingdom, and this oath annulled that which he had taken at Madrid. The ambaffador replied to the first, that though. he could not alienate any of his provinces, that was not to be underflood of dominions unjuftly acquired by the crown of France, as was the duchy of Burgundy. To the fecond he answered, that it was left to his choice either to remain in the ftate, the chance of war, and the will of God had. thrown him into, or to be freed by a treaty : that he had even follicited it, and it was difficult to conceive, wherein the force he complained of confifted. To the third he faid, that when the king fwore to the treaty of Madrid, he was not ignorant of his coronation oath, and probably, did not believe the fecond contrary to the first; that if it was w Before fir Thomas Cheney, who x Without the confent of the prinwas difpatched by king Henry to concipal perfons of the effate and parliagratulate him upon upon his releafe, ment. Ibid. Herbert, p. 75.

otherwife,

otherwise, there would be reason to think, he had intended 1526. to impose upon the emperor's eafines. Without examining here either the king's reasons, or the ambaffador's anfwers, it fuffices to fay in a word, the king was already refolved.

The pope, the Venetians and the duke of Milan, plainly The pope's. forefeeing, Francis would fcruple to execute the treaty of and Veneti-Madrid, had fent ambaffadors to him, who found him at dors go to Cognac. They were received with great civilities, and the the king at king immediately entered into treaty with them concerning. Cognac, a league against the emperor. The league was concluded League at indeed at Cognac, the 17th of May, between the pope, the Gognac a-king of France, the duke of Milan, and the Venetians Y; emperor. but it was not published till a month after, Francis pre-Guicciard. tending he could not ratify it till he had feen the ratifica- P. Daniel. Herbert, tions of the other allies. The viceroy of Naples, having Hall, fome notice of it, fummoned the king, for the last time, to Lanoy calls execute the treaty of Madrid. Whereupon Francis told him upon the plainly, it was not in his power to refign Burgundy, though tells him he had promifed it. But to fhow him, he defired to live plainly he in friendship with the emperor his master, he offered to give will not exhim two millions of crowns of gold as an equivalent for treaty. Burgundy, and punctually to perform the reft of the treaty. He offers

Thus the emperor's measures were entirely broken. He two millions had the king of France no longer in his power, and yet, Burgundy. was not less obliged to fustain the efforts of the league newly Theemperor concluded against him; not to mention the king of England, will abate who probably would fooner or later act offenfively. His nothing. whole refuge confifted in having the king of France's two fons in hostage. But his embarassiment was not capable of making him yield on this occasion. He chose to run all hazards rather than confent to the least alteration of the treaty of Madrid. His refolution being notified to Francis, the The league league was published at Cognac the 11th of June. Two is made things haftened the conclusion of the league. The first, Bellai. that the caftle of Milan, befieged by the imperialifts, being P. Daniel. hard preffed, wanted a fpeedy relief, and the pope and Venetians durft not fend their troops into the field, before they were affured of the league with France. The fecond, that the king of France defigning to offer the emperor two millions of crowns in lieu of Burgundy, he believed the offer

y See the articles of this league in Guicciardini, l. 17; and P. Daniel, tom. VII. p. 620, &c. Guicciard.

fays, it was concluded the roth, and others the 22d of May. Hall, fol. 149, &c.

251

an ambaffa-

would

would meet with a readier acceptance after the conclusion of the league. It is certain, this was his fole aim, and, if his offer had been accepted, he would never have ratified the league of Cognac. Nay, after the league was published, aims only to neither himfelf nor the king of England, ever made any confrighten the fiderable effort against the emperor, their intent being only to frighten him, and to obtain the restitution of the two hoftages upon reafonable terms. Thus, for once the Italians were the dupes of the French and the English, which deferves notice, as a thing very uncommon. Mean while Francis and Henry, to purfue their scheme, made a new treaty, promifing never to make peace with the emperor, unless he would reftore the hoftages and pay Henry what he owed him. But this treaty obliged them not to take up arms to procure each other the fatisfaction they demanded.

'The pope's and venetians army take the field. Guicciard. Hall.

The Colonnas make war upon the pope. Guicciard. P. Daniel. Hall.

They fubmit.

They enter Rome on a fudden.

The pope and the Venetians relying on the affiftance of France and England, fent their troops into the field under the command of the duke of Urbino, who fuffered the caffle of Milan to be taken, and caufed an attempt upon Genoa to mifcarry, for want of fending the allies a fupply of fifteen hundred men. Guicciardini infinuates, in feveral places, that the duke acted but faintly against the emperor. who was very weak in Italy, and that the duke of Bourbon, who was returned to Milan, would if the least preffed have been infallibly conftrained to abandon the city.

Whilft the duke of Urbino indirectly favoured the emperor, the duke of Seffa the Spanish ambassador at Rome, and Hugo de Moncada, who commanded at Naples in the viceroy's absence, supplied by other means the weakness of the imperialist, by exciting the Colonnas to make war upon the pope, whilf his troops were in the duchy of This unexpected invafion, with the pope could af-Milan. cribe only to the follicitations of the emperor or his minifters, caufed him to refolve to fend into the kingdom of Naples the army commanded by the duke of Urbino in the Milanefe, and to that end he obtained the confent of the Venetians. But the duke of Seffa, to avoid the invafion, the kingdom of Naples was threatened with, fo ordered it, that the Colonnas gave the pope all the fatisfaction he defired. The agreement was made at Rome the 22d of August, and the duke of Urbino was countermanded.

But about a month after, when the pope leaft expected it, the Colonnas with five or fix thousand men entered Rome in the night between the 19th and 20th of September, and 252 1526.

Francis

emperor.

OFENGLAND.

and fo alarmed the pope that he retired in a fright to the 1526. castle of St. Angelo. As he was not very fafe in that castle, where he had nothing to maintain a fiege, Moncada went The pope to him, and reprefenting the danger he was in, and that caffle of St. befides Rome was going to be plundered, he perfuaded him Angelo. to make a feparate truce with the emperor for four months. Guicciard. This was more than the emperor wanted, who had now tween the ordered levies to be made in Germany, and was going to fend pope and back Lanoy to Naples with a good body of Spanish troops. emperor. When the truce was figned, the pope's forces which ferved under the duke of Urbino were recalled to Rome.

Mean while, the pope was extremely furprized at Francis's Clement flownefs, who, though principal author of the league, made VII. feigns yet no effort to oblige the emperor to reftore his fons. The go to Spain. king of England's indolence aftonished him no less, because Guicciard. not knowing that the league concluded at Moore was only P. Daniel. defensive, he had imagined the two kings were to attack the emperor with all their forces. So, to excite them by raifing their jealoufy, he declared he intended to go into Spain and concert means with the emperor to procure the peace of Europe. This declaration very much confounded the French and English ambassadors. They were afraid there was some hidden mystery in fo extraordinary a journey, and therefore used their best endeavours to diffuade the pope from it. But Henry Henry used a more effectual means, namely, a present of makes him thirty thousand ducats, which entirely diverted the preten- a prefent. Herbert. ded defign of this journey.

Shortly after, Clement VII. broke his agreement with The pope the Colonnas, and ordered the troops, he had fent for to breaks the agreement Rome, to march into their territories, having excommuni- with the cated them and deprived Pompeo Colonna of the cardinalate. Colonnas. He affirmed that his treaty with them was void, becaufe he Guicciard. was forced to it. He thereby, justified, in some measure, Francis's proceedings, whom, on the fame pretence he had absolved from his oath at Madrid.

Whilft these things passed at Rome, the baron de Fronds-Frondsperg perg was marching from Germany towards Italy with an marches to Italy. army of thirteen or fourteen thousand men, railed for the The duke of emperor's fervice. Whereupon, the duke of Urbino, who Urbinoraifes kept the duke of Bourbon as it were befieged in Milan, quit- the blockade of Milan. ted the neighbourhood of that city, under colour of oppo- Guicciard, fing the paffage of the Germans. Mean while, the pope Bellai, was not a little embaraffed. The truce was foon to ex- Hall. pire. Frondsperg was marching to Italy, and the viceroy of Naples was now in the island of Corfica, leading to Naples a ftrong

254

Bourbon is money. Guicciard,

1526. a ftrong reinforcement of Spaniards. Mean time, the king of France making no preparations to support his allies, and Francis neg- the king of England flowed the fame remiffnels. Frond-lects the affairsof Italy, perg, still continuing his march, arrived in the Mantuan, where the prince of Orange came and ferved under him as a volunteer. Afterwards, about the middle of December, he repaired to the borders of the Milanefe, the duke of The duke of Urbino not being able or willing to oppose his march. Here he expected the duke of Bourbon who was to come and at a loss for join him, but was not yet in condition to execute that defign. The difficulty fprung from his having no money to pay his troops, who politively refuled to go out of the city before they had received their arrears, and even threatened to fack the town. There was no other way to hinder them from executing their threats, than to take the plate belonging to the churches. This ferved to pay part of what was due to the troops, who had fcarce received any thing fince the battle of Pavia, fo destitute of money was the emperor. The duke of Bourbon made use of another expedient to encrease his treasure ; and that was to cause the chancellor Moronè to be condemned to die, who to redeem his life gave him twenty thousand ducats. He afterwards became one of his chief counfellors.

Whilft the duke of Bourbon was employed in raifing money, Lanoy, who was come to Naples with a body of Spanish troops, amused the pope with negotiations tending only to hinder him from taking fure meafures, by putting him in hopes of a fpeedy agreement with the emperor. These hopes however became more remote after Frondsperg's arrival. Whilft Milan was in danger, the emperor had intimated to the pope, that if he defired Francesco Sforza to be brought to his trial, it was only to fave the honour of the empire, and he would give the judges private orders to declare him innocent. But after the arrival of the Germans, he demanded fuch a pecuniary reparation, that Sforza was by no means able to raife the fum required. Wherefore the emperor pretended that the pope, the Venetians, and the Florentines should be his fecurities.

The pope and the Venetians had expected that immediately after the conclusion of the league of Cognac, Francis would fend a ftrong army into Italy, and with the king of England, make a powerful diversion upon the borders of Spain and Flanders. But, as we have feen, they were very much mistaken. Francis had concluded the league only to frighten his enemy, and in hopes it would caufe him to ac-T

Lanoy arrives at Naples. He amufes the pope. Guicciard. P. Daniel.

Francis deceives, the pope and Venetians; Guicciard.

OF ENGLAND.

cept of the offered equivalent. He was defirous to avoid 1526. a war, and even thought himfelf fo fure of fucceeding by that means, that he had made with the king of England no treaty to oblige them to take up arms unlefs they were attacked. Thus Henry knowing the king of France's difpofition, took care to go no faster than he. Expresses and en- who follicit voys from the pope and the Venetians frequently came to him to no the two courts to follicit them to war, but it was to no Herbert, purpofe. On the contrary, even after the pope and the Venetians had folemnly declared war against the emperor, Francis fent the archbishop of Bourdeaux to make him again the fame offer of two millions of crowns in lieu of the duchy of Burgundy. But the emperor rejected it with difdain, and charg- The emperor ed the ambaffador to tell his master, he had acted like a calls him villain. knave and a villain, and ought not to have forgot their laft conversation z. Probably, the ambaffador thought not proper to difcharge fo ungrateful a commission. This afterwards occasioned a mistake which was not favourable to the king of France.

Whilft Italy, France and Spain were in agitation, Henry Wolfey oblived peaceably in his kingdom, and the cardinal his favou- tains grants rite was wholly employed about his college at Oxford, for lege, which he inceffantly obtained fresh grants from the pope and AA. Pub. the king. The pope durft not refuse him any thing at a XIV. p. 155 time when he thought he wanted his credit, to incline the -184. king his mafter to war; and Henry was always ready to give him marks of his affection, by confirming whatever was granted by the pope. This condefcenfion of the pope and the king proved fatal to feveral little monafteries a, which were suppressed by the cardinal, and the revenues applied to his college.

· Ever fince the publishing of the league of Cognac, the The pope pope and Venetians had used their constant endeavours, to endeavours perfuade Henry not only to come into it, but declare him- to perfuade Henry into felf protector. It is eafy to guess with what view they paid the league him this deference. They hoped to find him the fame as of Cognac. formerly, ever ready to be infnared, and to lavish away his 18. p. 179money for the affairs of others. There are, in the collection

² It feems before Francis went from Spain, the emperor faid to him one day, Are you willing to perform all that is capitulated between us ?. Francis replied, yes; and when you find that I do not keep my word with you, I wifh and confent that you hold me for a knave and a villain, Herbert, p. 75.

a The following monafteries are named ; Daventre, Raverston, Tykeford, Sandwell, Eanwell, Lytlemore, Poghley, Thobye, Blackmore, Stanefgate, Typtre, Wykes, Dodnesh, Snape, Lyefnes, Tonbridge, Begham, and Ca-licete. See Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 155-184.

255

of

July. August. p. 187.

of the publick acts, feveral credentials of the Venetian and baffadors addreffed to the king, the queen, and the cardinal. probably, to prefs the king to come into this league. There is likewife Clement VII.'s commissions to Hubert Gambara and Giovanni Baptista Sanga to treat with Henry. In this commission the pope faid, that the circumstances of the times forcing the allies to conclude a league without the king of England's participation, they had however agreed, to declare him protector. Wherefore he empowered his two envoys to treat with that monarch upon his entering into the league, and to change or alter the articles, as should be agreed with him, nay, to annul it entirely, if it was thought neceffary, and conclude another. Moreover, he gave them powers to fettle with him the penfion which was to be adjudged to him as protector of the league, if he would pleafe to accept of the title. But th's penfion, as appears elfewhere, was to be raifed upon the duchy of Milan and the kingdom of Naples, after they were conquered. Thus, upon the hopes of an imaginary penfion, the pope meant to perfuade Henry to declare war with the emperor, and confequently to draw him into very great and real expences. But for once, Henry would not be his dupe. He knew by experience what it was to join with the popes for the Italian affairs.

Battle of Mohatz in Hungary. August 18. Guicciard. Hall. This year was fought the famous battle of Mohatz in Hungary between Lewis XII. king of that country, and Soliman emperor of the Turks. Lewis loft the day, and was drowned in a Morafs^b. The death of this prince was a frefh fource of calamities for Hungary. Ferdinand of Auftria the emperor's brother, who had married Lewis's fifter Anne, pretended to the crown of that kingdom, and had for competitor John de Zapol, wayvode of Tranfilvania. They were both elected by two different parties. But John put himfelf under the protection of Soliman, who caufed him to be crowned at Buda, whilft Ferdinand was taking measures to profecute his right.

Affairs of Scotland. Buchanan. The affairs of Scotland ftill remained in the fame fituation, except that in the course of this year, the queen's and earl of Arran's or Hamilton's faction attempted to take away

b Lewis, with an army of twenty thouGand, engaged three hundred thoufand Turks. By his defeat and death, most part of Hungary was lost, with the lives of two hundred thouGand Hungarians, who were cut off by the Turks in the following rencounters. This Lewis was born without a fkin, had a beard at fifteen years of age, at eighteen his hairs were grey, and he was drowned in his 20th. Heylin. the king's perfon from the earl of Angus. But the attempt 1526. mifcarrying, the earl was feverely revenged of the perfons concerned.

The pope and Venetians had begun the war in Italy, in Francis and the fole expectation that Francis would fend thither a pow- Henryde-erful army, and the king of England make a diversion from expectations the Low Countries, or at least, according to custom, furnish of the pope money for maintaining the war. The eafiness wherewith he and Venehad been amufed in the former wars, caufed his money to be Guicciard. relied on as a fure aid, though when a peace or truce was made his interefts were not thought of. But the fcene was changed. Henry, grown more wife by experience, was no longer willing to find money for the affairs of others. Befides, the treasure left him by the king his father being long fince exhausted, he could raife money only by means of the parliament, who always framed difficulties, or made him purchafe their fublides with fome extraordinary favours. So Francis not finding in him the fame difpolitions as formerly, feared to engage too far, before he was fecure of his affiftance c. He perceived, he was no longer inclined to favour the emperor as before. But that did not fuffice. It was alfo neceffary to perfuade him to join in the league of Italy, otherwife the whole charge of the war must have fallen upon France, which was drained of men, money and generals. For this reason, his aim was to induce the emperor, through fear of the league, to accept the equivalent offered him for Burgundy, and to continue the war in Italy, only till that prince was refolved, or the king of England entirely engaged. To that end, he made the pope and Venetians large promifes, to hinder them from being impatient, but performed them very ill. A fmall body of troops levied in Italy, under the command of the marquifs of Saluzzo, was hitherto all that he contributed for the league whereof he was himfelf the author and head. Mean while, the pope was extremely uneafy at feeing the flownefs or rather coldnefs of the two monarchs, on whom he relied. Indeed he had no caufe to complain of Henry, who had made him no promife, and yet he ceafed not earnestly to press him to undertake the defence of the church, as if the church could not have fubfisted if the emperor remained master of Milan." But he received only general anfwers, Henry being unwilling to enc In August 1526. John, lord of cal engagement between the two kings . Vaux, his ambaffador, concluded with their mafters. See Rymer, tom. XIV. fir Thomas More, chancellor of the p. 185-189. Herbert, p. 79. duchy of Lancaster, a treaty of recipro-

VOL, VI.

tians.

257

R

on foot the negotiation with the viceroy of Naples. Guicciard.

1527.

The emperor's embarraffment.

- tage. In the mean time, the pope was at an expence which Clement fets threw him into great streights. For which reason he privately continued with the viceroy of Naples a negotiation, with intent to haften or retard it, according to the proceedings of the kings of France and England. Herein he acted agreeably to his real temper, which made him confider the having always two ftrings to his bow, as the fureft maxim of policy. But he was always fo unfortunate as to reap from his artifices, fruits contrary to his hopes. As his fole aim was to hinder the emperor from keeping the duchy of Milan, to that end it was, that he would have the kings of France and England make confiderable efforts; after which, he would not have fcrupled to forfake them, provided the emperor had fatisfied him upon that article. Francis was in no better disposition with regard to his allies. His view was to recover his fons out of Spain; and, could he have fucceeded by treating alone with the emperor, he would have little regarded the concerns of the pope and Venetians. As for the republick of Venice, it was of great confequence to her that the emperor should not remain master of the Milanefe, and her expences to hinder it was nothing in comparison of the prejudice she would have received, if the emperor had peaceably held that duchy. So, never ceafing to follicit the kings of France and England, fhe continued the War, though faintly, in expectation that thefe two monarchs would bear the greatest part of the charge. The negotiations which the pope still continued with the viceroy of Naples, afforded the Venetians a plaufible reason not to exert themfelves, because they were afraid, his inconstancy would render all their endeavours ineffectual. The emperor on his part was no lefs embarraffed. As he had but little money, a vigorous war must have annoyed him very much. And therefore finding the king of France made no great efforts, he did not hasten the sending of fresh supplies into Italy, for fear of raifing the attention of his enemies. Besides, fince Frondsperg's arrival with the German troops, he thought himfelf ftrong enough to keep the duchy of Milan, which was then his chief aim. Such was the disposition of these potentates in the beginning of the year 1527. We must now see what passed in Italy during this year, because it ferves for foundation to all the events spoken of hereafter.

The duke of Bourbon was under inconceivable difficulties for want of money to pay his troops. After frequent exactions T · · · tions upon the inhabitants of Milan, he faw no way to 1527. maintain his army any longer, without danger of caufing a general revolt in that great city which was reduced to def- The duke of pair. On the other hand, the Germans brought into Italy Bourbon is without mot by Frondsperg, had received no pay fince their lifting. It ney and at was necessary therefore, either to pay them what was due, a great loss. or furnish them wherewithal to make themselves amends in Guicciard, fome other place, or refolve to fce the army difband, on which the emperor wholly relied. To fatisfy the troops, He fees no there was no other way but to lead them into the territories other way of the church, of Florence, or of Venice. But the Vene-his armyinto tian towns were too well provided, to afford any hopes of the pope's booty from thence; especially as the duke of Bourbon had territories. no artillery. Befides, very likely, he was fure the duke of The duke of Urbino fa-Urbino would not oppose his defigns, provided he did not vours him. molest the republick. So, determining to maintain his army He joins upon the pope's territories, he left feven or eight thoufand Frondsperg. Germans at Milan, under the command of Antonio de Leva, and went and joined Frondsperg in the Plaifantin, where he staid fome time to raife contributions.

Before the duke of Bourbon departed from Milan, the Warbetween viceroy of Naples had brought an army upon the borders of the pope and viceroy of the ecclefiaftical flate, to make a diversion, and force the Naples. pope to recall the troops he had fent to the duke of Urbino. fince the expiration of the truce. The approach of that army had obliged the pope to raife troops to defend his dominions, not having thought proper to recall those in Lombardy. Hence he faw himfelf engaged in an unufual ClementVII expence. Hitherto the popes had found means to wage in a great war at the charge of others, and Clement VII. had been in expence. hopes to do the fame. He had granted Francis a tenth up- Guicciard. on the clergy of France, which he was to divide with him. Befides that, Francis had promifed to find forty thousand crowns a month for the league, and twenty thousand for the pope in particular. But of all this, he had yet paid but ten Francis thousand crowns. Thus the pope faw himself over bur- his word dened, without knowing how to get clear of the incum- with him, brance, fince it was no lefs difficult to raife money, than dangerous to make a separate peace in such a juncture. Mean Henry sends. while, Henry VIII. being informed of his neceffities, and him a prefearing he would relinquish the league, fent him thirty Herbert, thousand ducats d, which helped to comfort him a little, and keep him in the refolution to continue the war.

> d By fir John Ruffel, See P. Daniel, torn, VII. p. 635. R 2

It

Truce between the pope and viceroy. Guicciard. P. Daniel. Herbert.

It is needlefs to give the particulars of this war between the pope and the viceroy of Naples. It fuffices to obferve, that whilft it lafted, the pope receiving advice of the duke of Bourbon's march, concluded a truce with the viceroy. He had firong reasons for taking that course. He was not only burdened with the maintenance of two armies, but also faw himfelf daily more remote from his hopes with respect to France and England. Francis performed nothing of what he had promifed, and Henry fhewed no great inclination to come into the league. On the other hand, the duke of Urbino's proceedings, who commanded the army of the allies in the Milanefe, daily grew more fuspicious. Befides, Florence was in danger, and the pope unfafe in Rome itfelf. The conditions of the truce were :

Guicciard. That it fhould last eight months : that the pope should pay fixty thousand ducats to the duke of Bourbon's army; namely, forty thousand on the 21st of the prefent month, and the reft within eight days : and that the imperial army fhould march out of the ecclefiastical state. The truce being published, the pope disbanded all his troops, except two. thousand foot and two hundred horse, and laid up his gallies before he knew the duke of Bourbon's intentions, who was in the midft of his march to Bologna.

The duke of The duke's troops confifted of five thousand men at arms. making about two thousand horse, thirteen or fourteen thoufand Germans, five thousand Spaniards, two thousand Italian foot, and a good number of light horfe of the fame nation. This army departed from about Placentia in February, without money, provisions, waggons, artillery, and fubfifting only by means of the contributions raifed upon their rout. to The duke not being able .to' enter Bologna, by reafon the marguis of Saluzzo had, thrown himfelf in with twelve thousand men, faid fome time in the Bolognese, where his army inade a prodigious booty. Here he was informed of the conclusion of the truce, to which he would not confent, because, the; fum he was to have was not sufficient to pay what was due to his troops. Whereupon the viceroy of Naples, who was at Rome, came to Florence, where the The viceroy duke fent an officer' to confer with him. As the viceroy's intention was to caufe the duke of Bourbon to accept of the truce, in order to fend the imperial army into the state of Venice, he agreed with the mellenger that the duke should withdraw in five days; that fourfcore thousand ducats should be paid him down, and fixty thousand some day in May. The pope hearing of this new agreement, difbanded the two thousand .1 . 5

Bourbon's march.

Guicciard.'

The duke refuses the truce concluded at Rome ...

makes a new agreement with him. Guicciard, thousand men he had kept to be eased of the charge. But 1527. the duke of Bourbon, whether he had intended to deceive the viceroy, or could not reftrain his army, after feigning to The duke attack Florence, fuddenly took the rout to Rome, leaving far fuddenly marches to behind him the army of the pope and Venetians, who had Rome. thrown themfelves into Florence.

Great was then the alarm at Rome. The pope feeing The pope's himfelf without troops and money, knew not what courfe to diffrefs. take. In this diffrefs, he committed the defence of Rome and himfelf to Renzo de Ceri, who made him hope, that with an army, raifed within the walls, he would fecure the city from being infulted. The pope truffing to his general's promifes, would neither leave Rome himfelf to provide for his fafety, nor fuffer any thing to be carried from thence.

Mean while, the duke of Bourbon purfuing his march The duke of without meeting any obffacle, appeared before Rome on the Bourbon 5th of May. The fame day, pretending a defign to proceed Rome. to Naples, he fent a trumpet to the pope to defire a passage, Guicciard. which being refufed, the next morning at break of day he Du Bellai. approached the fuburbs by means of a very thick mift, and the city. formed a breach which they had not had time to repair. But He is flain, in the beginning of the affault, his thighbone was broke with a musket shot, of which he immediately died. The prince of Orange, who was near him, throwing a cloak over his body, continued the affault. At length, after two hours The breach refiftance, the breach was forced, and the imperialists en- is forced. tered the fuburbs. Whereupon the pope withdrew to the retires to caftle of St. Angelo, accompanied by thirteen cardinals, all St. Angelo, the foreign ambaffadors, and fome other perfons of diffine-Guicciard. tion. Mean while, the imperialists were employed in becoming mafters of the Tyber, which was not difficult, confidering the confternation the whole city was in. The pope might still have withdrawn from the castle of St. Angelo. and fecured his perfon. But by a ftrange blindnefs, upon news of the duke of Bourbon's death, he was obstinately bent, without any just reason, to stay in a place where he had neither provisions, nor ammunition, nor a garrifon fufficient to defend it. So many historians have described the Sacking of facking of Rome, that it is needless to infift on it here. The Rome. reader may eafily conceive, what the defire of plunder may Guicciard, caufe an ill disciplined army without a general, like this, to Herbert. commit. Some historians have been pleased to cast the whole Hall. blame of the rapine and cruelty committed on this occasion upon the protestants in Frondsperg's troops. But most have made

261

Guicciard.

R 3

If the army of the allies had closely followed the imperia-

1527. made no fuch diffinction, agreeing that the Spaniards flewed no more regard for the holy city than the Germans .

Overfight of the allies. Guicciard. Hall.

The pope capitulates. June 6.

Guicciard. Herbert, lifts, they might have fallen upon them whilft moft intent upon the plunder, and probably with fuccefs. But if we may believe Guicciardini, the duke of Urbino fo ordered it, that the army came not before Rome till the end of May, and then raifed fo many objections againft attempting the relief of the caftle of St. Angelo, that the generals agreed to leave the pope to come off as well as he could. The allies retiring the firft of June, Clement capitulated the 6th, having fent for the viceroy of Naples to treat with him. But the army, having chosen the prince of Orange for general, had no great confidence in the viceroy, neither would be guided by his counfels. The pope therefore was forced to fign with the prince of Orange and the chief Officers of the army, the following capitulation:

Articles of the capitulation.

That the pope fhould pay the army four hundred thousand ducats, namely, one hundred thousand down, fifty thousand in twenty days, and two hundred and fifty thousand within two months, affigning for that purpose a tax upon the whole ecclession fractional state.

That he fhould deliver into the emperor's hands the caftles of St. Angelo, Civita Vecchia, Oftia, Citta Caftellana, Parma, Placentia, and Modena.

That the pope with the thirteen cardinals fhould remain prifoners in the caftle of St. Angelo, till a hundred and fifty thousand crowns were paid, and then should be conducted to Naples or Gaeta, there to wait the emperor's pleasure.

That the chevalier Gregorio Caffali the English ambassador, Renzo de Ceri, and all the rest that were retired to the castle, except the pope and the thirteen cardinals, should be at liberty to go where they pleased.

That the Colonnas fhould be abfolved from all cenfures.

That when the pope fhould go from Rome, he fhould leave a legate and the court of the Rota^f.

e They ranfacked the city, without diffinction of places, for the fpace of fix or feven days, (two whole months, fays P. Daniel, tom. VII. p. 640.) killing above five thoufand men, and committing all manner of rapine and cruelty. Herbert, p. 82. It was reported, fays Guicciardini, that the plundering foldiers got above a million of ducats, in gold, filver, and jewels; and a much greater fum for ranfoms, I. 13. f This court confifts of twelve prelates, called auditors of the rota, (eight of them Italians, two Spaniards, one Frenchman, and one German) who judge by appeal of all matters ecclefiaftical and civil, between clergymen. The court takes its name from the marble pavement of the room where they meet, refembling a wheel.

That

262

That the capitulation being figned, captain Alarcon, the 1527. fame that had the cuftody of Francis I. when a prifoner, entered the caftle of St. Angelo with three companies of Spa- The pope niards, and as many of Germans, and ftrictly guarded the prifoner. pope and the cardinals. During the confusion caused by the Several alpope's imprisonment, the duke of Ferrara became master of terations. Modena, the Venetians took Ravenna and Cervia, Sigif-Guicciard. mund Malatesta feized Rimini, and the Florentines expelling the pope's legate, recovered their liberty.

Some time after, all the troops which were in the king- Theimperial dom of Naples repaired to Rome to fhare in the booty, and army be-comes ufeglean what the avarice of the Spaniards and Germans had lefs. left. The imperial army then at Rome confifted of twelve Guicciard. thousand Germans, eight thousand Spaniards, and four thoufand Italians. But the plague which prefently after raged among the troops fo diminished them, that it is faid, when they came to go upon action, there was not ten thousand men able to bear arms. Mean while, the eager defire of plunder caufed the emperor's affairs to be fo neglected, that the army remained unferviceable till the end of the year; whereas Bologna and the towns of la Romagna might have been taken, which would have rendered the emperor invincible in Italy. Besides, this negligence gave Francis time to Guicciard. fend troops into those parts, of which he would never have thought, if the emperor's generals had reaped from the taking of Rome and the pope's captivity, the advantages they might have naturally expected for the fervice of their master. It is time now to speak of the affairs of England, the recital whereof has been interrupted by the relation of this year's events in Italy, becaufe it was abfolutely neceffary for the understanding of the sequel.

· Since Francis had refused to execute the treaty of Madrid, Henry rehe had never ceafed to prefs Henry to come into the league folves to of Cognac. But whether Henry perceived that prince's league ofviews, or hoped by managing the emperor to make himfelf fenfive and umpire of the peace, he had kept within the bounds of the defensive defensive league concluded at Moore. At length, finding withFrance, Herbert. that probably the pope and Venetians could not long main- P. Daniel. tain the war, he was afraid, the emperor would become maf- Hollingth. ter of all Italy, and with that increase of power grow too formidable to Europe. Indeed, it was easy to see, that to divest him of the superiority he was going to acquire upon France, England would one day be forced to make greater efforts than were necellary to hinder his attaining it. These confiderconfiderations were farther corroborated by the inftances of cardinal Wolfey, whom Francis had taken care to gain to his interest, otherwise all these reasons probably would have been ineffectual. So about the end of the last year, Henry had fent to Paris Sir William Fitzwilliams to acquaint the king of France, that he was ready to join in an offenfive league with him, and give him the prince's Mary his daughter in marriage, Flancis gladly embracing the propofal, the treaty was begun at Paris by the bifhop of Bath and Wells, the English ambaffador in ordinary, and Fitzwilliams. But as feyeral difficulties occurred, which depended upon the king of England's determination, Francis thought it more proper to fend ambaffadors to London, and conclude it there. He made choice for that purpofe of Gabriel d' Aigremont, or de Gramont bishop of Tarbe and the viscount of Turenne, with

R₄

Hall. Act. Pub. XIV.p.195.

Several treaties. April 30. Ib. p. 159, &c.

p. 80.

whom were joined the first prefident of Roan, and the lord de Vaux, who were already in England. Thefe ambaffadors & concluded with cardinal Wolfey, appointed commiffioner to negotiate with them, three treaties, which were figned the 30th of April 1527, when the duke of Bourbon was marching to Rome.

The first treaty ran :

That the two kings should jointly fend ambassadors to the 1ft. Treaty. p. 195, &c. emperor, with offers concerning the ranfom of the two ho-. Herbert, ftages, and to demand the payment of what was due to the king of England. Du Tillet.

> That if he rejected the offers, or gave no answer within twenty days, the two kings fhould proclaim war against him.

> Another article of this treaty contained a mutual engagement for the marriage of Francis or his fon the duke of Orleans with the princefs Mary, at the king of France's choice, and upon fuch terms as fhould be agreed on when the time came h. Probably, this treaty was to be made publick, in order to induce the emperor to defift from his claim to Burgundy and be fatisfied with the offered equivalent.

By the fecond treaty it was agreed :

2d. Treaty, Herbert. p. 81. Du Tillet.

That in case the emperor rejected their proposals or deferred his answer, all commerce should be forbidden with his

g They arrived in Londen, March 2. Hall, fol. 155. h Hall fays, the people were very much against this match, because the princels Mary being king Henry's pre-fumptive heir, if he died without fons, fhe fucceeded of courfe to the throne, and, on account of her marriage, it was feared fhe would be too much under the influence of France, fol. 155. fubjects fubjects by the two kings, allowing them however forty days to withdraw their effects.

264

That the two kings fhould make war upon the emperor in the Low Countries with an army of thirty thousand foot and fifteen hundred men at arms, and that two thirds of the foot and all the horfe i fhould be furnished by the king of France.

. That they fhould equip a fleet with fifteen thousand whereof the king of France should find ten thoumen. fand.

That if the king of Portugal or any other prince or flate fhould join with the emperor, they fhould be declared enemies to both the kings.

That the pope and Venetians fhould be deemed included. in the league, provided they continued the war in Italy.

That the king of France should endeavour to perfuade the king of Navarre, the duke of Gueldres, and Robert de la Mark to make war upon the emperor.

That the two kings fhould use their joint endeavours to encourage John de Zapol to profecute his right to the crown of Hungary, in cafe he had not already made an alliance with the Turk, in order to keep the emperor's brother Ferdinand employed in those parts.

That the league should be notified to the princes of Germany, and the two kings endeavour to prevent their affifting the emperor.

The fubstance of the third treaty was:

I. That this treaty flould not derogate from that of Moore, Ad. Pub. which remained in force.

XIV.p.218. Guicciard.

2. That there should be perpetual peace between Francis Herbert, and Henry and their respective subjects.

3. That neither of them fhould give aid or advice to any perfon whatever that fhould attack the dominions of the other.

4. Henry renounced for himfelf and fucceffors all right and title to the kingdom of France k, and in general, whatever Francis now poffeffed.

5. In confideration whereof, Francis bound himfelf and fucceffors to pay to Henry's fucceffors an annual penfion for ever, of fifty thousand crowns, at two payments; name-

i Twenty thousand foot, and fifteen hundred men at arms. See Herbert, P. 81.

k - Jus, titulum, & verum dominium in regno Franciæ.---- Rymer, tom, XIV. p. 220.

ly, on the 1st of May, and the 1st of November, and that the payment of the penfion fhould commence, on the first of those two days which should happen after Henry's death. without deduction of what fhould remain to be paid after Henry's decease of the two millions stipulated by the treaty of Moore.

6. Moreover Francis bound himfelf to give yearly to Henry fifteen thousand crowns worth of falt of Bruage 1, befides the fore-mentioned fifty thousand crowns.

7. That, to prevent the objection which might hereafter be made, that a king can't bind his fucceffors, the two kings should cause the treaty to be confirmed by the states of their realms and held as a perpetual and inviolable law.

8. That the treaty fhould be approved and confirmed by the archbishops, bishops, princes, dukes, earls, barons, and other great men of the two kingdoms, whole names were inferted in this article, under forfeiture of all their goods; and by the parliaments of Paris, Touloufe, Roan, Bourdeaux, as well as by all the courts of juffice in England.

Alterations treaty on account of the facking of Rome. Act. Pub. XIV.p.199, Sec. Herbert. Du Tillet.

The news of the facking of Rome and the pope's captiin the fecond vity arriving fhortly after the conclusion of these treaties, the two kings thought fit to alter the article of the fecond concerning their carrying war into the Low Countries, and to agree to act only in Italy. But as the English troops could not be transported into Italy without great difficulties and loss of time, they agreed that the king of France should undertake the war alone for a certain fum m, which Henry was to pay him monthly till the end of October. The last treaty was figned the 29th of May about three weeks after the taking of Rome.

In confequence of the first of the three treaties of April Henry's dcmands upon the 30th, Henry fent fir Francis Pointz into Spain to demand the emperor. of the emperor, that as by their former treaties the war with France was carried on at a common charge, he would give Stow. him half the booty taken at Pavia, and one of the two ho-Herbert. Pol, Virg. ftages received from the French king. Pointz was accompa-Hollingfh. nied with Clarenceux king at arms but incognito, that he

> 1 A town in Saintonge, famous for its faltpits, about eight leagues from Rochel. The falt in this diffrict brings in the king of France fourteen millions of livres per annum, m Thirty thousand ducats, or, thirty two thousand, two hundred and twenty two crowns de foleil, to be deducted out of what Francis owed him. Herbert, p. 83. Guicciard, 1. 18.

might

might be ready to do his office when there fhould be occasion. The emperor eafily perceived, the king of England fought only a pretence of quarrel. But as it was his interest to prolong the time, he told the ambaffador he would fend his anfwer to the king his mafter by an express.

While the ambaffador was on his way to Spain, Francis Lautree and Henry hearing what had paffed in Italy thought proper marches to Italy. that cardinal Wolfey fhould go and confer with Francis at Guicciard, Amiens, in order to concert measures agreeable to the fituation of affairs. Shortly after, Francis fent Lautrec with the forces defigned for Italy n.

Cardinal Wolfey departing from court the third of July, Wolfey conarrived at Calais the 11th °, from whence he went to Abbeville fers with and flayed till Francis came to Amiens. He was received at the king of France. his entrance into the French territories, with the fame respect Guicciard, as would have been paid to the king of England. We find Herbert. in the collection of the publick acts, Francis's letters patents Stow. empowering the cardinal, his dearest and great friend, to re- P. Daniel. lease the prisoners, wherever he came, what crimes foever Act. Pub. they were guilty of, except high treason, rapes, coining, XIV.p.202. facrilege, and the like, and to grant them a pardon by his letters patents.

Whilft the cardinal was at Abbeville, he received a me- The empemorial from the emperor, containing his answer to the king ror's memoof France's offers to the viceroy of Naples. He had, as was peace. observed, rejected these offers at first with disdain and refused Ib. p. 200, to hear them mentioned. But the fituation of his affairs being altered by the league between France and England, he believed it would be better to end all differences by a peace, than run the hazard of maintaining the war alone against fo many powerful enemies. It was therefore in order to procure a peace, that he fent this answer to the cardinal, wherewith he imagined the king of France and Henry would be fatisfied.

As this memorial is very proper to illustrate the history of those times, it will not doubtless be unacceptable to infert the fubstance thereof.

n He set out June 30, with eight hundred lances. Guicciard. 1. 18.

· He was met at Boulogne by monfieur de Byron, with a thoufand horfe, and after by John, cardinal of Lorrain, and the chancellor of Alençon, who accompanied him first to Montreuil, and then to Abbeville. He was attended by Cuthbert Tunstall, bishop of London, the lord Sandes, the king's chamberlain, Edward Stanley, earl of Derby, fir Henry Guildford, fir Thomas More, with many knights and others, to the number of twelve hundred horfe. Hall, fol. 160. Stow, p. 531. Herbert, p. 83. He brought with him thirty thousand crowns. Guicciard. l. 18. Hall fays, it was two hundred and forty thousand pounds. fol, 161, Hollingth. p. 897.

1527.

267

44 The

"The emperor began with protefting, that by what he offered in this memorial, he meant not to derogate from the treaty of Madrid, but in the points only which were contrary to it. He added, that as to the hoftages, the king of France was not ignorant of the reason of their being in Spain, and had it in his power to recover them. Then he set forth the offers made by Francis to the viceroy of Naples, containing the sour following articles:

The king of FRANCE's offers to the emperor.

" I. That he would execute the treaty of Madrid, " provided Francesco Sforza was restored to the duchy of " Milan.

"II. That he would give the emperor in lieu of Burgundy two millions of gold payable, namely, a good fum in hand, when queen Leonora fhould be delivered to him, and the reft at a day to be appointed, and then his fons fhould be reftored; unlefs the emperor had rather have the whole fum at once, and deliver at the fame time the queen and the two hoftages."

" III. That he would pay the king of England what was " due from the emperor.

" IV. He demanded that the emperor fhould increase " queen Leonora's dowry in proportion to the fum he was to receive, fince he could do it without any charge to " himfelf,

The EMPEROR's answer.

The emperor replied to these four articles by the eight following declarations :

⁴⁴ I. That what fhould be agreed upon fhould not be pre-⁴⁵ judicial to the treaty of Madrid, except in fuch things ⁴⁴ as fhould be altered by mutual confent.

" II. That the emperor's right to Burgundy fhould remain " entire, as before the treaty of Madrid.

" III. That all the articles of the treaty of Madrid, except fuch as were mentioned in these offers, should remain entire.

" IV. The emperor in his fourth declaration faid, that he hoped the king of England and the lord cardinal would caufe

268

OF ENGLAND.

" caufe the fum of two millions of gold, offered by the king " of France, to be augmented. However, if that could " not be, it fhould be underftood, that this fum was over " and above what the emperor owed the king of England, " as well for money lent, as for the indemnity he had un-" dertaken to difcharge, which fums the king of France had " taken upon himfelf in the treatý of Madrid; befides liké-" wife the reflitution of the late Mr. de Bourbon's eftate, it being reafonable that his heirs fhould partake of the benefit of the treaty. Item, That the king of France fhould punctually perform all the reft of the articles concluded on his part in the treaty of Madrid before his fons left Spain; the emperor not being able, after what had paffed, to take any " fecurity if the hoftages remained not in his power till the " treaty was fully executed.

"V. That purfuant to the treaty of Madrid, what the floud be agreed upon, floud be ratified by the flates general of France, and approved by the parliaments. Or if that could not be done by the flates general, it floud at leaft be ratified by the flates of each pro-

" VI. The emperor declared, That he could not fend the queen his fifter to France till every thing was accomplifhed, and then the queen and the hoftages fhould be fent together.

"VII. That as for duke Sforza, the emperor would appoint impartial judges to decide his affair, and if he was found guilty of no crime for which he deferved to be deprived of his duchy, he fhould be reftored. But if he was condemned, the ftate of Milan fhould remain in the emperor's difpofal, according to juffice and equity.

" VIII. That the king of England fhould be guarantee of the future treaty, and by his letters patents engage to affift at his own charge with a certain number of troops him of the two parties that fhould keep the treaty, againft him that fhould not obferve it.

"Befides thefe eight conditions, which the emperor called declarations, he demanded moreover in his memorial, that the king of France fhould fatisfy him for the expences of the leagues he had made with him, and of which he was the fole author, empowering the king of England to fettle the fum.

"Finally, he faid, That he did not queffion, the king of England, who perfectly knew what had paffed between the "two 20 23

" two parties would not caufe the king of France's offers to " be increased, and that the lord legate, whom the emperor " always looked upon as his good friend, would also endea-" your the fame to the utmost of his power : that however, * he was to inclined to peace, that if the king of England " defired; he fhould make any farther conceffious than what " were contained in the eight foregoing declarations, he " would do more for his fake than for any prince in the " world. That he should be very glad, all the poten-" tates of Europe knew how much he valued his friend-" fhip and afcribed to him the whole glory of procuring the " peace. This memorial was dated at Valladolid the-----of " July 1527.

Remark on this memotial.

the memorial to the king of France.

Reply of Francis I.

Bellai.

P. 1.333.

If this answer of the emperor be closely examined, it will be manifest that he fimply and absolutely accepted of the French king's offers, under terms denoting, it was he that gave rather than received law, and that by his declarations he only obviated all poffible cavils. As to what he farther demanded, it was under fuch reftrictions, that he feemed willing to fland to the king of England's determination, which at fuch a juncture was the fame as departing from his demands. There was but one fingle point concerning which he could not refolve to fubmit; namely, the duke of Milan's affair. But this was a point newly proposed by the king of France, and which had no relation to the treaty of Madrid, where nothing like it was to be found. However, it is plain if that had been the only obstacle to a peace, he would also have granted it, fince he referved a way to come off with honour, namely, by caufing Sforza to be declared innocent, in the mainer he had himfelf proposed to the pope. Perhaps Francis would have accepted the peace on the terms offered in the meniorial, if the emperor had come to that refolution at first. But fince he had made these offers to the viceroy of Naples, the face of affairs was very much altered, as he had entirely gained Henry to his interest, and as after the taking of Rome it was to be feared the emperor would become mafter of all Italy. Mean while, the emperor's offers, which were in effect the fame Francis had made to the viceroy of Henry fends Naples, were either to be accepted or rejected. But as it was not Henry's bufinefs to return an answer, fince the affair did' not directly concern him, he only fent the memorial to the king of France, who no longer defiring to make peace, difengaged himfelf in this manner. He demanded in the first place, that Sforza should be restored without condition. Secondly, condly, that his fons fhould be delivered before he recalled his 1527. forces from Italy, where Lautrec was now arrived, offering L to deposit three hundred thousand ducates in the hands of the king of England for fecurity of his word. There could not be a plainer evidence of his little defire to execute the treaty of Madrid, though the fame terms only were demanded as were offered by himfelf prefently after his deliverance. He meant, after having withdrawn his hoftages, to have the execution of the treaty in his own power, under colour of offering to deposit for fecurity three hundred thousand ducats in the hands of a prince devoted to him, and who by a private treaty was engaged to make his interest his own. The emperor, unwilling to be thus infnared, offered on his part to deposit the same sum in the hands of the king of England for pledge that the hoftages should be restored. But his offer being rejected, the affair ftopped there, and war was only thought of. Mean while, the emperor defiring to let all the world fee, it was not his fault that a peace was not concluded, gave the ambaffadors of England, of the pope, and of the Venetians, the fame answer he had fent to cardinal Wolfey. They all feemed very well fatisfied, and faid their masters would doubtless accept a peace on these terms, and fend orders to conclude it. But they knew not that the kings of France and England had altered their minds and taken new resolutions.

OFENGLAND.

If Francis and cardinal Wolfey were to confer together Francis's at Abbeville, it was not to feek means to make peace, sonference but rather to take meafures, on fuppofition that a war with Wolfey. the emperor was infallible. Francis being come to Abbe-Three new ville the first of August, the cardinal waited on him, and treaties, after conferring together, they concluded on the eigh-XIV.p.203, teenth three treaties, which properly were only fupple-&cc, ments, explanations, and restrictions of the three foregoing ones.

By the first it was agreed:

I. That, as he had left it to the king of France's choice to marry the princefs Mary, or leave her for the duke of Orleans his fecond fon, the duke fhould efpoufe the princefs when they fhould both be of age. That then, and not before fhould be fettled the marriage articles concerning the dowry, the education of the duke of Orleans in England, and the like. Moreover, that, whether the marriage fhould be confummated or the two kings think fit to difpofe of their children 271 children otherwife, their friendship should remain inviolable, the marriage being only to be confidered as a supplement to the treaties of the thirtieth of April, and not as part of those treaties.

* II. That the treaty concluded at Moore fhould remain in full force.

III. That the project of the interview of the two kings fhould be laid afide, on account of the feafon and circumstances of affairs.

²³ IV. As by the treaty of the twenty ninth of May, it was agreed that the king of England fhould contribute a certain fum for the war of Italy, it was concluded by this, that in cafe the emperor accepted the offers the two kings fhould make him by their ambaffadors, the contribution fhould ceafe without any prejudice to the treaty of peace: But if he rejected them, the treaty of league offenfive and defenfive fhould fublift, on condition that during this campaign the king of England fhould be deemed to have difcharged his part of the treaty, by his contribution for the war with Italy.¹¹⁰

V. That the king of England fhould form no demands upon the king of France on pretence of his charges for the war of Italy.

VI. That to prevent all difputes, without examining the number of troops which the king of France maintained in Italy, the king of England fhould pay for the month of June laft twenty thousand crowns, for the month of July laft how thirty thousand crowns, and thirty two thousand two hundred and twenty two for each of three following months. On condition however, that if in these three laft months, the English commissions found in the army of Italy, a lefs number of troops than what the king of France was to maintain, the contribution fhould be leftened in proportion. Moreover, if a peace was made during these three laft months, the contribution fhould cease the day the peace was concluded.

p. 209.

By the fecond treaty, which concerned only trade, Francis promifed to give the English merchants such privileges as should be agreed upon hereaster.

p. 212. Herbert. By a third treaty the two kings were bound : First, Not to confent to the calling of a general council during the pope's captivity. Secondly,

227

Secondly, To receive no bull brief or mandate from the 1527. pope P till he was releafed.

Thirdly, That till the pope should refume the government of the church, whatever fhould be determined in England by the cardinal legate, affifted by the principal members of the clergy 9, and in France by the clergy of the Gallican church, fhould be punctually executed.

These treaties being concluded, Francis I. ratified them, Wolfey and fwore to the observance before he left Abbeville . car- returns to dinal Wolfey did the fame thing in his mafter's name, by vir- Act, Pub. tue of his full powers and title of vicar general, which he XIV.p.216, had received on this occasion. After that, he returned into -218. England to give the king an account of the fuccefs of his negotiation 3.

Henry being refolved to proclaim war against the em- Henry's peror, but willing to conceal the real motives, demanded fresh deof him by his ambaffadors, four things, which he knew mands upon the emperor, could not then be performed. The first was, That he Herbert, fhould pay what was borrowed of him, or of his father king P. 86. Henry VII. The fecond, that he fhould pay him the five hundred thousand crowns to which he was obliged, in case he married not the princefs Mary, to whom he was affianced. The third, that according to the tenor of their treaty, he fhould fatisfy him for his penfion from the king of France, whereof there was now due four years and four months. The fourth, that he fhould release the pope, and fatisfy him Guiciard. for all the damages caufed by his troops. The emperor an- The empefwered the ambaffadors, first, that he had never denied his ror'sanfwer. debt to the king of England; but was furprifed he. fhould at this juncture infift fo much upon payment : that at leaft,

P Any way prejudicial to either of the two kings, their kingdoms, or to the cardinal of York's legatine jurifdiction. Rymer, tom. XIV. p. 213, 214.

9 -Accitis de mandato & auctoritate prædicti-Angliæ regis in regno Angliæ, prelatis, circa statum & administrationem rerum ecclesiasticarum in Anglia, &c. Rymer, tom. XIV. p. 214. Called together by the king's authority, and his confent first obtained to what should be determined. And here (fays lord Herbert) began the relish our king took of governing the church, p. 85. r They were ratified at Amiens, VOL. VI.

August 18. Rymer, tom. XIV. p. 216, 218.

s About the end of September. Francis not only richly prefented him, but conducted him through the town, and upon his way about a mile, being accompanied with the titular king of Navarie, the pope's legate, and his prime nobility. At his coming to Ca-lais, he ordered the mart to be kept in that town, instead of Antwerp, &c. Hall, fol. 159. Herbert, p. S5 .----About this time, Wolfey dispatched Gambara to the pope, to defire him to make him his vicar general in England, France, and Germany, during his captivity. Guicciard, 1. 18. S

Herbert.

when

when the money was required, the obligations flould be - offered to be reftored. Secondly, that he would write to the king their mafter to acquaint him, why he did not think himfelf liable to the penalty of the five hundred thousand crowns, for not confummating the marriage. In the third place, that orders were fent into Italy to fet the pope free. He faid nothing concerning making fatisfaction for the penfion, because probably he confidered it as included in the article of the debts to which he owned himfelf bound, as indeed nothing was more reafonable.

Affembly of the chief men of France. Mezerai.

The affembly's opinion.

Francis's aim.

Charles, Henry, act with infincerity.

The emperor's replies were not capable of fatisfying Henry who only fought an occasion of quarrel. On the other hand, Francis having called together the chief men, that is to fay properly, perions devoted to him, declared to them all the fleps he had made towards a peace with the emperor : and it may be eafily gueffed, he was not very careful to explain what the emperor might alledge against him. Having represented the matter as he pleased, he faid, he was ready to return into captivity, if it was judged that he was obliged in honour or confcience. The affembly unanimoufly replied, that his perfon belonged to the realm, and it was not in his power to difpofe of it according to his pleafure : that moreover, he could not alienate the provinces of the crown, but if the emperor would except of a ranfom for the two princes in hoftage, they offered the king two millions of gold to redeem them. A man must have voluntarily shut his eyes, not to fee what was the defign of this farce, entirely managed by the court. Mean while, the king believing, after this decifion, that he might, with a fafe confcience, go to war with the emperor, thought only of means to recover his fons by force of arms. He still hoped however, the dread of a war would induce the emperor to mitigate the treaty of Madrid. This was not now with respect to Burgundy, fince he could not be ignorant that the emperor had accepted the offered equivalent. But he hoped by means of the war, to procure a new treaty, which fhould annul that of Madrid. Thus many princes play with their words and oaths, and feek Francis, and to blind themselves, or at least, the publick, whilst none about them dare to tell them the truth. The emperor kept his word no better, with regard to the duchy of Milan; and Henry VIII. fcrupled not to break his league with the emperor, as he had before violated that with Francis. Princes never want excuses when they have a mind to break a treaty. But the publick is not always imposed upon, though frequently they appear to to be. Probably, the fovereigns themfelves. T themfelves are not fo blind, but they fee the irregularity of their conduct, though, countenanced by the diffimulation of the publick, they affect a great fecurity. But the time comes at last, when posterity, less prepossesfed, does justice to all the world, and calls things by their proper name.

Francis, willing to preferve the friendship newly contracted Francis and with Henry, fent him the order of St. Michael^t, by Anne Henry fend de Montmorency^u, one of the knights. This lord had their orders power to difpenfe with Henry's oath, in whole or in part, of knights of as the new knight fhould think fit, or even to be contented St. Michael, with his bare word. Henry was pleafed to fwear to obferve garter. all the statutes of the order of St. Michael, which were not Act. Pub. contrary to those of the garter, or any other order he had XIV.p.227s already received. Then he fent the order of the garter to 233. Francis, by Arthur [Plantagenet] viscount Lisle, natural fon p. 232. of Edward IV w. and Francis took the usual oath of the Hall. order, with the same restrictions. The French ambassador Herbert. who arrived in England about the end of October, was received with fuch magnificence, that du Bellai, who accompanied him, affures us, he had never feen the like. The English ambassador was received in the same manner in France, there having ever been between Francis and Henry an emulation, which frequently threw them into needlefs expences. But it was most inconvenient for Francis, by reafon of his continual wars with the emperor, wherein Henry was no farther engaged than he pleafed : nay, he paid the AA. Pub. very contribution for the war of Italy, by way of deduction XIV.p.233r for the fums owed him by Francis *, as appears in the collection of the publick acts. Thus Francis was forced to difburfe all the money employed in that war, of which I muft now relate the fequel.

Clement VII. was still confined in the castle of St. Angelo, Affairs of till he could pay the fums exacted upon him. As he had but Italy. Guiceiard, little money, he could only pay part of what he had pro-

.t The military order of St. Michael, was instituted by Lewis XII. in 1469. The knights wear a gold collar of fhellwork, one within another, laid on a gold chain, whereon hangs a medal of St. Michael the archangel, the ancient protector of France.

u Anne de Montmorency, grand maitre arrived the 20th of October, with fix hundred horfe at London, and after audience had been given, they were, on November 10, entertained by our king at Greenwich, with a fumptuous feast, and with a comedy, in which his daughter the princels Mary acted a part. Herbert, p. 85.

* He was accompanied by dr. John Taylor, master of the rolls, and archdeacon of Buckingham, fir Nicolas Carew, fir Anthony Brown, and fir Thomas Wriothefley, garter king at arms. Rymer, tom. XIV. p. 232. * Which fums amounted to fixty four thousand five hundred and forty four crowns. See Rymer, tom. XIV. p. 234.

S 2

miled

Herbert.

Letter to Henry from the pope and imprifoned cardinals. Burnet, vol. III." Herbert,

The emperor tries to fet Francis and Henry at variance.

Herbert.

miled, and therefore his captivity was longer than he expected at first; they in whose custody he was, not being willing to truft to his word. The emperor had not advice of the facking of Rome, and the pope's imprifonment fooner than the beginning of June, and it was above a month before he came to any refolution. As he did not queffion this affair would make great noife in the world, he was willing to fee, before he determined what to do, how the kings of France and England would take it, in order to proceed accordingly. The 2d of August, he writ to Henry to excuse himfelf concerning the outrages committed by his troops at Rome, and the violence exercifed upon the pope's perfon, wherein he protested, he was not concerned. At the fame time, he afked his advice about what was to be done on the occafion, as if he still deemed him his good friend and ally. But it was only to gain time, till he received Francis's anfwer to the memorial fent to cardinal Wolfey. On the other hand, the pope, though narrowly watched, had found means to write to Henry y, and caufe the thirteen cardinals, who were confined with him, to do the fame, defiring his protection, and entreating him to use his best endeavours to free them from their unhappy condition. Henry, upon receipt of these letters, fent orders to his ambassadors in Spain, to demand of the emperor the pope's and cardinals liberty : to which the emperor answered in general terms, that he would do what lay in his power for the king of England's fatisfaction. Mean while, he was thinking of conveying the pope into Spain, in expectation of making a better bargain with him than if he left him in Italy. Of this cardinal Wolfey informed Henry by a letter from Abbeville of the twenty ninth of July.

It is certain, Henry's inflances in the pope's behalf greatly embarraffed the emperor. He found that Francis and Henry would not fail to join their counfels and forces againft him, under colour of labouring for the pope, and this union could not but break all his measures, with respect to his affairs in Italy. He believed therefore, that before all things he should try to divide them, by fowing jealouss and sufpicions between them. One of his expedients to fucceed, was to propose to the cardinal a marriage between the duke of Richmond, natural fon of Henry, and Isabella princess of y On September 24. By Gregory Herbert, p. 81, 83. Burnet, vol. III. de Caffali, the English agent at Rome, p. 34. who was now returning to England.

276

Portugal,

Portugal, with whom he offered in dower the duchy of Mi-1527. lan. The cardinal acquainted the king with it by a letter of the 31ft of July, telling him withal, that the offer was not much to be relied on, but however, it was proper to feem to listen to it, because it was necessary still to preferve some correspondence with the emperor. This related without doubt to the affair of the divorce, which I shall prefently speak of. For, by a letter of the 1st of August, the cardinal in-Arumourin formed the king it was reported in Spain, he intended to di- Spain of Henry's invorce the queen, but that it was requifite to fend orders to his tending to ambaffadors at Madrid to fliffe the rumour as much as poffi-part with his ble. That to this end, they might fay, it had no other queen. foundation than the bifhop of Tarbe's fcruples concerning Herbert. the prince's Mary's marriage with the duke of Orleans, as if there was room to question the princes's legitimacy. The Theemperor. emperor also used another means to divide Francis and Henry, tries to bribe Wolfey. by trying to gain cardinal Wolfey, by advantageous offers z. Pol. Virg. But for once, he could not fucceed, whether Wolfey was now too far engaged with Francis, or was bent to be revenged of the emperor, who had twice deceived him, or whether the bufinefs of the divorce was now refolved, in which cafe it was not possible for him to promise to espouse the emperor's interefts.

When Francis heard of the facking of Rome, he perceived Francis joins it was time to lay afide artifice, and neceffary to fend a with the powerful aid into Italy, otherwife the Venetians would in- Venetians fallibly conclude a peace with the emperor. Indeed, it was Guicciard. not likely, they could or would bear alone the burden of the war. Wherefore his first care was to make a new treaty with them *, to bring each into the field ten thousand men; and levy ten thousand Switzers at a common charge. The Venetians defired nothing more than to be supported by France, because they justly dreaded, that the army which had facked Rome would be employed against them. Indeed, if the duke of Bourbon had been alive, or the viceroy of Naples able to influence the army, the Venetians would undoubtedly have been attacked, being the only enemies the emperor had in Italy. But happily for them, the imperial troops being The plague wholly intent upon the plunder of Rome, without thinking the impeof any other undertaking, the plague which broke out among rialifts. them, fwept away two thirds of the foldiers. In fhort, the Guicciard.

refused Walley the archbishoprick of Toledo, the richeft in Spain, to which

2 He offered him large forns befides the cardinal vehemently afpired, he his pension. But because Charles had proved inexorable. Pol. Virg. 1. 27. Horbert, p. 85. a On May 15. Guicciaid. l. 18.

diftemper

277

3

Lautrec geleague. Guicciard. Herbert.

He arrives in Piedmont.

Doria re-France. Guicciard. Herbert.

Lautrec marches to Naples very flowly. Guicciard. Hall.

Mantua fide Sardi.

diftemper deftroying them by heaps, they left Rome, and difperfed themfelves in the neighbouring country. After which, having facked Terni and Narni, and extorted money from Spoleto, the Germans parted from the Spaniards, and returned to Rome. Thus difcord arifing in the army, which ill obeyed the prince of Orange, though they had chosen him for general, they projected nothing to improve their victory for the emperor's advantage. On the contrary, by their negne al of the ligence, they gave Francis time to fend troops into Italy, under the command of Lautrec, who was declared general of the league he had newly concluded with the Venetians. As for the duke of Urbino, he continued in the Milanefe with part of the Venetian army.

Lautrec arrived in Piedmont in July, with part of the army he was to command. The marguis of Saluzzo was ordered to join him with his Italians, and the Switzers were to come prefently after. Whilft he was employed in conquefts of little moment, waiting the junction of all his forces, Andrea suces Genoa Doria, who had quitted the pope's fervice, and commanded deminion of the French gallies, to which he had joined eight others of his own, found means to reduce the city of Genoa under Francis's dominion. This was a good opening of a campaign, which feemed to promife an advantageous fuccefs in the reft of the war, especially as Lautrec, after assembling his whole army, confifting of twenty five thousand men, became mafter of Vigevano, Alexandria, and Pavia. Sforza and the Venetians earneftly preffed him to beliege Milan, but he fhewed them politive orders to march to Naples. The king of France took care not to employ his army to conquer the duchy of Milan, which by the treaty of league was to be reftored to Sforza, after which, the Venetians would give themfelves but little trouble to accomplifh his attempt upon Naples. Befides, he still hoped, that by confenting the emperor should keep Milan he might recover his fons, whereas in reftoring Sforza he should deprive himself of that means. Lautrec therefore began his march to the kingdom of Naples, but with fuch flowness and affected delays, that it was evident, he had private orders not to make too much hafte. And indeed, it was at the time that Francis expected the emperor's final answer to the offers made him by his and Henry's ambaffadors. Lautrec long halted at Parma and The dukes of Placentia, which had opened their gates to him. Mean Ferrara and while, the duke of Ferrara joined with France, as well on with France, account of Lautrec's march, who might have eafily ravaged his country, as of Francis's offer to give in marriage to his fon fon Hercules, Renée of France, fecond daughter of Lewis 1527. XII. The duke of Mantua prefently after followed his example.

Mean while, the emperor feeing the ill effects of the pope's Negotiation captivity, had difpatched the general of the order of St. forthe pope's liberty. Francis, to the viceroy of Naples, with orders to releafe the Guicciard, pope. The general finding the viceroy feized with a diftemper whereof he died in a few days, delivered the orders to Hugo de Moncada to be executed. The emperor had given general inftructions, that the pope fhould be bound to pay. the arrears due to the army, and give fecurity, after having his liberty, to forfake the league. But as it was not eafy for the pope to find pledges, or the money neceffary to pay the, army, the negotiation was prolonged. Mean while, he continually follicited Lautree by private meffengers to approach Rome, in order to facilitate his deliverance. But Lautrec had politive orders which hindered him from making hafte, and yet his march, though flow, was of good fervice to the pope. Moncada feeing the kingdom of Naples was going to be invaded, and that it was not possible to lead thither the imperial army which was at Rome, without giving them money, concluded at last b a treaty with the pope to this effect :

I. That the pope fhould not oppose the emperor in the Treaty for affairs of Naples or Milan.

II. That he fhould grant the emperor a crusade in Spain, Guicciard. and a tenth in the reft of his dominions. Herbert.

III. That the emperor fhould keep Civita Vecchia, Oftia, Citta Castellana, and the castle of Furli.

IV. That the pope flould pay down to the German troops, fixty thousand ducats, and thirty five thousand to the Spaniards.

V. That in a fortnight after, he fhould pay them another certain fum, and within three months all the reft that was due to the emperor, amounting to above three hundred and fifty thousand ducats.

VI. That till the two first payments were made, the pope should be conducted to fome fafe place out of Rome, and give hoftages.

The treaty being figned, and the cardinals of Cefis and The pope Orfino delivered in holtage, it was agreed, that on the 10th orvieto.

Guicciard.

of

Dn October 31. Ibid. 54

279

the pope's deliverance.

of December, the pope should be taken out of the castle of St. Angelo, and conducted to a place appointed. But as he was afraid of a longer confinement, because he was unable to perform the treaty, he escaped in difguise the night before, and fhut himfelf up in Orvieto.

Guicciard.

Beginning of Henry's

this divorce

made fo

Sanders,

Burnet.

divorce.

When Lautrec heard that the pope was at liberty, he reftored to him the city of Parma, and marched to Bologna, where he flayed three weeks expecting fresh orders from the king. Some days after, he received a letter from Clement VII. acknowledging himfelf indebted to him for his liberty, intimating withal, that having been forced to grant the imperialists whatever they required, he did not think himself obliged to perform his engagements.

- It was whilft the pope was prifoner in the caffle of St. Angelo, that Henry's divorce was fet on foot ; a momentous affair, if ever there was one, as well in itfelf, as on account of the parties concerned, and chiefly for its effects. It was not yet thirty years fince Lewis XII. put away his wife without any difficulty, or much noife in the world. Henry VIII. had a mind to attempt the fame thing, and though supported with much more plaufible reafons, he met with infuperable obstacles, not to be furmounted without an extraordinary method, which gave occasion to the establishment of the re-Reafon why formation in England. This effect diffinguished Henry VIII's divorce from fo many others, which are but flightly much noife, mentioned by hiftorians. The writers upon this fubject being either catholicks or protestants, have confidered it varioufly. The catholicks have drawn arguments from thence against the reformation in England, and represented Henry's divorce, as the next and immediate caufe of the change of religion; whereas the protestants affirm, it was only the oc-Remarks on cafion, . Three English authors especially have writ the hiftory of this divorce, befides many others of the fame nation, Herbert, and or foreigners who have fpoke of it in their works. Sanderus, or rather Sanders, author of the origin and progrefs of the English schifm, makes it his business to defame Henry VIII. and fhow that the reformation in England, which he terms schifm, entirely fprung from Henry's passion for Anne Bullen, He fancied by that to give a mortal wound to the reformation, and caufe the world to think, that a superstructure raifed on fuch a foundation, could not be the work of God, The lord Herbert in his hiftory of Henry VIII. contents himfelf with 'a bare recital of the events of this reign, whereof the divorce is one of the principal, without many reafonings, leaving his readers to make inferences from the facts he relates.

lates. Doctor Burnet intending to write the hiftory of the reformation of England, made it his chief aim, in speaking of Henry's divorce, to fhow, that though it occafioned the reformation, it was only by accident. For this reason he has endeavoured to refute the palpable falfehoods afferted by Sanders in his hiftory. He has fucceeded to well, that no fincere man can for the future acknowledge Sanders for a writer worthy of credit.

The fequel of my hiftory obliges me to fpeak of this famous divorce. I should be inclined to refer the reader to the forementioned excellent hiftory of the reformation of England, known to all the world, and to which it is difficult to make any additions, but it would not be reafonable to oblige the readers to remember what they have read in that history, or to peruse it again. Wherefore I shall choose, in purfuing the thread of my hiftory, to relate this event, which is as the hinge whereon do turn numberless other things, which that illustrious author had occasion only to mention, but which I must more fully explain, because our ends are different. His aim in speaking of Henry VIII's affairs with the pope, the emperor, and the king of France, was to illuftrate the hiftory of the reformation, and mine is, not to meddle with the affairs of religion any farther than they relate to the other events of this reign.

Henry had been married eighteen years to Catherine of Henry re-Arragon, and by her had three children, whereof one was folves to diliving, when he formed the defign to put her away. He al- Catherine, ledged, as the principal reason, his scruples for marrying his Hall. brother's widow. But, as it is pretended, thefe fcruples Stow. troubled him not till he was in love with Anne Bullen, one of Herbert. the queen's maids of honour, it is inferred, that his doubts Burnet. concerning the validity of his marriage, fprung from this new paffion, and without that, would never have exifted . Accordingly, fome labour to fhow his divorce had no other foundation than his love for that lady. Others again endeavour to prove, that his love and his fcruples were independent of each other. For my part, I fhould think it needlefs It is not pofto accuse or justify Henry, with regard to the concerns of re- fible to know whether ligion, if there was not fome necessity to illustrate this matter Henry's love with respect to the history. By illustrating, I mean, thewing watthe caufe of the divorce.

the

c It was at first reported, that king Henry was to marry Margaret, duchefs dowager of Alencon, and that Thomas Bullen, viscount Rochford, had brought over her picture with him, when he returned from his embaffy to France. Hollingshead, p. 897. Pol. Vitg. 1. 27.

1527.

the impofibility of giving a certain judgment about it. But 1527. before all things, it is neceffary to defcribe the perfon, who, as it is pretended, was the prime caufe of the king's divorce, and of all the confequences thereof.

> Annie Bullen ^d was of a good, though not a noble family. Sir Thomas Bullen, "her father, married a fifter of the duke of Norfolk e, and by her had Anne, born according to Camden in 1507, about two years before Henry VIII's acceffion to the throne. Thomas Bullen, her father, was twice ambassador to France, first in 1515, and again in 1527. He. was made viscount Rochford in 1525, and afterwards earl of Wiltshire and Ormond f. Anne his daughter being but feven years old, was carried into France in 1514, when Mary the king's fifter went and confummated her marriage at Abbeville, with Lewis XII. That queen being re-married fhortly after to the duke of Suffolk, and returning into England, Anne Bullen was left in France. It is pretended, the then entered into the fervice of Francis I's queen, though the was but eight years of age, but it is not faid in what quality. It is certain, a girl of her age was not capable of doing much. fervice.' So, it may be prefumed her beauty, gentcelnefs, or the livelinefs of her wit, made queen Claude defirous to keep her about her. Camden affirms, the retained her in her fervice to the day of her death, which happened in July. 1524, and fays not that Anne ever took a journey into England all that time. But du Tillet, and du Pleix, French authors, pretend, the came over in 1522. The lord Herbert fays the fame thing, but, without citing any particular author, contents himfelf with faying, it appears in hiftory, Camden affirms, Anne remained in France, not only till queen Claude's death, but that, after fhe had loft her mistrefs, fhe was taken into fervice by the duchefs of Alençon, Francis's fifter. However, he does not fay when the quitted it. Others affirm, fir Thomas Bullen brought his daughter to England when he returned from his embaffy. His embaffy of 1515, cannot here be meant, fince it is unanimoully agreed, that Anne was in queen Claude's fervice after queen Mary's departure, and continued feveral years in the court of d Her true name was Anne Boleyn, as it is always written in the publick acts. The English write Bolen, or Bullen, and the French Boulen. Rapin. c Elizabeth Howard.

> f His mother was Margaret, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Thomas Boteler, earl of Wiltshire and Ormond,

His father was fir William, and his. grandfather fir Geoffrey Boleyn, or Bulleyn, lord mayor of London, in 1458, who married Anne, eldeft daughter and co-heir of Thomas, lord Hoo and Haftings. Dugdale's Baron. vol. II. p. 306. Camden.

An account of Anne Bullen. Introd. to Ann. of Eliz. Burnet. Ref. T. I. P. 43. Herbert.

> Uncertainty about Anne Bullen's return to England. Burnet.

> > Ser 19

Ser Congli

-

WHICH H

France.

OF ENGLAND.

France. It must therefore be his embassy of 1527. But it 1527. is likely, Bullen was not fent to France till September 1527, fince his fole commission was to fee the treaty of the 30th of April of the fame year fworn to, which Francis had not ratified fooner than the 18th of August, as appears in the col- A&. Pub. lection of the publick acts z. But as before his departure, XVI.p.218. the affair of the divorce was already commenced, it may be affirmed, the king's love for his daughter was later than his refolution concerning the divorce, if it be true that Anne returned to England with her father, about the end of the year 1527. Indeed it may be objected, that two French authors affert, that Anne went over to England in 1522, 'and that it was then the king fell in love with her.' But it may be replied first, that it is very strange, these two historians, who wrote long after the fact, should meet with memoirs of the journey of a maid of honour, and the more as they cite nothing to fupport their teftimony. Secondly, fuppofing it were fo, they do not fay Anne stayed in England. Confequently they deftroy not Camden's testimony, who affirms, Anne ferved queen Claude till 1524, and afterwards the duchefs of Alencon. But if it be true, that Anne took a journey into England in 1522, and the king then fell in love with her, it cannot be fuppofed fhe returned to France, becaufe the rupture between the two crowns happening that year, it is not likely that in time of war, an English woman fhould go and ferve a queen of France. Befides, if the king was then in love, would he have fuffered Anne to depart the kingdom? Camden therefore, or the 'two French authors must have been mistaken, This is a difficulty not to be eafily folved.

But there is a fact which passes for certain, namely, that Camden. Anne Bullen being twenty years old, was taken into queen Burnet. Catherine's fervice as maid of honour. Now this must have been in 1527, fince the was born in 1507. Accordingly, this is the time to which the beginning of the king's love may most properly be fixed. But still this is only a conjecture, which, were it well grounded, would be a fufficient proof that the king's divorce was not an effect of his paffion, fince it was refolved before the end of the year 1526. My aim in this inquiry is to fhow, that the time of Anne Bullen's return into England is very uncertain, and the beginning of the king's affection no lefs fo. How then can it be fo boldly affirmed,

2 Sir Thomas Bulleyn was accompanied to Paris by fir Anthony Brown. Hall, fol. 157.

283

1527. firmed, as it is by fome, that love for Anne Bullen infpired the king with the thoughts of annulling his marriage with Catherine ? we must fee now whether it be easier to discover the time when Henry refolved to fue for his divorce.

When Henry VII. concluded his fon's marriage with Catherine, prince Arthur's widow, archbishop Warham told him plainly, it was contrary to the law of God, which the pope could not difpenfe with. The king without doubt was touched with this remonstrance. The very day the prince his fon entered into his fourteenth year, he caufed him to make against his marriage, a fecret protestation, though before trufty witneffes, declaring, he was conftrained to give his confent. After that, the king on his death bed ftrictly charged the prince not to confummate his marriage with Catherine. Notwithstanding all this, Henry VIII. being come to the crown, espouled the princess contrary to Warham's opinion, to which he preferred that of the bifhop of Winchefter. He had by her three children h, two fons and a daughter, of whom the fons died foon after their birth. He afterwards affirmed, that he confidered the untimely death of his two fons, as God's curfe on his marriage, efpecially, when he faw the queen had done breeding. It happened afterwards that Charles V. who was affianced to the princels Mary, refuled to marry her, upon the council of Spain's questioning the princess's legitimacy. After that, when a marriage was treating between Mary and king Francis, or the duke of Orleans, the bifhop of Tarbe the French ambaflador, made the fame objection, maintaining, that the princefs could not be deemed born in wedlock, notwithftanding Julius II's difpensation.

All these things were more than sufficient to raise foruples in the king's mind concerning his marriage. But though in an affembly of lords which he afterwards called, to inform them of his reasons for a divorce, he affirmed, the bishop of Tarbe's objection inspired him with the first thoughts of inquiring into the matter, it appears however, that his foruples began sooner. For in a letter ¹ afterwards to Grynæus, he told him, he had abstained from the queen ever fince the year 1524.

But fuppoling it could be difcovered at what time Henry begun, either by himfelf, or by the fuggestion of others, to be troubled with these foruples, it would fignify nothing with respect

A She had belides, feveral mifcarriages. Burnet, tom. I. p. 36. p. 38.

At what time Henry refolved to fue for his divorce. Burnet. Ref. T. I. p. 36. Speed. p. 762.

Hall. fol. 155. Burnet.

respect to his resolution concerning the divorce, which in all 1527. appearance was taken much later. Polydore Virgil fays, Longland, bishop of Lincoln, the king's confession, laboured to perfuade him of the necessity of the divorce by cardinal Wolfey's order, but mentions not the time. All the hifto-Burnet. rians affirm, the king had recourfe himfelf to Thomas Aquinas's works to clear his doubts, and caufed the bifhops to be confulted upon that subject. But none of them fay at what time this was done. It is well known fecretary Knight was Burnet. dispatched to Rome about this affair in July 1527, but then Herbert. the rumour of the king's meditating a divorce had already reached the court of Spain, as appears in the cardinal's letter to the king from Abbeville *. It is also very probable, that before he engaged in this affair, Henry had confidered of it some time before. It is scarce to be supposed a resolution of this nature can be taken lightly, or when taken, immediately executed, without thoroughly weighing the difficulties, or waiting a favourable juncture. Henry faid himfelf that the bifhop of Tarbe raifed in him the thought of annulling his marriage. But if it be true, as some affirm, that the bishop spoke only as directed by cardinal Wolfey, it may be prefumed, the project of the divorce was formed fome time before, and this ambaffador made to fpeak only to have an excuse to commence the affair. This is what feems to me extremely probable. Indeed it is not likely the ambaffador, after thus queftioning Mary's legitimacy, would have concluded the marriage of the king his mafter, or of the duke of Orleans, with that princefs, had he not acted in concert with the court of England. These then are my thoughts, which I fubmit to the reader's judgment.

Ever fince Francis was freed from his captivity, he had Conjecture never ceafed to prefs Henry to join with him in an offenfive fubject. league against the emperor. But Henry had constantly excufed himfelf, without even fuffering him to entertain the least hopes in that respect. However, lord Herbert fays, that about the end of the year 1526, Henry of his own accord fent an ambaffador to France to propose the league, fo eagerly defired by Francis, and to offer him his daughter Mary in marriage. This proceeding gives occasion to believe, he had now refolved upon the divorce, and forefeeing how much the emperor would oppose it, intended fo to embarrass him as to oblige him to court his friendship. Upon this fupposition it may naturally be conjectured, that he pro-, k Dated August 1, 1527. See Herbert, p. 84.

poled

. 5

pofed the marriage of his daughter with the king of France. only to convince the emperor, that he really defigned to be ftrictly united with France. But at the fame time it is very likely, he informed Francis of the obftacle which would occur in the execution of this pretended project, namely, the divorce of the princefs's mother, which he was meditating. This conjecture is confirmed by the coldness wherewith these two monarchs treated of the marriage. In the first place, Henry left it to the king of France's choice, to have Mary himfelf, or to leave her to his fecond fon, as if this alternative were the fame thing. In the next place, when Francis declared he would leave Mary to the duke of Orleans, the treating more fully concerning the marriage was deferred to another time. In the third place, in the treaty Francis and the cardinal concluded at Abbeville, they took care to infert this claufe: " that though the marriage fhould " not be effected, the treaty however fhould subsifit." In fine, though Knight was at Rome, or on his way thither, when the treaty of Abbeville was concluded, it does not appear Francis ever complained to Henry, that he had offered him a princess whom he was labouring to bastardize by profecuting his divorce with the queen her mother. On the contrary, he affifted him to the utmost of his power to obtain his defires. But he must have looked upon the offer as an affront, had they not underftood one another. If this conjecture has any foundation, it may be inferred, that the refolution concerning the divorce was taken at least about the end of the year 1526, though the execution was deferred till the middle of the next year. But in that cafe, it would therefore be true, that the king had refolved upon the divorce before his paffion for Anne Bullen, who, in all appearance, returned not into England fooner than October 1527.

From what has been faid it may be gathered, that to affirm with any probability, that Henry's paffion for Anne Bullen was the caufe of his divorce with Catherine, thefe queries muft be decided in favour of that opinion. At what time did Anne Bullen return into England ? when did the king's love for her firft begin ? when was it that he came to a refolution concerning his divorce ? but upon all thefe queftions, conjectures only, as I have obferved, can properly be formed. Thus much is certain, that between the refolution about the divorce, and the beginning of the king's love, there was no great diffance of time. Here we muft ftop. But it is going too far, to ground upon this nearnefs, as a certain fact, that Henry Henry undertook the profecution of his divorce with Catherine, on purpole to marry Anne Bullen. I fay, moreover, that though there was no difficulty about the times, and they exactly corresponded, yet as to what passed in the king's breaft, it would be only conjecture.

I have enlarged a little on this point, becaufe the illustrious author of the hiftory of the reformation feems to leave it in the dark. Besides, I thought it requisite to curb the over confident, by informing the readers of what is true, and what doubtful in the matter. We fee it in many hiftories, and hear it every day politively affirmed, as if there was no difficulty, that Henry's love for Anne Bullen was the fole caufe of his divorce with Catherine of Arragon, though, as I have shewn, it can only be faid by conjecture, and the conjecture itfelf does not countenance that notion. Not that Henry VIII. is to be confidered as a prince incapable of being mifled by his paffion, even to the facrificing Catherine of Arragon to Anne Bullen. Why fhould he have been more fcrupulous with refpect to Catherine, than he was with regard to Anne herfelf, whom he made no difficulty to facrifice to a third wife, as will hereafter be feen. He was a prince of an impetuous temper, who could bear no opposition to his will. The flatteries of his fubjects, and the extravagant praifes continually beftowed on him by the fovereigns who ftood in need of him, had pollefied him with fuch a conceit of his own merit, that he imagined his actions ought to have been the standard of good sense, reason, and justice. When therefore it is faid, his love for Anne Bullen caufed him eagerly to push the affair of his divorce, of which otherwife the difficulties would perhaps have difcouraged him, nothing is affirmed repugnant to his character. Only care must be taken, not to affert for an undoubted truth, what is but a bare conjecture.

However this be, without dwelling longer upon the king's Motives of fecret motives, and endeavouring to difcover his thoughts, the divorce alledged by which lie hid from human eyes, let us content ourfelves Henry, with what he published himself. In the first place, he faid, Burnet. he was troubled in confcience for his marriage with Catherine, and indeed he had but too much reason. The wonder is, that he had not these scruples more early. He had married his brother's widow, and found it forbidden by the law of Moles. It is true, he had the pope's dispensation. But he could not be ignorant that many learned divines were of opinion, that the pope could not difpenfe with the laws of God. This was fufficient to give him very just fcruples. As foon 287 1527.

1 ----- V.

He labours to inform himfelf about his doubts. Burnet.

to cherifh his fcruples. Pol. Virg. Burnet. Hall. Stow.

marriage rine. Cavendish. Burnet.

The people are of the fame mind. Herbert.

Reafons of ed by the king. Burnet.

foon as these doubts had poffelled him, he was willing to clear them, and found in Thomas Aquinas what he had perhaps inattentively read many times: first, that the levitical laws are moral and eternal : fecondly, that the pope cannot difpenfe with the laws of God, becaufe to difpenfe with a law, one must be superior [or equal] to the law-giver. This decifion of a divine, for whom he had a great efteem, confirming his fcruples, he defired archbishop Warham, who had formerly declared against the marriage, to confult the bi-Wolfeyhelps fhops of England upon the occasion. Some affirm, that Longland his confessor cherished his doubts, by the private orders of cardinal Wolfey, which is not improbable. The queen was aunt of the emperor, with whom Wolfey had reafon to be difpleafed. Befides, the favourite loved not the queen herfelf, becaufe fhe could not help fhewing how much the was offended, that a bishop, a cardinal, a legate of the The bishops holy fee, should lead to scandalous a life. However this be, condemn his foon after the archbishop presented to the king a writing, unwith Cathe- der the hands and feals of all the bishops, wherein they condemned his marriage as contrary to common decency, and the law of God. Only Fifher, bifhop of Rochefter, refufing to fet his hand, it is faid the archbishop made another write his name unknown to him 1. But the bifhops were not the only perfons of this opinion. Since Luther's works began to appear, many people in England were put out of their former high conceit of the papal power. As therefore the validity of the king's marriage was wholly founded on Julius Il's difpenfation, it was publickly difputed whether the difpenfation could authorize a marriage fo notorioufly repugnant to the law of God: nay, many who were otherwife ftrongly attached to the court of Rome, could not relifh the doctrine of the pope's difpenfing with the divine laws. All thefe things confpired either to breed or confirm the king's fcruples.

But it was not only fcruples of confcience that Henry alfate alledg- ledged to juffify his defign. He pretended, that though he were regardless of his falvation, or able to overcome his fcruples, the good of his people required the prevention of an inconvenience which was eafily to be foreseen. He had but one daughter, and very likely fhould have no more children, if his marriage were not annulled. If therefore, after his decease, the validity of his marriage with Catherine should come come to be questioned, he forefaw England would again be 1527. involved, on account of the fucceffion, in troubles from L whence it was but just freed. Mary his daughter, the king of Scotland his nephew, the queen dowager of France, could equally pretend to the crown upon very plaufible reafons. Mary could alledge the pope's difpensation against such as should charge her with her being born of an unlawful marriage. The king of Scotland, who was next heir after her; could maintain, the dispensation was not valid. The queen dowager the king's fifter could alledge, that the first was illegitimate, and the fecond, a foreigner. These feveral claims might eafily kindle a civil war in England, where it was but too visible that each would find adherents, not to mention the foreign fuccours they might be fupported with. Henry therefore imagined there was but one way to prevent this danger, namely, by annulling his marriage and taking another wife, by whom with God's bleffing he might have fons. He to whom the fecrets of all hearts are open, can only know for certain, whether this thought was inftilled into him by the danger he forefaw, by his averfion to the queen, or by his love for Anne Bullen. But however this may be, independently of the feveral motives afcribed to him, it is certain, there was great danger of the kingdom's being one day exposed to a civil war, if the king remained till death in his prefent state, and he faw no other way to come out of it than by annulling his marriage. It is true, he forefaw Reafons rut-great opposition from the emperor the queen's nephew, who hopes of was then very powerful. But on the other hand, as that fucceedings monarch had himfelf fhown on this occasion fcruples, which Burnet; hindered him from espouling Mary, Henry hoped, he would not obstinately maintain what he had himself questioned. Besides, the juncture seemed very favourable for his purpose. The pope, who was prifoner in the caftle of St. Angelo, feemed to have no other refource to be reftored to his former ftate, than the affiftance of France and England, and Henry did not queftion that Francis, who flood in need of him, would promote his proceedings to the utmoft of his power. As to the reft, he never doubted the pope's authority, reckoning that Clement VII. could revoke a dispensation granted by Julius II. Nay, cardinal Wolfey warranted the fuccels of the affair, whether he had already gained the pope, or imagined that Clement in his prefent circumstances could deny the king nothing. So, it was refolved the fuit fhould be moved in the court of Rome, to caufe the marriage to be annulled. T

> Tunstal, Fisher, and the bishops of I This particular is not very certain. See Burnet's Ref. tom. III. p. 38. Carlifle, Ely, St. Afaph, Lincoln, and It was figned on July 1, by Warham, Bath.

VOL. VI.

The

THE HISTORY The best reason that could be alledged was, That Julius's 1527. difpensation was contrary to the divine law, and that alone S Reafons to be laid before the pope. Burnet. Mullities in Julius's bull.

290

ought to have been fufficient. But it would have been imprudent to begin with difputing the prerogative of the Roman pontiffs, when a favour was to be afked of the court of Rome. Recourse therefore was to be had to another expedient, which was to find nullities in Julius's bull, and to fnew it was procured by falfe furmifes and untrue fuggeftions, which rendered the bull revocable even according to the rules of the court of the Rota^m. And this was not very difficult. The bull was grounded upon Henry's and Catharine's request, fetting forth that their marriage was neceffary to preferve peace between England and Spain. And here were found two reafons for revoking the bull. The first, that Henry being then but twelve years old could not be deemed to have any political views, whence it was inferred that the requeft was not his own. The fecond, that the fuggestion was faile, fince as matters then flood between Spain and England, the marriage was not at all neceffary for the prefervation of peace between the two crowns, and confequently Julius II. had been furprized. Another nullity was found, As the bull having no other foundation than the maintenance of peace and union between Henry VII and the king and queen of Spain, this reafon ceafed when the marriage was confummated, fince Henry VII. and Ifabella were now dead. In fine, it was alledged, that Henry VIII. having protefted against his marriage before confummation, thereby renounced the liberty granted him by the bull, and therefore another bull was neceffary to render the marriage valid. But all these reasons were produced only to afford the pope a pretence to revoke Julius's difpenfation. For, if the repugnancy of the difpenfation to the divine law was not the real foundation of fuing for the divorce, nothing would have been more eafy for the pope, than to quiet the king's confcience, by confirming whatever had been done by a new bull.

Knight is fent to Rome about the divorce. Herbert. Burnet.

Mean while, as the pope's compliance was not doubted in his prefent circumflances, the king fent doctor Knight fecretary of flate to Rome, to defire him to fign four inftruments drawn in England. The first was a commission to cardinal Wolfey, to try and decide the affair with fome Englifh bifnops. The fecond was a bull decretal, declaring the king's marriage with Catherine void, becaufe Arthur's with " It is a maxim in law, that if the and untrue furmifes, they may be anpope be furprifed in any thing, and nulled afterwards. Burnet, tom I. balls be procured upon false foggeftions p. 40.

the

the fame princefs was confummated. By the third, the pope 1527! granted the king a dispensation to marry another wife. By the fourth, he promifed never to repeal any of the three foregoing acts.

Knight departed from England in July, about the time the He fends a cardinal began his journey to confer with the king of France n, memorial to But as the pope was prifoner, and guarded by a Spanish cap-Barnet. tain, it was impossible for Knight to have an audience. He Herbert, found means however to convey to him a memorial °, containing the fum of his commiffion, to which the pope returned a favourable answer. He made believe he would grant whatever the king defired, though the emperor had already required him by the general of the Franciscans, not to do any thing in that affair, without communicating it to his mi-nifters. By the way, this flows, Henry had refolved long before to fue for his divorce, fince the emperor had time to hear of it and fend to the pope. As it was not practicable for Knight to treat with the pope in perfon, the matter was carried no farther at that time. At length, the news of the Wolfey's pope's going to be releafed reaching England, cardinal Wol-letter to fey writ to fir Gregory Caffali P the king's ordinary ambaffa-Burnet. dor at Rome, to order him to join with Knight and prefs the pope to grant the king's request. This letter was worded in very ftrong terms, and showed the cardinal's defire that the divorce should be effected. It was dated the 5th of December 1527, the cardinal not yet knowing that the pope had made his escape the 9th of the fame month 9.

Clement VII. being retired to Orvieto, Knight went r and Knight and talked with him about the affair. The pope owned he had Caffali talk with the received his memorial, and promifed again to do all that lay pope; in his power for the king's fatisfaction, but prayed him not to Burnet. be too hafty. His circumstances then were fuch, that he did who tries to not yet know, whether he should want the king of England, gain time. or whether the emperor would agree with him. Wherefore he defired to gain time, in order to proceed as fhould beft fuit with his interest. But for that reason, and because the king's orders were urgent and politive, Knight would not delay his negotiation. He earnestly pressed the pope, who pron Knight had orders to advife with net, tom. I. p. 45. the cardinal by the way. Herbert, p.

three brothers, were entertained by the B. II. vol. I. king as his agents in Italy, both at Rome, Venice, and other places. Bur- net, tom. I. p. 47.

9 The letter is dated the 5th of De-93. • By corrupting fome of his guards. fays by miftake; the original is yet in the Cotton Libr. Vitel. B. cember, and not the 25th, as Rapin Burnet, tom. I. p. 47. p The family of the Cassali being IX. See Burnet's Collection, N. 3de

r About the end of December. Bur-

T 2

miled

mifed at last to fign the instrument, on condition no use 1527. should be made of them, till the Germans and Spaniards were S He promifes departed out of Italy. Knight willingly accepted of the conto do what dition, imagining, when the inftruments ready figned were in the king dethe king's hands, he would use them when he pleased. But fires. the pope was not eafily to be deceived. Whilft he feigned to have no other view than to fatisfy the king, he was only contriving to gain time, being ready to facrifice him if he found it for his advantage. He used therefore all his art to prolong the affair by means unfuspected by the king. To that end, he told Knight that before the inftruments were executed, he should be glad to talk with the cardinal Sanctorum quatuor.

But he finds The pope having thus engaged himfelf, Knight and Cafmeans to de- fali fancied they had no more to do than to prepose in the lay the performance of king's favour the cardinal, whom the pope intended to conhis promifes. fult. They were at no great pains to fucceed, fince, befides Herbert. ten thousand ducats which they had in hand to reward fuch Burnet. as fhould do them fervice, they were empowered to make what farther promifes, they fhould think fit in the king's name. The cardinal examining the inftruments fent from England, found very great faults particularly in the legate's commiffion, and took upon him to draw one more perfect. Which done, Knight and Caffali waited on the pope and preffed him to fign. He did not absolutely refuse, but faid, The emperor having required him not to act in that bufinefs without imparting it to him, it was necessary to find fome expedient to excufe fo hafty a proceeding : That therefore it would be proper to caufe Lautrec to march towards Orvieto, and prefs him in his mafter's name to give the king of England fatisfaction. Lautree being then at Bologna, to get him to march to Orvieto, there would have been occasion for orders from the court of France, which would have taken up much time. Wherefore Henry's agents rejected the expedient, their aim being to finish the affair before the emperor By net, p.48 had notice thereof. At laft the pope, finding himfelf extremely preffed, delivered to them the commission for cardinal Wolfey with the bull of difpensation for the king , and promifed to fend into England the bull decretal to null the marriage t. But here the pope used an artifice, which the t The cardinal Sanctorum quatuor got of the English ambaffadors four thousand crowns for a reward for his good fervice. Ibid.

> ⁸ But he begged with many fighs and tears, that the king would not precipitate things, or expose him to be undone, by beginning any process upon the bull. Burnet, tom. I. p. 43.

agents

agents perhaps did not fufficiently confider. He dated thefe 1527two inftruments from the time he was prifoner in the caffle of St. Angelo. So, when the king had them in his power, The pope's he did not think fit to make use of them, left it should be artifice to objected that the pope had granted them only with defign to Burnet. obtain his liberty by the affistance he expected from England. Befides, all acts executed by a prifoner may be deemed void, whereof the treaty of Madrid was a late instance. Thus, how urgent soever the king was to end the affair, he found at the close of the year 1527, that he had yet made no progrefs.

Clement VII. had time during his captivity ferioufly to re- 15:8. flect upon his paft conduct, which had been very unfucceffful, because he had swerved from the maxims of his most The pope able predecessors. He had preposterously engaged in a war refolves to keep fair with the emperor, whereas Alexander VI. Julius II. and with the Leo X. after fowing diffention among the princes, left emperor. them for the most part to decide their quarrels, and then fided with the ftrongest, or if they engaged in a war, it was commonly at other people's expence. But Clement VII. after draining his treasure in maintaining an army, had loft Florence, Parma, Reggio, Rome itfelf, with the best part of the ecclesiastical state, and seen himself captive and ranfomed. This was fufficient to make him wifer and take another courfe. As foon as the ambaffadors of France, Guicciard, England, and Venice, faw him fecure at Orvieto from the outrages of the imperialist, they prefied him to declare against the emperor. They thought if he could not affiss the league with temporal arms, he might at least by means of his fpiritual embroil the common enemy, whom he feemed to have no reafon to regard. But he himfelf confidered the affair in a different light. Having learned by fad experience, that he had been the dupe of his allies, he refolved to be no longer guided by their interested counsels. So, without dif- He refuses to covering his thoughts, he only told them, that his joining in join in the the league would only draw upon him fresh mischiefs, without procuring them any advantage: that befides, it was neceffary for the benefit of Christendom, there should be a mediator for procuring peace, and that was all he could do in the flate he was reduced to. Neverthelefs, he intimated to them that he might take other measures, if Lautrec approached to oblige the emperor's troops to abandon Rome. This indeed was his fole aim, to free the ecclefiaftical flate from that foreign army, in order to be able to act more agreeably. to his interest.

T 3

At

Lautred marches towards . Naples: Guicclard." Hall. Reafonswhy the pope would not act again ?

At laft, Lautrec departing from Bologna the oth of January, took the road to Naples, having first fent the prince of Vaudemont and la Trimouille to the pope to prefs him to declare. But Clement found means to excufe himfelf without however a politive denial. He faw, as I may fay, all Europe in motion, and was willing to wait the fuccess of the war, in order to take juster measures than before. So, it was not poffible by any means to bring him to a declaration. He only made believe, that if Francis and Henry would caufe the emperor. Ravenna and Cervia to be reftored to him, he would join with them. 'This was an advantage he would willingly have reaped from their inflances, without being debarred from finding fome other evalion, to prevent his declaring after the recovery of these two places. Mean while, he was thinking how to treat fecretly with the emperor, from whom he had greater expectations than from his allies. Indeed, his chief aim being to reftore the house of the Medici to the government of Florence, he perceived that he could not accomplish it without the emperor's help, fince the allies were concerned to fupport the Florentines, who were become parties in the league. But it would have been imprudent in him to declare for the emperor, when that monarch was weak in Italy, and fo powerful an army was marching to invade the kingdom of Naples. It was therefore necessary for him to wait, till the event of the war enabled him to refolve with fafety. This was the true reafon which obliged him to use many artifices, to try to difpleale neither the emperor, nor the king of France, nor the king of England. If, inftead of unadviledly engaging in a war, he had before taken this courfe, he might have fold his favours at any rate. At leaft, he would not have had the mortification to be a captive in Rome itfelf.

Francis and Henry procl..im war against the emperer. Hall. Guicciard. Hollingfh. Herbert. P. Daniel.

The emperor anfwers. Hollingfh.

But though the pope refufed to declare, the kings of France and England were not the lefs eager in the purfuit of their projects. On the 21st of January 1528, their ambaffadors in Spain demanded the emperor's leave to retire, and the next day Clarenceux and Guienne, heralds, one of England, the other of France, proclaimed war against him. This was done with great folemnity, the emperor being feated on his throne, and attended by all his grandees. He answered each in particular, but in a very different manner. Speaking to the English herald, he made use of civil and honourable terms, denoting, he was not at all pleafed with having the king his mafter for an enemy. He complained however that Henry had used him ill, in defigning to give him in marriage a princels whem he propoled to ballardile. fince 1 .

294 1528

fince he was fuing to be divorced from the queen her mo- 1528. ther. But he threw all the blame on the boundlefs ambition of cardinal Wolfey. He faid, the cardinal would have ob-P. Daniel. liged him to employ his arms in Italy to make him pope, Hall, and thought himfelf injured, because he would not diffurb the peace of Christendom for his fake. As for the fums, of which Henry demanded payment, he denied, he had ever refused to discharge the debt. But added, that the English ambaffadors not having brought with them the original obligations, nor even a power to give him a discharge, Henry was in the wrong to complain. As to the indemnity he demanded, he knew the king of France had taken it upon him in the treaty of Madrid. As for the penalty of five hundred thousand crowns, in case he refused to marry the princess Mary, he replied, it was not his fault : that he had demanded her of the king her father by ambaffadors fent on purpofe, and that Henry had refused to fend her: that besides, before that time Henry had offered her to the king of Scotland: in thort, that he could not lawfully claim that fum, before he had proved that he had himfelf performed all the articles of the treaty of Windfor. Such was the emperor's answer to the declaration of war made by Henry's herald. In his anfwer to the French herald, he fpoke not with fo much regard and caution. He plainly accused Francis of breach of faith, Hollingfh, and charged the herald to put him in mind of the meffage he Herbert. fent him by the archbishop of Bourdeaux his ambassador, " That it would be better for them to decide their guarrel " by fingle combat," but that he had not received any answer. Probably, the ambassador had not thought fit to deliver that meffage to the king, fince he feemed extremely furprised when he heard it from the herald's mouth. In a few P. Daniel. days, he fent the fame herald to the emperor, with a chal-Herbert. lenge under his own hand, wherein he gave him the lie in Hollingth. form, and required him to affure him the field to fight hand to hand. The challenge was dated March 28, 1528. The emperor fent his answer by one of his heralds, who was charged to tell him by word of mouth very difagreeable things. The herald coming, to Paris could not obtain leave Herbert. without great difficulty, to put on " his coat of arms when he entered the city. The king expected him on his throne, furrounded with a great number of princes and lords. But he had fcarce begun to fpeak, before the king interrupted

" Or rather to wear it. He put it on as foon as he came into the French territories. Herbert, F. 94. 295 him, and demanded whether he had brought the fecurity of the field, and that all the reft was to no purpole. Thus ended the affair, which had now made great noife. The two monarchs gave publick marks of their courage by their mutual challenges, and yet there was no great labour required to prevent them from deciding their quarrel in a way fo uncommon to great princes.

296 1528. S

Bold act of Wolfey, which drew on him the king's anger. Herbert. Hall.

Hugo de Mendola the emperor's ambassador at London, hearing what had paffed in Spain, would have rerired. But cardinal Wolfey " fent him word that Clarenceux had exceeded his inftructions in proclaiming war againft the emperor, and should be punished at his return. Whereupon the ambaffador fent an express to inform the emperor of what the cardinal had faid. Clarenceux, who was still in Spain, furprifed that he fhould be made accountable for what he had express orders, demanded and obtained an authentick copy of the amballador's letter x. Upon his arrival in England, he waited on the king y, before he fpoke with the cardinal, and flowed him the letter, with three others, writ with the cardinal's own hand, whereby he gave him express orders to declare war against the emperor. Henry, aftonished at his minister's pretumption, fell into a great passion with him before the whole court. Nay, he would perhaps have entirely difgraced him, had he not been with-held by the confideration of the affair of the divorce, wherein he could not proceed without him. He made him however undergo a terrible mortification, by caufing the affair to be examined in the council. This inquiry would doubtlefs have been fatal to the minister, if the king had been pleased to pursue it, but . he was contented with the cardinal's protestation, that he thought to have acted agreeably to his majefly's intentions.

The cardinal great men, and tries to justify the Hall.

The emperor's answer to Clarenceux being made publick affemblesthein England, by the Spanish ambassador's means, the cardinal was afraid it would caufe ill effects among the people, confidering the weakness of the motives alledged by the war against king for undertaking the war. For that reason he assembled the emperor. in the Star Chamber z all the great lords then at court a, to whom he made a speech, aggravating as much as possible the injuries, the king had received from the emperor, > w Ordered him to be taken into cuftody, &c. Hall, fol. 171.

× As the courier went through Bayonne, the letter was opened, and copied by the governout of that place, who shewed it to Clarenceux. Hall, fol. 173. Herbert, p. 90.

y At Hampton Court. Ibid. 2 February 13. Hall, fol. 171.

a All juffices of the peace and other honest personages. Ibid.

and

OF ENGLAND.

and his reasons to demand satisfaction by arms. But let 1528. him fay what he would, though every one outwardly applauded him, what the emperor faid to the herald, that the war was caufed only by the cardinal's private difcontent, made deeper impression than all the arguments the minister could alledge b. The people openly exclaimed against a The people war which was going to ruin the kingdom, to gratify the mormur. favourite's paffion. Nay, fome went farther than murmurs. Hall. As the trade with the Low Countries was interrupted by Mutiny of the declaration of war, and the merchants would buy no the dothiers. Hall. more cloth which they could not vend, the clothiers role in The cardinal arms c. Whereupon the cardinal ordered the merchants to threatens buy the cloths as ufual, threatening in cafe of refulal to buy themin vain. them himfelf, and fell them to the foreigners. But they made a jeft of this threat, and continued obstinate, refolving not to render themselves liable to inevitable loss for his fake. An embaffy from the governess of the Low Coun-Embaffy tries d to the king whilft these things were in agitation, from the freed the cardinal from his embarassiment. The ambassia- Low Coundors acquainting him, that if the king pleafed to confent to Hall. a truce with the Low Countries, for the mutual benefit of Herbert. trade, the governess would readily agree to it; this overture Truce be-being debated in council, it was resolved, notwithstanding land and the French ambassador's opposition, to agree to a truce for Flanders. eight months, which was figned the 8th of June.

Whilft thefe things paffed in England, the affairs of Italy Hall. were in fuch a fituation as gave Francis room to expect Hollingfh. Lautrec's expedition in the kingdom of Naples would be Iffue of the crowned with fuccefs, though afterwards it ended very un-Naples. fortunately for him. Lautrec going from Bologna the 9th Guicciard. of January, arrived the 10th of February on the borders of Naples, and marching into Abruzzo, became mafter of that province, and afterwards of part of Aulia. It was not without extreme difficulty, that the prince of Orange' obliged the imperialists to quit Rome, where for ten months they had exercifed all forts of rapine and violence. Though

b Hall fays, that after the concluknocked one another on the elbow, and faid foftly He lieth ; others faid that evil will never faid well; others faid, that the French crowns made him fpeak evil of the emperor; but they that knew all faid, it was a fhame to lie in fuch an audience. The common people were very forry that a war fhould happen with the emperor, because out fion of his speech, some of the hearers of his dominions they had lately been fupplied with corn, when it was fo dear in England, that it was fold for twenty fix shillings and eight pence a quarter. Hall, fol. 166, 172.

c Efpecially in Suffolk. Hall, fol. 173. On May 29. Hall, fol. 174.

Act. Pub.

2528. the imperial army went not from Rome till the 17th of February, they got before Lautrec, who had taken a longer

Naples. Guicciard.

way in order to procure money, which he wanted exceedingly, the king of France, according to cuftom, not having Lautree be- fent him what he had promised. The imperialists being posted at Troya, he offered them battle, but as they thought proper to retire to Naples, purfued his march, and arrived in the beginning of May before that capital, which he befieged in form according to his orders. Sixteen French gallies commanded by Andrea Doria, eight more under the conduct of Philippino Doria his nephew, with twenty two from Venice, were to block up Naples by fea, whilft Lautree with thirty thousand men invested the city by land. But when he opened the fiege he had only Philippino's eight callies. Those of Venice came very late, and Andrea Doria, who was difpleafed with the king of France, and had thoughts of entering into the emperor's fervice, detained the fixteen gallies at Genoa, under divers pretences. Mean while, a lea fight between Philippino and the imperialist, wherein Moncada was flain, and the Marquis del Vafto taken prifoner, made Lautree hope he should reduce Naples by famine, though himfelf wanted all things in his camp. His hopes were encreased by the arrival of the two and twenty The plaque Venetian gallies, which joined those of Philippino. The In the Fiench buliness now was to fee who could bear famine longest, the befiegers or the befieged, who were equally in want of provisions. But the French had, belides fcarcity, a very great difadvantage, as the plague made terrible ravage among them, and continually diminished their number. At length, Andrea Doria having agreed with the emperor, recalled his nephew Philippino with his eight gallies. Shortly after, the Venetian gallies being obliged to go upon the coaft of Colabria to provide themfelves with bifkets, the befieged took that opportunity to convey into the city abundance of provisions, whilft Lautrec remained in a very bad condition, without victuals or money, and with an army grievoully af-, flicted with the plague. Most of his general officers were dead or fick, and to compleat the misfortune, he was himfelf feized with the pestilence, which carried him off the 16th. of August . The marquis of Saluzzo, who took upon him the command of the ruined army, refolving at last to raife the e Of the plague died alfo fir Robert Francis, who had the command of two Jerningham, gentleman of the bed- hundred horfe in the army, paid by chamber both to king Henry and our king. John Carew, his lieutenant, had amy. Guicciard.

5 .1

Lautrec's denth. Guicciard,

The fiege sailed and army difperfed.

the fiege, with great difficulty retired to Avería, where he 1528. was immediately belieged, and in few days, forced to capitulate, furrendering himfelf with all the principal officers of his army, into the hands of the imperialists. Thus, the fine army Lautrec had led before Naples, was entirely difperfed. Moreover, France had lately loft Genoa, taken by Doriare-Andrea Doria, in the emperor's name, after which, pur-flores Genoa fuant to his agreement with that monarch, he reftored his Hift.de Gene country to liberty, and established a government which still fubfilts to this day. Thus the affairs of Italy, which in the beginning of the year had so promifing an aspect for Francis, were fo entirely altered, that he had fcarce any thing left in that country.

The knowledge of what paffed in Italy this campaign, Continuawill be of no little fervice to difcover the motives of the divorce. pope's conduct in the affair of the divorce. Henry deem-Burnet. ed the affair ended, when he heard the pope had left it to cardinal Wolfey's decifion. But when, after many difficulties, he had obtained the commission for the cardinal, . with a bull decretal, declaring the marriage void, and a difpenfation to marry again, he found however there was yet nothing done. The commission was dated from the castle The pope's of St. Angelo, whilst the pope was a prisoner, which ren-amuse the dered it entirely null, and confequently there was a necef-king. fity of renewing it. The decretal had no claufe to hinder the pope from revoking it if he pleafed. In fine, the difpenfation was only conditional, in cafe the king's marriage with Catherine should be declared void. Besides, there were certain refirictions inferted, leaving the pope at liberty to repeal it. For instance, he granted the dispensation, " as Herbert, un-" far as might be without offending God. Notwithstand- der the year " ing any prohibitions of the divine law, or other conflitu- 1529. " tions and ordinances whatever to the contrary, as far " as the authority apoftolical reached f." Henry was not Henry fends a little concerned to fee that he could not use these bulls, to demand without being liable to be molested. Nevertheles, in the Burnet. belief, that 'all this was owing to inadvertency, he ordered fir Gregory Caffali his ambaffador at Rome, to demand bulls less liable to dispute. Cassali spoke of it frequently to the pope, but could obtain no politive answer. Only the had his company, but he died of the fame difeafe. Herb. p. 98.—As the plague raged in Italy, fo did the fweat-ing ficknefs all this fummer in Eng-und where f died for Ferneia Raine authentick, but as very probable. Raland, whereof died fir Francis Pointz, pin.

pope

299

200 1528.

Pope's advice to the king. Herbert. Burnet.

Gardiner

haften the

Their inftructions.

Herbert.

Burnet,

Strype,

Collect.

F. 28, &c.

bulls.

pope finding himfelf preffed, told him as a fecret, that he advised the king to proceed, and get his marriage annulled, by virtue of the commission given the legate s, but with as little noife as possible, and marry the woman defired. He grounded this advice upon its being much eafier to confirm a thing when done, than to permit him to do it. He charged Callali however, not to let the king know, this fuggeftion came from him. Henry looked upon this advice as a fnare laid for him by the pope. He confidered, it was not possible to have such a cause tried without noise, fince it was neceffary the queen should be heard, otherwise the fentence would be evidently void. In the next place, had he done what he was advifed to, he would have been entirely at the pope's mercy, who, according to the opinion of the canonifts, might have refused to confirm the legate's fentence, as well as the confequent marriage So, the affair being taken into confideration, it was thought more proper to apply directly to the pope for new bulls. Purand Fox fent fuant to this refolution, the king fent b Stephen Gardiner, to Rome to cardinal Wolfey's fecretary, and Edward Fox i, to manage the affair. Their instructions were to demand for the cardinal a new commission, appointing him judge of the cause, with powers to null the king's marriage, if he thought proper, and yet to declare his daughter legitimate; to prefs the pope to give him a promife under his hand, not to revoke the legate's commission; to demand a bull decretal to null the king's marriage, and a difpensation to espouse another wife without any reftriction. In fhort, the envoys had orders to acquaint the pope, that the divorce was not advifed by the cardinal, and to difplay the extraordinary merit of the lady the king intended to espouse. This was Anne Bullen, as may eafily be gueffed, fince the king no longer concealed his love for her. It was very proper to tell the pope, that the cardinal was not author of the counfel which had induced the king to fue for a divorce, fince he was required for Vol.I. F.52. judge. And yet the letters he fent by Gardiner and Fox, and which are in the hiftory of the reformation, clearly fhow he was infinitely defirous the thing fhould fucceed. Finally, 'it appears that the king was still willing to have fome con-

> 8 Ut statim committat causam, aliam uxorem ducat, litein sequatur, mittatur pro legato, &c. Burnet's Collect. T'. I. p. 26.

h They were fent February 10, Burnet, T. I. p. 52.

I Provost of King's college in Cambridge, and the king's almoner. Gardiner was looked upon as the ableft canonist, and Fox as the best divine in England, Burnet, T. I. p. 52.

defcention

defcention for the queen and the emperor her nephew, fince 1528. he required that the legate should have powers to declare Mary legitimate. Perhaps too this was an effect of the love he had for her.

When Gardiner and Fox came to Orvieto k, Lautrec The pope's was marching to Naples. But his progrefs was yet fo in- artful maconfiderable, that it was difficult to judge of the fuccess of Herbert. his undertaking, especially as the Imperialists were now de- Guicciard, parted from Rome in order to oppose his passage. Nay, it was likely there would be a battle, and as the event was doubtful, the pope took care not to incur the emperor's refentment, in cafe his arms were victorious. So, to gain time, he fent the king a letter in cypher, as if he meant to acquaint him with a fecret, and yet it was not possible to discover his intention. The letter not being very welcome, the envoys had orders to infift upon their demands. But at His interest that time the face of affairs was a little altered. Lautrec and projects. had now made conquests in the kingdom of Naples, and the prince of Orange, unable to ftop his march, was retired to the metropolis, which, probably, was going to be invefted. It would therefore have been very imprudent to difoblige Henry, when the king of France his ally was upon the point of becoming very powerful in Italy. So, Clement being greatly embarraffed in fo nice a juncture, had recourse to his usual artifices, to try to gain time. He feigned to defire nothing fo ardently as to fatisfy Henry, though he was refolved in his own mind to do nothing effectual in his favour. His aim was to become master of the affair of the divorce, and prolong it till the events of the war fhould determine him to content either the emperor or the king. The intereft of his house required that he should manage the emperor, because it was by his means that he hoped to reftore the Medicis to Florence. That of his fee was no lefs important. Henry demanded that he should revoke a dispenfation granted by a pope his predeceffor, upon the fuppofition that this pope had not power to grant it, that is, properly speaking, that he should declare the Roman pontiffs had hitherto affumed a prerogative which belonged not to them. This was a very difficult flep to be taken, at a time when great part of Germany had thrown off the popes dominion, and nothing was every where heard but complaints and murmurs against the exorbitant power they had usurped. So, Clement's real delign was to amuse the king k March 20. Strype's Mem. vol. I. p. 90.

with

301

with hopes he would confent to his divorce, till it was in his power to oppofe it with fafety. There is no occasion to look for other mysteries in the pope's conduct, as will more plainly appear in the fequel. As for the arguments and authorities alledged on both fides, with respect to the main point in question, from the holy scriptures, the fathers, and the canons, they were only fo many amufements which were extremely subservient to the pope's defigns, but made little or no impression upon him.

The pope gives Wolfey miffion. Act. Pub. XIV.p.237. Herbert. Burnet.

302 1528.

The king defires the pope to join another legate with Wolfey.

Another commission £io. Act. Pub. XIV.p.295, 296. Burnet. The decretal committed Clement VII. being in this disposition, scrupled not outa new com- wardly to grant the king whatever he required. On the 13th of April 1528, he figned a bull, appointing cardinal Wolfey judge of the caufe, jointly with the archbifhop of Canterbury, or any other English prelate he should think fit to chuse, and gave him as ample powers as the king defired. But befides the abovementioned inconveniences in the decretal and dispensation, the king's council found two in cardinal Wolfey's new commission. The first was, that there was no claufe to hinder the pope from revoking it. The fecond, that to appoint for fole judge of the caufe a cardinal devoted to the king, and actually his prime minister, would be a manifest nullity. These confiderations obliged the king to defire the pope that he would join another legate with cardinal Wolfey, and politively promife not to revoke the commission. As, when this was demanded, Lautree was now before Naples, and it was not doubted, he would become master of the city, as well as of all the rest of the kingdom, the pope granted whatever was defired 1. He appointed therefore by a bull dated at Orvieto for Welfey the 6th of June, Thomas Wolfey, cardinal of York, and and Campe- Lorenzo Campegio cardinal bifhop of Salifbury, for his legates a latere, giving them the fame powers he had granted to Wolfey alone, appointing them his vicegerents in the affair of the divorce, and committing to them his whole authority^m. He gave likewife, the 13th of July, the promife under his hand defired by the king. In a word, he detoCampegie. livered to Campegio a decretal, nulling the king's marriage, expressed in the very terms which had as it were been dictated to him. It feemed Henry could defire nothing more.

But all the artifices of the court of Rome were not yet known in England. The pope only intended to gain time, in or-

I Dr. Fox returned to England in the beginning of May; but Gardiner went to Rome to Campegio. Strype's Mem. p. 103, 104.

m Campegio was perhaps named for legate in the month of April, as doctor Burnet fays, but his commission bears date the 6th of June. Rapin.

der

der to see the issue of the Naples expedition. To that end, 1528. he always placed fome interval between his favours to the 🛩 king. Wolfey was made fole judge in the affair of the divorce, the 13th of April; Campegio was, in a confiftory, declared his affociate, about the end of the fame month; but the bull was not drawn till the 6th of June. His promife not to revoke the commiffion was not figned before the 23d of July. In all appearance, the decretal was not drawn till August, nor did Campegio begin his journey till after Lautrec's death, or perhaps after raifing the fiege of Naples; that is, when the pope was no longer in dread of France, and it was more necessary than ever to manage the emperor. So, it may almost be affirmed, that when Campegio departed from Rome, the pope was refolved not to grant the divorce. It was however requifite he fhould ftill feem willing to fatisfy Henry, in order not to be delivered to the emperor's mercy, with whom he was determined to agree, and nothing was more capable to procure him advantageous terms, than his feeming union with France and England. This was most certainly the fecret of the pope's policy, and the real motive of all his artifices in this affair. In pursuance therefore of the resolution he had taken, Infructions he gave the following inftructions to his legate. First, to toCampegio. prolong the affair as much poffible. Secondly, not to give fentence upon the divorce before the reception of his commands in writing. Thirdly, he express enjoined him not to fhow the bull to any perfon but the king and cardinal Wolfey, nor to part with it out of his hands, without his order, upon any pretence whatever.

Campegio departing with these instructions, arrived not Heretards in England till October, fix or seven months after he was his journey appointed legate. Whilf he was on the road, the empepositible. ror's ministers at Rome raised a fresh obstacle to the divorce, The Impeby the pretended discovery of a brief of Julius II. ⁿ conrialists produce a forged firming the bull of dispensation for Henry's marriage with brief to re-Catherine. But there was this difference between the bull tard the afand the brief, that the pope in the bull faid, the marriage fair. Was perhaps confurmated ; whereas in the brief, the word Col. T. I. perhaps was omitted. They inferred from thence, that p. 39-Julius II. was not furprized, fince he looked upon Cathe-Herbert. rine's first marriage as confurmated. But the brief of which

^D It is neither in the records of England or Spain, but fuid to be found athong the papers of D. de Puebla, who match. Burnet, T. I. p. 57. 303

304 1528.

being a forgery.

they only gave an authentic copy, without flowing the original to the king's ministers, was, probably, proposed folely to caufe time to be loft in examining it. For, there were two reasons, among many others, which manifestly proved it to Proofs of its be a forgery. The first was, that this brief, granted at Catherine's requeft, supposed that princes's marriage with Arthur to have been confummated, and yet fhe had fworn the contrary. And upon that her agents had grounded the validity of Julius's dispensation. The second reason was still more ftrong, namely, that the brief was dated the 26th of December, 1503. Now as in the date of the briefs, the court of Rome begins the year the 25th of December, being Christmas-day, this date answered to the 26th of December 1502, of the common year, that is, ten months before Julius II. was pope.

Campegio exhortsHenry to keep Catherine. Burnet.

and Catherine to defift from her marriage. Herbert.

want fresh orders. Herbert.

He fhows the decretal to the king and Wolfey. Burnet.

The pope approves his conduct. Burnet.

Campegio being arrived in England, began his legatefhip with gravely exhorting the king to live in a good underftanding with the queen, and defift from a farther profecution of the matter. This was taken very ill from a legate who was thought to be fent into England to judge the caufe in favour of the king. After that, he talked the quite contrary to the queen, endeavouring to perfuade her, that fhe ought to comply with the king's defire °, and even intimated, it would be in vain to oppose it. But whether the queen was told beforehand what the was to fay, or naturally fpoke her own thoughts, the answered, the was the king's wife, and would He feigns to be fo, 'till parted from him by the pope's fentence P. Campegio not being able to prevail with the king or queen, affirmed he could not proceed without fresh orders, as if his whole commiffion was only to make these exhortations. But it was fix months before his inftructions arrived. Mean while he kept the king in hopes of obtaining his defires, and even infinuated, that he was himfelf fatisfied of the justice of his caufe. To amuse him the better, he showed him the bull he had brought with him, and gave the cardinal his colleague a fight of it alfo. But when he was preffed to fhow it to fome of the lords of the council, he replied, he had very politive orders to let no perfon fee it but the king and Wol-

fey. Henry, furprifed and angry at fuch a proceeding, complained of it to the pope, who, inflead of blaming his legate, answered, he had done very well to follow his orders : that the decretal was granted on condition it was shown to none but 1528. the king and cardinal Wolfey, and on purpose to prevent Wolfey's ruin, which otherwife, he was told, would be infallible : that in fine, the bull was not to be published, unless the legates gave fentence for the king 4.

P Adding, fhe would not admit fuch • He perfuaded her to renounce the world, and to enter into fome religious partial judges as they were to give fen-tence in her caufe. Ibid, life. Herbert, p. 103.

Whilft Campegio amufed Henry in England, the pope The pope was taking measures to conclude his treaty with the emperor, refolves to agree with and feeking pretences to leave the kings of France and Eng- the emperor. land, whom he no longer feared, fince the Naples expedition Guicciard. had miscarried. He complained that these two monarchs had difappointed him, in not caufing Ravenna and Cervia to be reftored to him according to their promife; thereby infinuating, that it was not to be thought ftrange, he made no hafte to fatisfy Henry, fince that prince had neglected to do him justice by the Venetians r. He would fain have had it believed, that the affair of the divorce was retarded folely on that account, and was very defirous to have thefe two places in his power, before he concluded with the emperor. But, what caution foever he ufed, his negotiation in Spain could not be fo private, but Francis and Henry had fome intelligence of it. They complained to him by their ambaffadors, but he conftantly denied he intended to depart from his neutrality. Mean while, under colour of removing these ground- Thedifficulless suspinions, he dispatched into England one Campana, to affair of the give the king fresh assurances of his good intentions, but divorce inwithal, fent by him express orders to cardinal Campegio, to crease. burn the bull decretal, and defer the fenterice of the divorce Burnet. as long as poffible. Campegio immediately obeyed the fift Herbert. of these orders, and as for the second, never ceased finding fresh pretences to retard the proceedings.

At last, Henry tired to see fo many affected delays, and Vannes and perceiving they came from the pope, fent, about the end of brian fent the year, fir Francis Brian and Peter Vannes ' to Rome, to discover the true cause. They had likewise feveral other commissions: First, to fearch the pope's records for the pre-tended brief of Julius II. Secondly, to propose, as of them-Burnet. felves, feveral expedients, speedily to end the affair of the di- Herbert. vorce, and to confult, under feigned names; the canonifts

'U

4 He wished he had never sent it, faying, he would gladly lofe a finger to recover it again, and expressed great grief for granting it. Burnet, tom. I.

P. 59. r The Venetians had taken Cervia and Ravenna from the pope, and France and England had promifed to intercede and use their interest with the Venetians to reftore them. Ibid. s An Italian; and the king's fecretary for the Latin tongue, Herbert, p. 103.

VOL, VI.

1528. of Rome, whether they were practicable. Thirdly, in cafe they faw the pope over awed by the emperor's threats, they threaten him. Burnet, Col. T. I. p. 48. Strype.

The pope's anfwer.

306

be unrefolved. Burnet.

had orders to offer him a guard of two thousand men. Laftly, if this had no effect, they were to balance the emperor's menaces with others for the king. They found the pope in a real or pretended fright, at the imperial minister's threats to have him deposed for a bastard. His answer therefore to the offer of two thousand men for a guard, was, that it would not be capable of fecuring him, but rather render him more fuspected. He took care not to put himfelf in the king's power, when he was thinking to break entirely with The envoys him. The two envoys feeing the pope inclined to the emperor's fide, plainly told him at laft, " That if he continued " to deny the king their mafter the fatisfaction he demanded, " he might be affured England would be loft to him : that " the English were already but too much disposed to with-" draw their obedience from the holy fee, and upon the leaft " encouragement from the king, would openly publish what " they yet kept concealed in their hearts : that the king their " mafter, and the king of France, were powerful and very " ftrictly united, and therefore the pope would run a great " hazard, if he fhould caufelefsly make these two monarchs  his enemies : that though the Naples expedition had mifcarried, he could not be fure it would be the fame with. " those that should be hereafter undertaken; nay, it was easy to fee, by the dangerous state of the emperor's affairs, " what might happen another time: that if out of exceffive, " condefcention for the emperor, he dealt fo unjustly by the " king of England, as to refuse him what even equity and " the law of God required, he must likewise expect no fa-" vour or regard, when affairs fhould be altered : that he " ought to confider, the king of England had engaged in this " war to free him from captivity, and if, inftead of making " a grateful return, he should join with his enemy, all " chriftians would abhor his ingratitude." All this was not capable to divert the pope from his defign, and yet he would He feigns to still be thought unrefolved. He replied with a figh, that he was between the hammer and the anvil, and, which way foever he turned, faw nothing before him but dangers; and therefore he placed all his hopes in the protection of God, who would not forfake his church : that as to the reft, he had done for the king of England more than could be reafonably expected, in committing the trial of his caufe to two legates, who were both devoted to him : that not content with this, he ftill preffed him to do more, and to difregard the cufto-X mary mary rules of the church on the like occasions, and publickly 1528. facrifice to him, the emperor, the archduke his brother, queen Catherine, the honour, dignity and interest of the holy fee : that this was asking too much, and the king should at least fuffer the affair to be decided by the legates, appointed for that purpose : that it was not his fault if matters were delayed, and in cafe it was owing to Campegio's negligence, he had acted contrary to his orders. This answer was a plain indication of the pope's thoughts. Accordingly, the The envoys envoys told the king, nothing was to be expected from the fend the king word he had pope, and that the only way was to caufe the legates to give nothing to a speedy sentence. The truth is, the pope was now resolved expect from to agree with the emperor; and if he showed any farther re- the pope. gard for Henry, it was only to avoid an open rupture with him, for fear the emperor fhould take advantage of it in the treaty they were concluding.

The expedients Brian and Vannes were commissioned, to Expedients propole, were, 1. whether, if the queen vowed religion, propoled by the king should have liberty to marry again ? 2. or if the king Burnet. fhould vow religion as well as the queen, whether the pope T. I. p. 60. would difpenfe with his vow, and allow him to take another wife whilft the queen was alive ? 3. or whether the pope would grant him a difpensation to have two wives? but it does not appear how these points were decided. As for the brief produced by the imperial minifters, there was not the leaft trace of any fuch thing among the pope's records, of which the English envoys thad good certificates. In this manner paffed the whole year 1528, at the close whereof the king found himfelf no more advanced than at the beginning, except that he had still fome hope from Campegio, who all along pretended to be intirely in his intereft. It may be af- True caufe firmed, that Francis, in neglecting to affift Lautrec, was the of the pope's caule of the turn which the affire of the diverge task for delays. cause of the turn which the affair of the divorce took, fince Herbert, he thereby gave occasion to the pope to join with the emperor ".

t These English envoys were the bifhop of Wercester and dr. Lee. They gave the emperor an overture of the divorce, and made feveral objections against the genuineness of Julius II's brief, which the reader may fee in Herbert, p. 104, 105. u About this time, fome murmurs and feditious words being difperfed among the common people, on account of the divorce, king Henry protefted publickly in an affembly of lords, judges, &c. at his palace at Bridewell, that nothing but defire of giving fatisfaction to his confcience, and care of eftablishing the fucceffion to the crown in a right and undoubted line, had first procured him to controvert this marriage; being, for the reft, as happy in the affection and virtues of his queen, as any prince living. To confirm which alfo, he caufed Anne Bullen to depart the court. Herbert, p. 106.

U 2

Whilft

307

THE HISTORY

Whilft the king was thinking of his divorce, cardinal Wolfey was very diligently employed in founding his colle-Several mo- ges. As the pope made the king very unealy at his affected delays, he endeavoured to gratify him otherwife, in granting his favourite whatever he defired for his foundations. Among the publick acts of the year 1528, there are ten or twelve bulls, as well for the suppression of feveral small monasteries ", as for other things concerning the two colleges, the endowment whereof the cardinal fo paffionately defired. Wherefore, knowing how fair an opportunity prefented to obtain private favours from the pope, he forgot not to improve it. Had he ftayed a year longer, he would have run great rifk of leaving the work unfinished.

> I have for fome time been filent concerning the affairs of Scotland, because there has been no occasion to speak of them. But as their fituation was changed during the courfe of this year, it is neceflary briefly to relate what had paffed in that country. The earl of Angus, George Douglass his brother, and their uncle Archibald, had ftill the king's perfon in their power, and governed in his name. Queen Margaret however, who had caufed her marriage with the earl of Angus to be annulled, and was married again to Henry Stewart, had still a powerful party in Scotland. But as her party could not act openly without being liable to be deemed rebels, fince the king was in the hands of the Douglaffes, the queen made use of another expedient to accomplifh her defigns. She perfuaded the king her fon, by fome perfons about him, to make his escape and retire to Sterling. The contrivance fucceeded according to her wifh. Tames took his opportunity, and escaping from the earl of Angus, withdrew to Sterling, where it was published that the Douglaffes should be no longer acknowledged for regents, and withal were forbidden the court. This order was notified to the earl of Angus, whilft he was marching to recover the king's perfon. As he had but few troops, and was unable to enter Sterling by force, where feveral great men were come to the king's relief, he obeyed and retired.

Shortly after, the king called a parliament at Edinburgh the third of September, and came himfelf to hold it. The Douglaffes, perceiving what was preparing against them, attempted to furprize Edinburgh, and become mafters of the king's perfon, with defign to diffolve the parliament. But

w Thofe of Romboro, Fylfton, Bromhil, Bliborow, and Montjoy. Rymer's Feed. tom. XIV. p. 240.

being

Tames affumes the reins of the government before he was of age.

1528. nasteries fuppreffed for Wolfey's colleges. Act. Pub. XIV. p. 240

-258.

Affairs of Scotland, Buchanan.

being repulsed, they were forced to retire. Whereupon the 1528. parliament confifcated their estates to the king. But they continued in arms, and made incursions even to the gates of Edinburgh.

Henry being informed of what paffed in Scotland, and Truce for fearing the young king might fuffer himfelf to be prejudiced five years beagainst him, thought it adviseable to fend ambaffadors to land and make peace, fince a war with Scotland could not be but very Scotland. inconvenient in his prefent circumftances. But it was not Aft. Pub. XIV.p.275, poffible to fucceed. A truce only for five years was con- _282, 286. cluded at Berwick, and figned the fourteenth of December. It was agreed by a separate article, that the Douglasses The Doumight take refuge in England, on condition they delivered into Engto their fovereign the places they held in Scotland; and in land. cafe they entered the kingdom, and committed any diforders, Henry fhould be refponfible as if done by his own subjects x.

Since the pope had determined to agree with the emperor, 1529. his feeding the allies with hopes was only to obtain the better terms from that monarch. On the other hand, Francis How the fuspecting the pope's intentions, perceived likewife that a pope and Francis flood peace only would procure him his fons, and therefore affected to continued a fecret negotiation with the emperor. But at the emperor. the fame time, he made great promifes to the Venetians, Flo-Guicciard. rentines, duke of Milan, and the pope himfelf, to let the emperor fee, in cafe he did not make hafte and conclude, it would perhaps be too late when he defired it. About the fame time, the emperor had certain advice, that the Turks were making great preparations to invade Hungary, and penetrate even into Germany. So finding that a diversion in Italy might greatly embarrals him at fuch a juncture, he was the more inclined to peace. These dispositions in the principal parties could not in the end but produce the peace which was univerfally expected with impatience. Mean while, the war was continued, though faintly, in the kingdom of Naples, and the duchy of Milan, where the French and Venetians had kept fome places, but it was eafy to fee that nothing decifive would happen.

In the mean time, the pope was wholly intent upon his own private affairs. His aim was not only to be reftored to Florence, but alfo to become mafter of Perufa and Ferrara. and recover Ravenna and Cervia, taken by the Venetians

* This year, on June 28, the king of France ratified the eight months wuce concluded between France, England, and the Low Countries, from June 15, to January 1529. See Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 258, &c.

U 3

during

The pope falls ill. Herbert. Wolfey takes fome fteps to attain to the papacy. Burnet. Herbert.

310

1529.

The king ufes all his intereft for him. Burnet, T. I. p. 64. Herbert.

during his captivity. Under colour of using his interest to procure a general peace, he had fent a nuntio to Spain to conclude a private treaty with the emperor. During the negotiation, the affair of the divorce was at a stand. Clement VII, was fully refolved to fatisfy the emperor, and by that Henry daily loft the hopes of fucceeding in his purfuit. Mean while, a violent diffemper, which feized the pope in the beginning of the year 1529, had like to have very much changed the face of affairs y. Cardinal Wolfey having notice of the pope's dangerous illnefs, had fent an express to Gardiner, to conjure him to neglect nothing that he thought capable of procuring him the papacy. Henry himfelf had writ to feveral cardinals in his behalf, and the king of France, who was not yet fecure of a peace, had given him all those of his faction. It is pretended, Wolfey would have been fure of more than a third of the votes, in cafe the pope had died. Indeed that was not fufficient to make him pope; but it was enough to hinder any other from being fo. This affair was even carried fo far, that the king had ordered his ambaffadors at Rome, that if, notwithstanding the cardinals of Wolfey's faction, another perfon fhould be defigned, they fhould fo manage that these cardinals should protest against the proceedings in the conclave, and then withdrawing to fome fecure place, fhould themfelves come to a new election. I do not know, whether it would have been eafy for the ambaffadors to obtain fo abfolute a refignation to the king's pleafure. However, it is not strange that Henry should be fo very defirous of procuring the papacy for his minister and favourite. But it is furpriling that a prince who was called protector of the church, and defender of the faith, should not fcruple purposely to endeavour to form a schism in the church, in order to gratify his paffion. As for cardinal Wolfey, nothing in his conduct ought to be thought ftrange; fince it is certain, he was ready to facrifice every thing to his ambition. The pope's recovery put an end to all thefe cabals, which however could not be fo private but they came to his knowledge. This made him confider Wolfey as a dangerous rival, and capable of fupplanting him if an opportunity offered, by using for pretence the defect in his birth.

When Clement VII. was fully recovered, the proceedings for the divorce continued upon the fame foot as before. The pope gave hopes, the affair fhould be decided in England for y His phylicians suspected that he was poisoned. Burnet, T. I. p. 63.

the

the king, by a fentence of the legates which he would him- 1529. felf confirm to make it more authentick. His aim was to gain time, and prevent the appearance of any mifunderstand- The pope's ing between him and the court of England, before he had to put off the concluded his treaty with the emperor, because it was a affair of the means to obtain better terms. To this end, and to hinder divorce. Henry from being impatient, he had put into Gardiner's Burnet, hands a brief, promifing not to revoke the powers given the legates. But, befides that the brief was expressed in ambiguous terms, he knew sentence would not be passed without his politive orders. This management which the pope continued with many artifices, afforded the king fome hopes of gaining him to his intereft. To fucceed the better, he Burnet. prevailed with the king of France to fend to the pope the bishop of Bayonne, with orders earnestly to follicit the decilion of the affair. He could have withed that the pope of his own accord would have granted a bull to annul his marriage, and difpense with his taking another wife, or at least have given the legates fuch a commission, as it should not be in their choice to judge otherwife than in his favour. The pope, pleafed at his being fo intent upon his own projects, still fed him with hopes of fucces. But withal he expressed great fear of what the emperor might do against him, and uled that pretence to delay the favour he feemed to intend to grant. In every thing elfe he was always ready to content The pope the king. The bishoprick of Winchester being vacant by gives Wolfey the death of Richard Fox, and Henry defiring him to beftow rick of it on Wolfey, the bulls for that purpole were immediately Winchefter. dispatched. It is true, they were rated at fifteen thousand Act Pub. ducats. But Wolfey would give but fix thoufand, alledging, 287, -290. he did not want them, fince the king had already granted Burnet. him the temporalities of the bishoprick. This shows in what spirit he thus heaped upon him the church preferments. But herein is nothing furprifing, fince the pope himfelf made no fcruple to own in his bull that he conferred the bifhoprick on the cardinal, to help him to bear the expence to which he was obliged by his rank.

Whilft these things passed, the emperor hastened, as much The pope's as poffible, the conclusion of his treaty with the pope, being pretence to delay the refolved to grant whatever he required rather than give him divorce. occasion to join with his enemies. Before the pope was affured Burnet, of this agreement, policy required, he fhould keep the emperor in fear that the affair of the divorce would be determined to the king of England's fatisfaction. Confequently, it was his interest that the affair should remain undecided to let

U 4

in queen Catherine's name. Burnet.

312

Henry refolves to try his caufe before the legates. Burnet.

He tries in reach the pope.

1529. Ict the emperor fee, it depended on the fuccefs of the nego-J tiation at Barcelona. But when he had just brought him to his own terms, he began infenfibly to feek pretences to break his engagements with Henry. So, the reflitution of Ravenna and Cervia was again moved, the pope feigning to believe that if Henry had defired it, he fhould have had thefe two cities before now, and from thence took occasion to be dif-Protestation pleased. On the other hand, the emperor knowing the pope's intention, protefted # in queen Catherine's name against whatever should be done in England in the affair of the divorce, declaring that fhe excepted against the two legates, as one was notorioufly devoted to the king, and the other, bishop of Salisbury. The king's ministers used their utmost endeavours to perfuade the pope to reject the protestation. But he replied, he could not, without shewing himfelf too partial to the king, fince a protestation was no prejudice to the caufe itfelf. That it would be a very ftrange thing to refuse a queen the right of protesting, which the meanest perfon could claim. All this, added to many other circumstances, and to certain advices that the pope was treating with the emperor, took from the English ministers all hopes of prevailing with him. Wherefore, they writ to the king that they were only amufed, and if the procefs was not fpeedily decided in England, there was danger of its being brought to Rome. Whereupon, the king refolved to proceed before the legates, and not fuffer himfelf to be any longer amufed by deceitful promifes. Mean while, when the inftrument whereby the pope had promifed not to revoke the legates commission came to be examined, it was found to be worded in general or ambiguous terms, which left him at liberty to do what he pleafed. So, to know whether he vain to over- had acted with fincerity a, when he figned that inftrument, Gardiner was ordered to reprefent to him, that the paper on which it was written being wet by the careleffnefs of the courier, and the words almost quite defaced, the king defired he would fign another. But Clement found fome artifice to be excufed. Wherefore the king, being fatisfied there was nothing to be expected from the court of Rome, where the emperor's intereft was too great, recalled Gardiner b and

> 3 May 15. Burnet, tom. I. p. 67. a Or rather, to obtain an enlargement of the commission, with fuller power to the legates: and when it was new drawn, they were to endeayour to get as many pregnant and material words added as possible. Idem.

p. 68.

b He was thought the fitteft perfon to manage the process in England, being effeemed the ableft canonift in the kingdom, and was fo valued by the king, that he would not begin the procefs till he came. Burnet, ibid.

Brian,

Brian, and sent Bennet to Rome, only to hinder as much 1529. as lay in his power the avocation of his caufe. Bennet carried a letter from the two legates, directed to the pope and Letter from cardinals, wherein they faid, That the principal point in the two lecaufe they were to judge, confifted in knowing whether Ju-pope. lius II. could grant a difpenfation, or exceeded his power : Burnet, that fince the fole point was to decide concerning the autho-T. I. p. 68. rity of the head of the church, they conceived it to be beyond their commission, and therefore were of opinion, the pope would do well to avocate the caufe : that they doubted not, the king would confent to it, provided he had fome affurance it should be decided in his favour. It is hard to con- Remark on ceive, what could induce cardinal Wolfey to fign fuch a let- the letter ter, fo directly contrary to the king's intereft. For, though to Wolfey, the legates feemed to fuppofe his confent, it was evident the reason of the avocation subfisted, whether the king consented or not. Confequently they afforded the pope a plaufible pretence to avocate the caufe, which the king dreaded of all things. Was Wolfey deceived by Campegio, or did he facrifice his master's interest? It is difficult to believe either; and yet hiftorians affirm, that one of the the principal caufes of his difgrace was a letter he had writ to the pope, which came to the king's knowledge by Bennet's means, and it might very well be this. Indeed, he was inexcufable if he figned it without the king's approbation; and on the other hand, it cannot be conceived that the king fhould be fo blind as not to fee the confequence of fuch advice.

Though Campegio came to England in October last year, The legates it was now the end of May, and nothing done towards the fit to hear the caufe. trial of the cause which brought him thither. The king, Burnet, having fuffered himself to be amufed by the pope whose in-T.III.p.46, tereft it was to gain time, had been ever in hopes of ob-Herbert. taining a bull to null the marriage, without being obliged Hall. to go through the ufual forms of a process. But at length, his agents convincing him that his expectations were vain, he refolved to proceed before the legates. To that end, on Act. Pub. the 31ft of May, he granted them a licence to execute the XIV.p.295. Artifices of pope's commission. They met the same day and appointed Campegio to affiftants e to examine the papers and evidences. From the fpin out the very first feffion, it appeared that Campegio intended to pro-affair. Burnet. long the process, fince after the commission was read, he ordered the king and queen to be cited to appear the 18th

c John Longland, bishop of Lincoln; John Clark, bishop of Bath and Wells ; John Iflip, abbot of Westminster, and

dr. John Taylor, mafter of the rolls. Herbert, p. 103.

313

. 107, &c.

1529. Campegio prefide.

of June. This was too long a term, if there had been any defign to difpatch the affair, efpecially as the parties were Wolfey lets in London, or in one of their palaces near the city. Though Wolfey was the fenior cardinal, he let Campegio prefide, to fhow he intended to act without partiality. So, from the first day to the last, Campegio did all, without Wolfey's ever appearing to oppose the affected delays of his collegue between the feffions. I shall not enter any farther into the particulars of this famous process, which may be seen at large in the excellent hiftory of the reformation of England, known to all the world, but content my felf with relating in general the most remarkable circumstances.

In the fecond feffion, the queen's proctors d excepted against the two legates. But the exception not being deemed valid, she had a further day given her to the 21st e. On T. I. p. 73. that day, the king and queen appeared in perfon f. But andIII.p.46. the queen, without faying any thing to the legates, went and kneeled down before the king, and made a very moving speech, concluding with imploring his justice and pity; after which, the withdrew and would never more appear, nor fuffer any perfon to defend her caufe ^g. As foon as the was retired, the king declared he was very well pleafed with the queen, and in fuing to be divorced from her, acted folely from

> d William Warham, archbifhop of Canterbury, Nicolas Weft, bifhop of Ely, John Fifher, bifhop of Rochefter, and Henry Standish of St. Asaph. Hall, fol. 181.

> e On the 18th of June, the citation being returned duly executed, Richard Sampion, dean of the chapel, and Mr. John Bell, appeared as the king's proxies. But the queen appeared in person, and excepted against the legates as incompetent judges, alledging the caufe was already avocated by the pope, and defired a competent time to prove it. The legates affigned her the 21st, and adjourned the court till then. Burnet, T. I. p. 72. f Bishop Burnet, from the original register of the process fays, the king avas never in the court. Ref. T. III. p. 46. But the contrary is affirmed by the king himfelf, in a letter dated June 23, to his ambaffadors at Rome, in these words, Both me and the queen appeared in perfon. See Collect. to sol. J. p. 78. To reconcile this contradiction the bilhop supposes, that they were indeed together in the Hall where the court fat; but that it was before the cardinals fat down, and had formed the court. Pref. to vol. II. p. 8.

g When the king and queen were called on; the king answered, here; but the queen rifing from her feat, kneeled down and faid to the king, " She was a poor woman and a " Aranger in his dominions, where " fhe could expect neither good coun-" cil, nor indifferent judges; fhe had " long been his wife, and defired to . " know wherein she had offended him : " fhe had been his wife twenty years " and more, and had borne him fe-" veral children, and ever fludied to " pleafe him, and protested he had " found her a true maid, about which " fhe appealed to his own confcience. " If the had done any thing amifs, " fhe was willing to be put away " with fhame. Their parents were " eftcemed very wife princes, and no " doubt from a motive of religion and confcience h. Adding, that 1529. his fcruples concerning his marriage fprung from those of the bifhop of Tarbe, and were confirmed by the opinion of all the bifhops of England. The archbifhop of Canterbury confirmed what the king faid, concerning the bifhops. But Fisher bishop of Rochefter denied, he ever set his hand to the writing which was prefented to the king. Mean while, AA, Pub. the queen was cited again for the 25th of June, but instead XIV.p.299, of appearing, the fent in her appeal to the pope in form, The queen from whatever had been or fhould be done hereafter. Ne- appeals from verthelefs, fhe was declared contumacious. The fame day, the proceed-ings of the the process was reduced to twelve articles, upon which wit- legates, neffes were to be examined. The principal article was, Burnet. prince Arthur's confummation of his marriage with Cathe-Herbert, rine, which the queen had denied with an oath, and which p. 113, &c, notwithstanding was proved by the testimony of feveral perfons, as far as a thing of that nature can be. These proofs confifted in the age, health, and vigorous conftitution of the prince, and in his difcourfes the next morning after the nuptials: fo that Arthur and Catherine must not have spoken the truth, the one out of vanity, or the other out of intereft i.

Proceedings in the proecís. Burnet, Hall. Stow.

314

Whilft the trial was profecuting in England, the empe- Thepopereror's minifters were earneftly preffing the pope to avocate the ceives news of the concaufe to Rome, and Henry's as vehemently foliciting the clufton of his contrary. What is more, both fides threatened to depofe treaty with him, on account of his being a bastard. The pope feigned the emperor. to be terrified by these menaces, and this seeming fear to Burnet. declare for either, afforded him a pretence to remain undetermined, till he received advice of the conclusion of his ¹⁶ doubt had good counfellors and learn-" ed men about them when the match " was agreed : therefore fhe would " not fubmit to the court, nor durft " her lawyers, who were his fubjects, " and affigned by him, fpeak freely " for her. So the defired to be excuted " till fhe had heard from Spain." That faid, fhe role up, and making the king a low reverence, went out of court. Her council were the bifhops of Rochefter and St. Afaph, and dr. Ridley. Burnet, vol. I. p. 73. h He cleared likewife cardinal Wol-fey from being the first mover of the matter, as had been fuspected. Ibid.

i Particularly Robert, viscount Fitzwalter, Thomas, duke of Norfolk, and fir Anthony Willoughby, depofed, that they heard prince Arthur fay publickly, I have been this night in the midft of Spain. The king's council it feems infifting mostly on the confummation of the marriage, it led them to fay many things that were indecent ; of which the bishop of Rochester complained, and faid they were things detestable to be heard; but cardinal Wolfey checked him, and there paffed fome fharp words between them. Lord Herbert has given the fubftance of all the depositions, p. 115. Compl. Hift. The place appointed for hearing and determining the caufe, was a great half in Black Friars in London, commonly callet the parliament chamber. Ibid.

315

treaty

316 1529.

treaty with the emperor. At length the agreeable news being come, he refolved to avocate the caufe before the publication of the treaty; left it fhould be thought to be one of the fecret articles. Weak precaution to efface or prevent fuch a suspicion.

The fubstance of the treaty, which was figned at Barceof the treaty. lona the 29th of June, was, That the emperor should reftore the family of the Medici to Florence, on the fame foot as formerly: that he should cause Ravenna and Cervia to be delivered to the pope: that he fhould put him in poffession of Modena and Reggio, faving the rights of the empire : that he should aid him to become master of Ferrara: that Francesco Sforza should be restored to Milan, if innocent, but if guilty, the emperor fhould not difpose of the duchy to any prince the pope fhould diflike : that the pope and emperor fhould employ their temporal and fpiritual arms against the hereticks of Germany : that Alexander de Medici should espouse Margaret the emperor's natural daughter: that the pope fhould grant the emperor a fourth of the ecclefiaftical revenues in his dominions to wage war with the Turks : that he fhould abfolve all that were any way concerned in the taking and facking of Rome. What greater advantages could the pope have expected, supposing he had been victorious in the late war? but the emperor believed he could not purchase the pope's friendship too dear, who might still have greatly embarraffed him, if he had joined with France, England, and the republick of Venice.

The pope caule to Rome. Burnet. Herbert,

The pope having concluded his treaty with the emperor, avocates the told the English ambaffadors himself on the 9th of July his refolution to avocate the caufe to Rome. They used all poffible endeavours to diffuade him from it, reprefented to him that the holy fee was going irrecoverably to lofe England. But it was all to no purpose. By his late treaty with the emperor, the family of the Medici was to be reftored to the government of Florence. This alone was fufficient to outweigh in his mind, all the dangers to which he exposed the holy fee, fo great was his affection for a family from whence he was descended, though not born in wedlock. So, the 15th of July he figned the bull of avocation. The next day he notified it to Caffali the king's ambaffador in ordinary, and to Bennet who had been fent to him laft. He alledged in excufe of the avocation feveral reafons which might have been of fome weight in the beginning of the process, on fuppofition he had been entirely impartial, but which had loft all their force after all his proceedings, and the conclusion of his

Conditions

Guicciard.

his treaty with the emperor. Three days after, he difpatched a meffenger with the bull of avocation into England, where proceedings were very dilatory by the artifices of cardinal He fends a Campegio, who prefided in the affair.

The queen, who was cited for the 25th of June, not ap- Continuapearing that day, fhe had farther time given her to the 28th, tion of the and was fummoned again to appear by the bifhop of Bath Burnet, and Wells, though in vain. On the 28th, fome depolitions Herbert. were read, after which the feffion was adjourned to the sth Campegio's of July, when by reason of certain holidays kept at Rome, Ad. Pub. the feffion was deferred till the 12th. The court met again XIV. p. 300. on the 12th, the 14th, the 17th, the 21st, and the 23d. As there was nothing more to do but to pronounce the fen- He adjourns tence, every one thought all would be ended the laft feffion ; the fourt to but people were ftrangely furprifed when cardinal Campegio October. was heard to adjourn the court to the first of October. He Burnet, alledged for reafon, that it was the time of the great vacation Hall. at Rome, and he was indifpenfably obliged to comply with that cuftom k.

Thus did that legate, who was in the pope's fecrets, amuse the king in the same manner as the pope had amused him at Rome near two years, ever fince the affair was begun. Henry was as much enraged as furprifed at the proceedings of the legates, but diffembled both his furprife and refentment. Shortly after, he plainly perceived to what all these affected delays tended, when he came to know that notwithstanding his engagement, the pope had avocated the caufe. The bull of avocation being arrived 1, he would not The bull of fuffer it to be notified to him, but intimated to the legates avocation that he was content they fhould obey the pope's orders. It comes to London. was not without reafon that he would not have the bull noti- Burnet. fied to him. He was cited therein to appear at Rome within The king is forty days, which he could not have done without acting cited to Rome. contrary to the laws of the land, which prohibited to obey fuch citations, and carry caufes to a foreign court. Upon this foundation it was that he had alwas infifted, that the process should be determined in the kingdom. Besides that, cenfures were denounced against him in the bull as against a private perfon, if he obeyed not the citation. Some time af- The pope ter, the pope made him a fort of reparation, in revoking revokes his centures.

k He pretended that they fat there as a part of the confistory of Rome, and therefore must follow the rules of that court, which from that time till

October was in a vacation, and heard no causes. Burnet, tom. I. p. 77. 1 On August 4. Idem. p. 78.

1529. courier to England.

thefe

king, it was not poffible for the cardinal to avoid the fulpicion of betraying his mafter's interefts, or at leaft of ferving him very ill. Henry himfelf thought fo, though he did not prefently fhow it ". On the other hand, Anne Bullen, who had always believed the cardinal in her intereft, was extremely furprifed when fhe was informed of what had paffed. The king had removed her from court ", whilf the legates were employed in the judgment of the process, but the was fent for the moment the bull of avocation was arrived. 'Tis pretended, the did not a little contribute to confirm the king's fuspicions of the cardinal. She was perfuaded, if Wolfey had pleafed, the affair would have taken another turn, but that he had altered his resolution. Whether her opinion was well grounded, or the vexation to fee herfelf ftill fo remote from her hopes, exasperated her against the cardinal, the looked upon him as an enemy deferving her whole vengeance. So finding the king disposed to give ear to whatever was faid against his minister, the neglected nothing that could help to ruin him. In this she was affisted by several perfons of the highest rank, who had no reason to 1529. these centures by a brief ", wherein he protested they were inferted contrary to his intention. But as to the citation it-Act. Pub. felf, he only prolonged the day to Christmas.

XIV.p.346. Remark on cardinal Wolfey's behaviour. Burnet. Herbert. He

Burnet.

The king is extremely uneafy. Burnet.

love that proud prelate. It is easy to guess Henry's concern to see himself on a sudden for remote from his aim. The pope had joined in league with the emperor, which was properly his party. Francis I. from whom he had expected a powerful aid in case of need, had just concluded at Cambray a treaty with the emperor, whereby he engaged not to affist that prince's enemies. In a word, queen Catherine remained obstinate not to accept any expedient that might debar her from being his wise. On

m Dated August 29. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 347.

King Henry received information of his having juggled in the bufinefs, and that he fecretly advifed the pope to do what was done. Burnet, T. I. p. 78.

• By Wolfey's advice, as fhe thought. Ibid. the other hand, Henry's love for Anne Bullen, which he 1529. had pleafed himfelf with the hopes of gratifying by a lawful marriage, helped not a little to increase his concern. He did not know which way to get rid of the queen, who by her obstinacy had very much lessened that esteem and affection he had always had for her P. With a mind full of thefe He takes a troublesome thoughts, and uncertain what to determine, he progress. refolved to take a progrefs into fome of his counties, to try Hall. to difpel his melancholy.

During his journey, he lodged one night at Waltham, Dr. Cranwhere Edward Fox and fecretary Gardiner happened to mer opens lie at a gentleman's house ^q who had two fons committed to to get over Thomas Cranmer's care. Cranmer was a doctor in divi- his troubles, nity, who, having been professor at Cambridge ', had loft Burnet. his place upon being married. He had travelled into Germany, where he had read Luther's works, and embraced his doctrine, but with more moderation than was ufually feen in the first disciples of that reformer. Whilst they were at fupper, Cranmer being at table with Fox and Gardiner, the conversation ran upon the affair of the divorce, and as the master of the house had informed the two courtiers of . Cranmer's merit and capacity, they defired him to give his opinion upon that fubject. Cranmer at first modeltly declined it, but they preffed him fo much that he could not excufe himfelf. So, after stating the question, he faid, he faw no better way to extricate the king out of his difficulties, than to procure in writing, the opinions of all the universities in Europe, and of the most eminent divines and civilians . That one of these two things would follow, either the univerfities and the learned would judge Julius the fecond's dif-

* P Even after Campegio's arrival in England, the king and queen did eat at one table, and lodged in one bed; there being no vifible fign of any breach between them. But after the fuit conserning the divorce was commenced, they parted. See Stow, p. 546. About December, Anne Bullen returned to court, and was more waited on than the queen had been for fome years. At this the people appearing uncafy, and feeming inclined to revolt; it was refolved to fend all the firangers out of the kingdom. Burnet, T. III.

P. 42, 44. 9 Mr. Creffy.

r Rapin by mistake fays Oxford. He was bred up at Jefus College in Cambridge, where he was reader of divinity in Buckingham, now Magdalen College, and commenced doctor in 1523. He was born at Aflockton, in Nottinghamshire, 1489, being fon of Thomas Cranmer, efq; a gentleman of a very ancient family. He had nothing to do with Oxford before he was carried there to be burnt. He was indeed invited to be a reader of divinity in the cardinal's college at Oxford, but . declined it. Burnet, tom. I. p. 79, &c.

. Though Fox and others affirm, that Cranmer was the first adviser ofconfulting the foreign univerlities, yet Cavendifh, Wolfey's gentleman ufher, fays, the cardinal first proposed it.

penfation.

Burnet. Stow.

The king

Campegio returns to Rome. Herbert. Hall.

He complains of it in vain.

penfation fufficient, or deem it invalid. That in the first 1529: - cafe, the king's conficience would have reason to be easy, and in the fecond, the pope would never venture to pais fentence contrary to the opinion of all the learned and able men in Christendom. Fox and Gardiner relishing this advice, imparted it to the king, who immediately taking the author's meaning, cried out in a transport of joy. That he had got the right fow by the ear, an expression, which in its coarfeness showed how much the king was pleased with the expedient. At the fame time he fent for Cranmer, who entertains a explaining more at large what he had but just hinted at table, great efteem fo gained his efteens, that from that moment he was ordered for Granmer. This is the former to for whill quickly to follow the court. This is the fame doctor who will quickly be feen to make a confiderable figure in England, and lay the first foundations of the reformation in that kingdom.

The king being returned from his progress, cardinal Campegio, whole commission was revoked, took his audience of leave, as having no farther business in England. Henry had fo much command of himfelf as to take no notice of his They fearch proceedings, and looked pleafantly upon him. But just as his baggage. the cardinal was going to embark, the cuftom-houfe officers fearched all his baggage under colour of looking for contraband goods t. Probably, the king hoped to find the decretal bull, which he had feen in his hands, not knowing it was burnt ". Campegio loudly complained of the infult, and writ to the king to demand fatisfaction, as for an affront done to the legate of the holy fee. Henry coldly answered ", that his cuftomers had done their duty, in executing orders long fince established with regard to perfons going out of the kingdom : that he was furprized he fhould talk of his being legate when recalled, and much more that being bishop of Salisbury, he should be so ignorant of the laws of the land, as to dare to affume that title without his licence. Campegio perceiving by this answer, that the king intended not to give him fatisfaction, thought himfelf very happy in being fuffered to depart.

> t It was fuspected he was carrying over Wolfey's treasure. Burnet, tom. 111. p. 49.

" It is thought they fearched alfo for fome love letters of the king's to Anne Bullen, which fome way or other were conveyed out of the king's eabinet, and fent to Rome. They now lie in the vatican. Burnet faw them in the library, and knowing Henry's hand too well not to be convinced they were writ by him, got dr. Fall, to copy them for him. They were very ill wrote, the hand is fcarce legible, and the French feems faulty. Burnet, vol. III. p. 42.

w In a letter dated October 22. Herbert, p 123.

The

OF ENGLAND.

The cardinal had good reason to wish himself out of the 1529. kingdom. With what moderation foever the king behaved to him, he could not be ignorant how angry he was, after Cardinal feeing, some days before his departure, the course that was fall. taking with his collegue cardinal Wolfey. The 9th of Octo-Herbert. ber, the attorney general * had preferred a bill of indict-Burnet. ment against Wolley, as guilty of breaking the statute of He is impræmunire. The 17th of the fame month the king fent perched. and demanded the great feal, though it was given him for The king life. For which reafon, the cardinal made fome fcruple to great feal deliver it, but he obeyed a fecond command y, and in a few from him. days the king gave the great feal to Sir Thomas More, a Act. Pub. person universally esteemed for his great integrity. The XIV.P 349. cardinal had no fooner delivered the great feal, but the attorney general preferred other articles of impeachment against him. The king having given him leave to appoint attor-Ibid. nies to answer for him, he chose two who appeared for him, p. 348, 350. Hall. and protefted in his name, that he did not know the obtaining of the bulls whereof he was accufed, was contrary to the laws of the land, and prejudicial to the prerogative royal. As for the particulars wherewith he was charged, they faid, he confessed them, and cast himself entirely upon the king's mercy. He was acculed twice, as I faid, namely, on the 9th and 18th of October, and both times found guilty, and declared to be out of the protection of the laws. He is put Probably he was indicted first, for obtaining several bulls out of the without the king's express licence, and the second time for the law. exercifing in England the office of a legate a latere, without Herbert. the king's letters patent to that end, contrary to the intent Hall. of the law.

As foon as the cardinal was out-lawed, the king com-Inventory of manded him to leave York Place, and retire to a country the cardinal's goods. house belonging to him as bishop of Winchester. Then he Herbert. ordered an inventory of all his goods to be taken, which Stow. contained immense riches z, acquired by many acts of in-Hollingth. justice. 'Tis faid, that of fine holland alone, there was Cavendifh. found in his house a thousand pieces. One may judge of the rest by this fample. Some time after, he caused a very humble petition to be prefented to the king, praying a protection for his perfon, without which, he faid, he was ex-

* Christopher Hales.

y And delivered it to the dukes of 2 They were valued at five hundred Norfolk and Suffolk. The king of- thousand crowns. Burnet, tom. III. fered it to archbishop Warham, but he p. 50. declined accepting of it. Burnet, tom.

I. p. 80.

VOL. VI.

pofed

The king grants him clined to mercy.

Burnet. Fiddes. Stow. Wolfey's affair liament,

1529. posed to the infults of the meanest enemy that would abuse him. The king granted it, November the 17th, with a power to answer for himself in all actions that should be entered against him for the future. Moreover, he left him a protection, the archbishoprick of York, and the see of Winchester. It XIV.p.351. is difficult to account for the king's behaviour with respect to . Heseemsin- the cardinal, fince at the very time he seemed most incenfed against him, he fent him a certain ring, which was a token betwixt them of the continuance of his affection. The cardinal, who was then on the road to his country houfe near Winchefter a, was fo transported with joy at the fight of the ring, that he alighted from his horfe, and fell upon his knees in the dirt to receive it b. But his hopes were not long lived. His enemies, who had the king's ear, took brought be- fo much pains to exasperate him against him, that at last his fore the par- affair was brought before the parliament c.

Lord Herbert has inferted in his hiftory the forty four articles of impeachment prefented to the king against the cardinal by the house of lords, which differ much from those preferred by Hales the attorney general, either in the Star-

2 It was not near Winchester, but to Esher or Asher, near Hampton-Court, that he was ordered to withdraw.

b And having no other prefent to make to the king, he fent him his fool Patch. Stow, p. 548.

c This parliament met on November 3. and was, on December 17, prorogued to the 21ft of April enfuing. The most remarkable statutes enacted now, were thefe: I. That part of the exe-cutors which take upon them the charge of a will, may fell any land devifed by the testator to be fold. 2. That for probates of wills, where a man dies worth only five pounds clear, there shall be paid but fix pence; if worth forty pounds, three shillings and fix pence-; and if worth above forty pounds clear, five shillings. 3. That mortuaries shall be paid only where they have been used to be paid; and according to the following rate; when a man dies worth in moveables above ten marks clear, there shall be paid three fhillings and four pence; if worth a-bove thirty pounds, fix fhillings and cight pence; and if worth above forty pounds clear, ten shillings; and this to be paid only by housekeepers. None to be paid in Wales or Berwick. 4.

That fervants embezzling their mafters goods to the value of forty shillings, shall be punished as felons. 5. That no fpiritual perfon shall take any lands to farm, upon pain of forfeiting ten pounds a month. That no clergyman having one benefice with sure of fouls, of the yearly value of eight pounds or above, shall take another, unless qualified, as being a doctor or bachelor of divinity, or chaplain to a nobleman. In this fame act the number of chaplains every peer may qualify is thus fpecified : an archbishop eight; a duke or bishop fix; a marquis and earl five; a vifcount four; the high chancellor, every baron, and knight of the garter, three; every duchefs, marchionefs, countefs, and baronefs, being widows; and the treafurer, and controller of the houfhold, the king's fecretary, dean of the chapel, almoner, and matter of the rolls, two; the chief justice of the king's bench, and warden of the Cinque Ports, one. Sce Statut. 21. Hen. 8. Hall, fol. 187, &c. There was, finally, a very extraordinary act passed, by which the king was discharged of all the obligations or affignations made for the payment of all the feveral fums lent him at feveral times by his fubicets. Burnet, tom, I. p. 83. Coll. p. 82.

Chamber

Chamber or elfewhere. Hales had accufed him of breaking 1529. the statute of præmunire, and exercising the office of legate a latere, without the king's licence. Therein, he proceeded Difference according to the tenor of the flatute of armania which between the according to the tenor of the ftatute of præmunire, which articles of ran, that no perfon should be exempt from the penalty, but the house, those to whom the king should be pleased to grant his letters and the atpatents. Now, as the cardinal had not taken care to have ral's indicta licence in form, he was liable to the penalty, according to ment. the rigour of the law. But in the articles of the houle of Herbert, sc. lords there is no fuch thing. And indeed, it would have Hall, been contrary to equity to accufe the cardinal of exercifing fol. 189. the authority of legate without the king's permiffion, fince the king was known to confent to it, though not in the manner prefcribed by the law. The attorney general did well to keep to the letter of the law, purfuant to the duty of his office. But it would have been wrong in the houfe of peers to take advantage of the want of a formality to deftroy one of their body. So, the articles exhibited by the lords, ran upon crimes which had no relation to the ftatute of præmunire. The cardinal was chiefly accufed of abufing, his legatine power, contrary to his oath, when admitted to the exercise of his legateship : of unjust proceedings as chancellor: of making himfelf, on feveral occafions, equal to the king c: of iffuing out divers orders of moment without the king's knowledge : of acting arbitrarily on many occafions, as if he was rather fovereign than minister. All the reft of the articles were of the fame nature, importing the ill use he had made of his power, as legate, chancellor, prime minister, and favourite. But I cannot pass over in Art. VI. filence, a very extraordinary article, namely, that the cardinal knowing he had the great pox upon him, had the confidence daily to approach the king's perfon, frequently whifpering in his ear, without fearing to infect him with his breath. These articles being sent down to the commons, Thomas Thomas Cromwell, member of parliament, and the cardi-freaks for nal's fervant, fo undertook his defence, as did him great him in the honour, and was one of the principal caufes of his future house of advancement. It is true, he pretended not to clear him of commons. the crimes he was charged with, but only to flow he was not guilty of treason, as the house of peers afferted, wherein he fucceeded to his wifh.

^c He used to write in his letters and and I give unto you our hearty thanks, infructions, Th: king and I. And I &c. See Herbert, p. 126, Strype's would ye should do thus. The king Mem. tom. I, p. 119,

X 2

324

It is neceffary now to fpeak of the peace of Cambray, 1529. which was only mentioned by the way. The differences Remarks on between Charles V. and Francis I. fo concerned all Europe, the peace of that it is very difficult to understand the histories of the Cambray. Guicciard, other states, without a clear notion of the affairs of these P. Daniel. two monarchs. Francis laboured, during the first part of Herbert. the year 1529, to negotiate a peace with the emperor. After his ill fuccefs in the war of Naples, he faw there was no other way to recover his two hoftages. He knew the pope continued a fecret negotiation in Spain, and that it lay in the emperor's power to make peace with all the flates of Italy, by reftoring Sforza to Milan. - So, though France and England had made the greatest efforts, probably, it would have ferved only to haften the peace of Italy. But the king of France was not even fure of prevailing with Henry to act, who was still defirous to manage the pope and emperor, in hopes of obtaining their confent to his divorce rather by fair means than by arms. Befides, though he was bound to contribute large fums for the war, he payed them only in paper, by acquittances of what was due to him from Francis. So, properly fpeaking, this was no affiftance to France, drained by the former wars of men and money. Francis had therefore no bufinefs to ftand in fufpence. It was neceffary for him to make peace at any rate. However, to obtain as good terms as possible, he amufed the Venetians, the duke of Ferrara, and the Florentines, with great promifes, for fear they fhould prevent him, and after they had made their peace with the emperor, his condition became worfe. He told them, he was refolved to lead in perfon a ftrong army into Italy. He continued this management till he had concluded the treaty of Cambray, wherein he left them all to the emperor's mercy. Probably, Henry was the only ally that knew his intentions. The emperor was not ignorant of the fituation of the French king's affairs, and doubtlefs, would have made it turn more to his advantage, had not the invalion, the Turks were preparing against Hungary and Austria, and the commotions railed by the protestants in Germany, made him defirous to leave Italy in quiet. Befides, he faw, that a peace was the only way to break the first union of France with England. If these two monarchs had joined in the league which the protestants of Germany were projecting for their common defence, they would have created him troubles which might have broke all his measures. These were the motives that inclined the emperor to peace, which which however he made France purchase very dear. Charles and Francis being in the fame disposition, agreed together by fecret negotiations, upon the chief articles of the peace, the whole honour whereof they were pleafed however to leave in appearance to the ladies. In July, Margaret of Auftria, the emperor's aunt, and governets of the Low Countries, and Louisa of Savoy, duchels of Angoulême, Francis's mother, repaired to Cambray d, and figned, the 5th of August, a treaty, the fubstance whereof was as follows :

That the emperor fhould renounce his demand concern-Chief artiing Burgundy, his right to that duchy remaining however cles of the peace of entire. Cambray.

That the king of France should pay him two millions of Guieciard. crowns of gold de foleil, for the ranfom of his fons, and Mezerai. Act. Pub. withdraw all his forces out of Italy. XIV.p. 326,

That he should refign to him the fovereignty of Flanders &c. Herbert. and Artois. Hall.

That he should reftore to him the earldom of Afti, with Holling h. whatever he held in the duchy of Milan.

That he fhould renounce all his pretenfions to the kingdom of Naples.

That he should marry queen Leonora, with whom the emperor her brother would give in dower two hundred thoufand crowns. *

In thort, befides feveral other private articles, he promifed to reftore the heirs of the late duke of Bourbon to all that prince's forfeited effates.

The treaty being ratified , it was fome time before Francis Francis dedurst give audience to the ambassadors of Venice and Flo- ceives his rence, because he could not without confusion hear their allies. just reproaches. At last, he put them off with fome poor excufe and fresh promises, which he performed no better than those before the peace. What was very ridiculous, even after the peace was concluded, the bifhop of Tarbe his ambaffador at Venice, not having timely notice, ftrenuoufly follicited the fenate to fupport the war, upon the hopes he gave them of a powerful aid.

It was also very firange, that Henry having proclaimed Henry's gewar with the emperor by a herald, there fhould be how-nerofity to Francis.

d Our king's ambassadors there, were Cuthbert Tunstal, bishop of Dur- master of his horse, and Dr. Samson, ham, and Sir Thomas More. Herbert, to Bolosna, to ratify it in his name. P 130.

• King Henry fent fir Nicolas Carew, Hall, fol. 187.

X 3 ever

325 1529. 1529. ever no particular treaty between them. Henry was fatiffied with an article inferted in that of Cambray, whereby the king of France was bound to pay him the two hun-Aft. Pub. XIV.p.328. dred and ninety thousand crowns, due from the emperor, and redeem the rich flower-de-luce, pawned by the emperor Maximilian to Henry VII. for fifty thousand crowns. He did more; for he generously forgave Francis the first fum, and made a present of the fecond to the duke of Orleans, his god-fon f: this shows, that in making peace, Francis I. had not dealt with Henry as with the princes of Italy, but had convinced him of the necessfity, he was under, to conclude it.

The emperor being agreed with Francis upon the principal articles of the peace, departed from Barcelona before he received advice of the conclusion, and arrived the 12th of August at Genoa, with nine thousand men. The peace of Cambray being published shortly after, the Venetians, the duke of Milan, the duke of Ferrara, and the Florentines, whom the King of France had forfaken, faw no other refuge than the emperor's clemency, who had it in his power to make them pay dear for their attachment to France. The difcuffion of their affairs being referred to a conference, which the emperor was to have with the pope at Bologna, each fent ambaffadors to take care of their concerns. Here it was that the emperor enjoined the Venetians to reftore to the pope Ravenna and Cervia, and to himfelf fome places they still held in the kingdom of Naples. Francesco Sforza was reftored to the duchy of Milan, on condition of paying to the emperor four hundred thousand crowns in hand, and five hundred thousand in the space of ten years, at ten payments. The duke of Ferrara having offered to make the emperor arbiter and judge of his differences with the pope, his offer was accepted, Clement VII. thinking nothing could be more for his advantage than to fubmit to the emperor's decision, who was now bound by the treaty of Barcelona to procure him Modena and Reggio, and affift him to take poffeffion of Ferrara. As to the Florentines, it was not poffible to reconcile them with the pope. They would not hearken to any agreement, unless they were affured of preferving their liberty, being refolved to defend it to the last drop of their blood. They offered however to purchase it with a sum of money. But the pope

f And also remitted some of the ceived from France, Rymer, tom. XIV. payments of the rension he yearly re- p. 358.

en

1530. The empctor goes to Genoa, Guicciard. Herbert. Hall.

aud afterwards to Bologna, where he fettles the affairs of Italy. Guicciard.

on his part, offered them all forts of advantages, provided the 1530. family of the Medici were reftored to Florence, upon the fame foot as before the expulsion of the legate. The parties not agreeing, the emperor ordered the prince of Orange to beliege Florence and reftore the Medici.

The emperor having ended his affairs in Italy, was impa- He promifes tient to return into Germany, where the affairs of religion to try to ruin the protefbegan to give him disturbance. For fome time, the pro-tants. testants had infifted continually upon a free council in Ger-Sleidan. many, which was politively promifed, though never intended. During the late war, the emperor had all along amufed them with the hopes of granting this council. But no fooner was the peace concluded, than in his conference with the pope at Bologna he promifed him to do his utmost to reduce them without a council. Mean while, the protestants knowing his defign by his menacing answer to their envoys after the conclusion of the peace, were thinking of joining in a league for their common defence; and this made the emperor uneafy, and obliged him speedily to finish his affairs in Italy, in order to settle those of Germany. Before his departure from He received Bologna, he received the imperial crown at the pope's hands the imperial the 24th of February 153c, on St. Matthias's day, which was the pope. his birth-day, and which, on feveral occafions, had been very Guicciard. fortunate to him g. He set out at length from Bologna on the 22d of March 1530, for Germany, being attended by cardinal Campegio, who was to affift from the pope at the diet of Augsburg.

The prince of Orange invefted Florence according to the Siege of emperor's order, and was flain at the fiege, which the Flo-Florence. Capitularentines desperately maintained. At length, on the 10th of tion. August, they were forced to capitulate, but however on exprefs condition that they fhould enjoy their liberty, leaving it to the emperor to fettle the form of their government. But some days after, the adherents of the Medicis raising a The Medicis tumult in the city, and finding themfelves supported by a great take poffernumber of Spanish officers, who had entered on divers pre-fion of the government. tences, Clement VII. was again put in poffession of the government. Then the emperor, without regarding the arti- Alexander cle of the capitulation, established Alexander de Medici his de Medici fon in-law at Florence, on the fame foot that his anceftors first forehad formerly been, and made the fovereignty hereditary in Florence. his family.

E Since the time of Frederic, 1412, no emperor had been publickly crowned. Herbert, p. 136. X 4 The 328 1530.

Francis's two fons are releafed. Guicciard. Mezerai.

Henry's generofity to Francis. Act. Pub. XIV.p. 360, 362, 3,8, 380.

Henry purfues at Rome the bufineis of the divorce. Herbert. Burnet. Hall.

The 1st of June this year, Francis received his two fons, who were hoftages in Spain, upon paying the emperor twelve hundred thousand crowns in hand, and giving fecurity for the reft of the fum. After that, he married Leonora, pursuant to the treaty of Cambray. Had he been obliged to find ready money to pay Henry what the emperor owed him, according to the tenor of the treaty, very probably he would not fo foon have recovered his fons. But Henry proved a generous friend, who, to enable him to redeem them, freely gave him the emperor's bonds to reftore them to him as well as the pawned jewel above mentioned h. Moreover, he renounced all demands of his charges in affifting him, which, according to Francis's confession extant in the collection of Ibid. p. 361. the publick acts, amounted to the fum of five hundred twelve thousand two hundred twenty two crowns of gold fol, two and twenty pence, fix farthings, in ready money, and acquittances upon the two millions Francis owed him. clogged this great generofity but with one fingle condition, P. 380, &c. that in cafe Francis violated the peace and alliance they had made together, "he fhould ftill be accountable for all thefe fums, to which Francis bound himfelf by letters patents.

> By the execution of the treaty of Cambray, the king of France faw himfelf at length in profound tranquillity, though the late war had cost him immense sums, the loss of Genoa and Milan, the fovereignty of Flanders and Artois, a year's captivity, numberless vexations, and perhaps fome of his honour and reputation. But it was not fo with Henry. ter a vaft charge to support the interests of his ally, he was still embarafied with the affair of the divorce, and in danger of a speedy quarrel with the emperor. However, as he was naturally fleady in his projects, all these obstacles were not able to difcourage him, and he refolved to fee the end of the affair. let what would be the confequence. Thomas Cranmer being then very much in his effeem, he ordered him to write upon the divorce; and the doctor did it with univerfal approbation. After that, he was commanded to accompany the ambaffadors fent by the king to the pope and emperor, to try for the last time to find fome expedient to end the affair, which fo greatly embaraffed him. These ambaffadors found the pope and the emperor at Bologna, and had audience of both. The pope fhowed an inclination to content

h This jewel, in the form of a flower- wood of the true crofs in it. Herbert, de-luce, is faid to have a piece of the p.134.

the king, but durft not act without the emperor's confent, who openly protefted, he would never forfake the queen his aunt. Cranmer maintained his master's cause with great warmth, which hindered not the pope from making him his penitentiary in England to pleafe the king, whom he ftrove to oblige in things of little confequence, whilft he did nothing for him in the principal affair.

Mean while, Henry, purfuant to Cranmer's advice, had Most of the fent able and learned men i into France, Italy, Germany, universities and Switzerland, to confult the universities concerning the di-decide in favorce. We find in the collection of the publick acts, the king. opinions of the universities of Angers, Paris, Bourges, Or-Burnet. leans, Thouloufe, Bologna, Ferrara, Padua, all uniform, Act. Pub. XIV, p.397 declaring that Julius IId's difpensation for Henry's marriage &c. with Catherine being contrary to the divine law, could not be deemed valid. It might be objected, that the determinations of the French universities were sufpicious, by reason of the strift union at that time between Francis and Henry. But the fame thing cannot be faid of those of Padua and Ferrara, and still lefs of that of Bologna, a city belonging to the pope. Dr. Burnet having largely handled this fubject, Vol. I. p. those who have a mind to examine the matter more fully, 85, &c. The mind to examine the matter more fully, 85, &c. may confult his hiftory of the reformation. It will fuffice to sec. observe here, that the question was, whether Henry's marriage with his brother's widow was contrary to the law of God, and upon that fuppofition, whether the pope had power to grant a dispensation. The universities maintained, that fuch a marriage was contrary to the law of God, with which the pope had not power to difpenfe. Oxford and Cambridge Oxford and being likewife confulted decreed the fame thing, though not Cambridge without great opposition from some of the members k. It make the greatest feeins at hrst very strange, that the two English universities scruple.

fhould Burnet. Fiddes.

i To Orleans and Thouleufe were fent fir Francis Brian, Edward Fox, afterward bifhop of Hereford, and mr. William Paget. To Paris, Reginald Pool, of the blood royal. In Italy, the king's agents were dr. Richard Crooke, at Padua ; Hieronimo de Ghi-nuce', bishop of Worcester, and fir Gregory Caffali, at Rome; dr. Stokefley, at Venice; dr. Cranmer, Andrew and John Caffali, were likewife em-ployed in Italy. Burnet, T. I.

that the matter fhould be left to a committee of twenty nine, viz. the vice chancellor, Dr. Edmonds, head of Peter Houfe, ten doctors, fixteen' bachelors of divinity, and the two proctors ; the majority of whom, voted the king's marriage unlawful, but decided not whether the pope had power to difpenfe with fuch a marriage. The king's agents at Cambridge, were Gardiner and Fox. At Oxford, the re-' gent mafters firenvoully opposed the k At Cambridge, it was carried at king, and the doctors and heads were laft with much ado In a convocation, for him. So that the matter remained in fhould be more fcrupulous in the matter than the foreign. But the furprize ceafes, when it is confidered that these foru-The reason ples arose, not from the question itself, but from the consequence, their determination might occasion. Most of the members of the univerfities were furiously averle to Luther's doctrine, which began to spread in England, and were afraid of countenancing it by deciding against the pope. Befides, they faw that the king's marriage with Anne Bullen would follow upon his divorce with Catherine, and this fecond marriage they would have gladly prevented, becaufe Anne Bullen was much inclined to the reformation 1, and expressed a very particular efteem for Cranmer, whole preferment for the fame reafon they dreaded.

329 1530.

1530. S of it. Burnet.

The ambaffadors who had been fent into Italy m, returning without effecting any thing; Henry, who till then had fhown great regard for the pope, refolved to alter his behaviour towards him. He might have known by experience that Clement was to be gained only by his interest. It is certain, if at first he had proceeded with more vigour, and powerfully supported the war in Italy, the pope would never have thought of joining with the emperor. A good English fleet in the Mediterranean would have made Francis master of Naples, and faved the city of Genoa. The pope would thereby have been fo kept in awe, that he would have been glad to have always the king of England for his friend. Inftead of acting in this manner, Henry remained quiet during the whole campaign of 1528, fuffering himfelf to be amufed by the deceitful hopes given him by the pope. So the French were driven out of the kingdom of Naples, and the pope was at liberty to treat with the emperor concerning the recovery of Florence, which he would never have thought of, had the French been superior in Italy. Henry perceived in agitation from the 12th of February, to the 8th of April. At last it was carried in a convocation (from which by an order from the chancellor, fays Wood, all the mafters of arts were excluded, but, according to Burnet, confifting of all the doctors and mafters) •that the bufinefs fhould be decided by thirty three doctors and bachelors of divinity, who declared the marriage of the brother's wife to be contrary to the laws of God and nature, and put the common feal of the univerfity to their decree, on April 8. Longland, bithop of Lincoln, was the king's agent at Oxford. Burnet, tom. I. p. 85, 86. See Fiddes's Coll. p. 180, &c.

1 Having received fome impressions of it in the duchefs of Alençon's court. Burnet, tom. I. p. 87. m The head of this embassy was

Thomas Bullen, earl of Wiltshire, and Ormond, (21 Hen. VIII.) who refufed at his audience of the pope at Rologna, to kifs his toe, though he gracioufly ftretched it out to him. He was accompanied by John Stockefley, elect bishop of London, and Edward Lce. Burnet, vo!. I. p. 87, 95.

Henry's falfe fteps in the matter of the divorce. Burnet.

his error when it was too late to repair it, that is, after the 1530. pope was united with the emperor, and Francis bound by the treaty of Cambray. He was left alone to support himself He is at a against the emperor and pope, and it was very happy for him great loss. that the Turks and the protestants of Germany fo embaraffed the emperor, as to hinder him from thinking of England. So, all means, failing to accomplifh his defign but what could be found in his own kingdom, he began, though a little too late, to make use of the inclinations of his fubjects, who for the most part were not very fond of the pope.

We have feen in feveral places of this hiftory, how at all Difpenition times the English complained of the tyranny of the popes, of the Eng-lish to the and the remedies applied by the parliaments to that grievance. popes, con-It is true, the private interest of the kings rendered these re- trary to the medies in fome measure ineffectual, because, as they fie- interest of quently wanted the popes for their temporal concerns, the laws were not put in due execution. But that altered not the inclinations of the English. The principles of the Lollards were still deeply imprinted in the minds of great numbers. Belides, Luther's books, whereof many were brought into England, had opened the eyes of multitudes; fo that it may be affirmed, at the time I am speaking of, the English in general had quite another notion of religion than their anceftors, especially with respect to the papal authority. The three laft popes, Alexander VI. Julius II. and Leo X. had fhown fo little of religion in their conduct, and Clement VII. fo closely followed their steps, that it was naturally inferred, it was impossible Jefus Christ should have given the government of his church to fuch vicars. Thus the English were very ready to shake off the pope's yoke, if the king for the fake of his own private interest had not supported the exorbitant power fo long complained of. But Clement VII. had The king's no fooner joined with the emperor, than the king's intereft and people's became the fame with the people's. To this chiefly are to be interest becomes the afcribed all the changes mentioned hereafter.

Henry having refolved to make the pope fenfible of the Letters of danger of lofing England, if he continued any longer to fa-great men vour the emperor, caufed a letter worded in ftrong terms to to the pope. Act. Pub. be fent him by the great men of the kingdom, according to XIV.p.405. the example of their anceftors in the reign of Henry III ". Herbert, They Burnet.

fame.

n Lord Herbert fays, it was done by no feffion at that time, the heufes be-the parliament; but that is a miftake, ing prorogued from the 21ft of June, the letter being dated the 13th of July, to the 1ft of October. The letter it it appears by the records there could be, feems was fent about to the chief members

The pope's anfwer. . Herbert. p. 143. Expedient proposed by the pope. Ibid. p. 141.

332

1530.

Henry rejects it.

Proclamation to forbid the receiving any bulls, &c. Sept. 19. Hall. Stow.

lishes his. reafons for Burnet, Sc.

They plainly told him, " That the king's caufe being their " own, if he continued to deny them what was abfolutely " neceffary for their quiet, they were refolved to apply the " remedy themfelves, which was vainly expected from him." This was fufficient to fatisfy him, that the patience of the · English was almost worn out, and they would not suffer themfelves to be curbed or even amufed any longer by the court of Rome. Indeed, the letter had not the defired effect, but however it showed the pope the disposition of the Englifh, and how neceffary it was to use them gently. Wherefore he returned the great men a very moderate answer, vindicating his conduct with respect to the king in the best manner possible. Mean while, he sent for sir Gregory Cassali, the king's ambaffador in ordinary, and hinted to him that the affair might be adjusted by means of a dispensation for the king to have two wives. This we learn from the ambaffador's letter of the 18th of September, wherein after acquainting the king with what the pope faid, he added, that the emperor's ministers were also defirous that the affair should be ended by this expedient. But Henry was fo aware of all the pope's artifices, that he took no notice of the overture. His refolution was, either to have a bull to null the marriage, or to procure himfelf at any rate the fatisfaction he required. And therefore, fearing that the pope would unexpectedly fend into England a bull of excommunication or interdict, he iffued out a proclamation, forbidding under fevere penalties to receive any bull from Rome contrary to the prerogatives of the crown. His defign was to bring the affair before the parliament and clergy, and after gaining thefe two bodies to his interest, to cause it to be determined in England, without Henry pub- regarding the pope's proceedings against him. The difficulty was to prepofiels the people in his favour. To that end, he the divorce, ordered to be printed and published an abstract of the reafons for the divorce, that these reasons being known to all the T. I. p. 97, world, he might meet with lefs opposition in the parliament. The abstract ° contained two principal points. The fust > bers for their hands, and Cavendish tells us with what chearfulnefs cardinal Wolfey figned it. It was fubfcribed by the two archbishops, four bishops, two dukes, two marquiffes, thirteen earls, two viscounts, twenty three barons, twenty two abbots, eleven commoners, most of them the king's fervants. Herbert, p. 142. • Learned men were appointed to compare all that had been written on the fubject, and out of all the tranfcripts of the manufcripts, of fathers, and councils, to collect whatfoever did strengthen it. Three of these manufcripts are in the Cotton-library. All thefe and many more were fummed up in a fhort book, and printed first in Latin, then in English, with the de-terminations of the universities before it. See Burnet, vol. I, p. 97.

was,

OF ENGLAND.

was, That the king's marriage with Catherine was contrary 1530. to the law of God. The fecond, That Julius II. had not power to grant a difpenfation for that marriage, and confequently the difpenfation could not render it lawful. As this affair was the origin of the great events which will hereafter occur, it will not be perhaps unacceptable to the reader to fee the fubftance of the arguments alledged on both fides.

It was faid for the king, I. That the levitical law forbidding a man to marry his brother's wife was not a politive precept, which bound only those to whom it was given, but obliged all mankind without exception. That this evidently appeared, in its being found among many others, which forbid the crimes wherewith the Canaanites were polluted. Now the Canaanites could not be polluted with crimes forbidden only by a politive law given to another nation.

II. Another argument was taken from what John the Baptift faid to Herod in the new teffament, " It is not lawful " for thee to take thy brother's wife," becaufe St. John could allude only to the laws of Mofes, and confequently owned them to be divine.

III. It was fhown from feveral paffages of Tertullian, and writings of the popes, that the church always deemed the levitical prohibitions as parts of the universal law of nature and all mankind. To this was added the authority of divers provincial fynods, of the Conftantinopolitan general council, of the council of Conftance in the condemnation of Wickliff, of many Greek and Latin fathers, and of feveral fchoolmen.

IV. It was proved by the authority of the popes and councils, that a marriage is compleated by the mutual contract of the parties, though it be never confummated. For that reason it was faid, Adonijah could not marry Abishag, who had been his father David's wife, though David never knew her. That upon the fame account, Joseph could not put away Mary without a bill of divorce; a clear evidence that their marriage was compleat, though not confummated. Hence it was inferred, that though prince Arthur had not confummated his marriage, it was not the lefs valid. But it was maintained, that it was as certain as a thing of that nature could be, that the marriage was confummated. It was proved first by violent prefumptions. Secondly, becaufe after Arthur's death, the princefs his widow was fuppofed to be with child, and the never faid any thing to the contrary. It

It is true, it might be objected that Catherine had fince fworn, fhe was never known by that prince. But it was replied, the canon law forbids the taking of oaths, when there are firong prefumptions to the contrary. Befides, the queen's oath could not be reckoned decifive, fince it was defiroyed by the brief produced by her own advocates.

V. Julius's difpenfation being the fole foundation on which the validity of the king's marriage was eftablished, it was shown by a crowd of witness, both antient and modern, That the pope has not power to difpense with the laws of God. Nay, it was affirmed, That if he dispensed with the decrees of the church, it was usurpation, and that several bishops in England itself had resulted the popes when they would have assumed such a liberty.

On the other fide, the queen's advocates replied to these reasons;

Arguments for the queen. I. That the prohibitions in Leviticus were not parts of the moral law, fince God himfelf had difpenfed with them, in commanding the brother to marry his brother's widow. But of what nature foever the law was, if it were difpenfed with by Mofes to the Jews, why might it not be as well done by the pope to the Chriftians?

II. It was faid, the law in Leviticus against marrying the brother's wife must be understood of not taking her while the brother was alive; for after he was dead, by another law, a man was commanded by God himself to marry his brother's wife.

III. The crime St. John Baptift reproached Herod with might be adultery as well as inceft, fince, according to Jofephus and Eufebius, Herod's brother Philip was alive when St. John fpoke.

IV. The popes daily difpenfed, contrary to the laws of God, with vows and oaths, without being cenfured. Befides, it was maintained, the pope was the only judge, whether the prohibition was moral or not.

V. It was alledged, the pope had granted the difpenfation upon a very weighty confideration, to keep peace between the two crowns of Spain and England.

VI. It was urged, that the marriage had fubfifted near twenty years, and never been thought invalid.

VII. Laftly, It was affirmed, if there were any nullities in the bull of difpenfation, the pope was the only competent judge of it.

The

The king's advocates replied to these arguments, and were 1530. answered again by the writers on the queen's fide, both practifing what is very common on fuch occasions, that is, they evaded the force of the reasons of the opposite party, by keeping to generals. I shall fay no more of it. Those that are curious to fee the arguments on both fides, may be fatisfied by reading the hiftory of the reformation of Burnet, England, where they are fully fet forth. It will fuffice to Vol. I. p. remark, that in these disputes was spent the whole year 1530, 97, *c. Henry being very glad the people fhould be thoroughly informed of the affair, before it was brought to the parliament.

Whilft thefe things paffed, cardinal Wolfey remained at his Cardinal country houfe, living betwixt hope and fear, without being Wolfey's uncertain able to form any probable conjecture of the king's behaviour frate. towards him. Though all his goods were feized, and that feemed to denote he intended to flow him no favour, yet he faw from time to time fome rays of goodness shine upon him P, which made him hope that his mafter, who had loved him fo well, would not be for ever inexorable. And indeed, The king the twelfth of February, the king granted him a general par- grants him don of all his offences of what nature foever. Among all avery full pardon. the pardons in the collection of the publick acts, there are Act. Pub. none fo full and particular as this. Then, the king came to XIV. p. an agreement with the cardinal, by which he left him the 366, 371. archbishoprick of York, with all its revenues and dependen- to an agreecies, except York Place. As to the fee of Winchefter and ment. abbey of St. Albans, the king referved to himfelf the reve- p. 365. nues, though he left him the titles. But the cardinal was bound to refign these two benefices when required. In confideration whereof, the king affigned him a thoufand marks fterling a year out of the bishoprick of Winchester, with a promife to grant him the like penfion upon fome other benefice, in cafe this was taken from him. Moreover, he gave p. 375. him to the value of fix thousand three hundred and feventy four pounds, three shillings and feven pence halfpenny, in money and goods, part of those belonging to the cardinal which had been confifcated 9. All the reft remained to the king Ruffel to him with a Turquoife ring, as a token of his care and affection. Herbert, p. 125. Stow, p. 550.

9 That the curious reader may form an effimate from thence of the real fixty five ounces and one eighth, at

P November 1. the king fent fir John now to what it did then, here is a lift of the money and goods as we find it in the original grant : first, in ready money three thousand pounds. Item, in plate nine thousand five hundred proportion the value of money boars three shillings eight pence the ounce, amounteth lar favour that the king was pleafed to leave him any thing.

This was all he preferved of the immense riches acquired

Wolfey tries during his credit. But what afflicted him moft fenfibly, was, in vain to fave his colleges. Barnet. Herbert. Strype's Memi. p. 118.

that his two colleges, founded with fo much pains, and called by his own name, to be an everlafting monument of his glory, were likewife confifcated. He writ to the king upon that fubject, in a manner that perfectly flowed his extreme concern for that lofs. He even entreated Cromwell to use his utmost endeavours to hinder his two colleges from being involved in his ruin. But it was all in vain. The king took poffeffion of all the lands belonging to them r, and depriving them of the name of their founder, endowed them anew in his own.

Notwithstanding all this, Wolfey had still hopes, by reafome hopes. fon of fome marks of friendship given him by the king upon certain occafions. He had permitted him to remove to Richmond, where he was nearer his perfon. Moreover, hearing he was fick, he fent a lord to vifit him in his name, and even caufed Anne Bullen to write to him s. But at the > amounteth to one thousand feven hundred fifty two pounds thirteen fhillings and feven pence half penny. Itein, divers apparel of houfhold, as hangings, &c. amounting to eight hundred pounds. Item, eighty horfes and geldings with their furniture, valued at one hundred and fifty pounds. Item, in mules for the faddle, four, with their furniture, valued at fixty pounds. Item, in mules for carriage fix, with their furniture, valued at forty pounds. In Ling one thousand, valued at fifty pounds. In Cod and Haberden eight hundred, valued at forty pounds. In falt eight waye, valued at ten pounds. In implements of the kitchen, as pots, &c. at eighty pounds. In mutton (fheep) feventy, valued at twelve pounds. In fifty two oxen, valued at eighty pounds. In wearing apparel, to the value of three hundred pounds. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 375.

" They remained in the kings hands till 1532, in which time feveral of the manors and other eftates, particularly in Effex, and Oxfordshire, were granted to fir Richard Page, and other courtiers. In 1532, the king, by Cromwell's and Gardiner's advice, founded anew the college in Oxford,

(now called Chrift Church) and fettled on it two thousand pounds a year; but it was diffolved again, by commiffion, in 1545, and two months after was revived by the king's letters patents : and the next year the king removed the epifcopal fee from Ofney to this college. As for the building, Wol-fey finished only the hall, and the kitchen. Fiddes's life of Wolfey, p. 306, &c. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 4c9, 410, 443. Befides his two colleges, the cardinal founded, in the univerfity of Oxford, lectures of divinity, civil law, medicine, philosophy, mathematicks, greek, and rhetorick. Fiddes, p. 209, &c. * The king fent him a ring fet with a ruby, whereon was his own picture, by dr. Butts, affuring him he was not offended with him in his heart. And in his letter to Anne Bullen, he fays, Good fweetheart, as you love me, fend the cardinal a token at my request, and in fo doing, you fhall deferve our thanks. Whereupon fhe fent him a tablet of gold which hung at her fide. The king fent him allo four loads of rich furniture. Fiddes's life of Wolfey, p. 513; 514.

fame

He has still Fiddes. P. 512.

336 1530.

S

OF ENGLAND.

fame time that the compaffion expressed for him by the king 1530. cherished his hopes, it made his enemies apprehensive of his return to court, and therefore they never cealed to exafperate the king against him. In short, as they could not see him fo near the court without fearing the revival of the king's affection for a minister, he had so passionately loved, they caused an order to be fent him t to withdraw to his diocefe of York. Very probably, Anne Bullen contributed most to his dif- He is fent grace, fince none but a miftrefs could poffibly make the away to York, king forget fuch a favourite. However this be, the cardinal Fiddes. being forced to fubmit, began his journey " to the north Herbert, with a train, though not fo large as usual during his profperity, yet confifting still of a hundred and fixty horfe w. He arrived about the end of September at Cawood x, where he ftaid according to the cuftom of the archbishops of York, till things were ready for the ceremony of his inftallment, which was to be performed in a month with a magnificence Pol. Virg. little fuitable to his prefent condition. But whilft he was Stow. preparing to enjoy in his archbishoprick the small remains of authority, which he imagined would be ftill left him, he was arrefted by the earl of Northumberland y for high treafon. and arrefted He would have infifted at first upon his privilege as cardinal. of high treaton, But the earl told him, that fhould not hinder him from exe- Nov. 4. cuting the king's orders. At the fame time his phyfician was Herbert. feized, and fent to London with his legs tied to his horfe. Hall. Stow. It is not known to this day, whether the king had been prepoffefied that the cardinal had a defign upon his life, which however is not very probable. Be this as it will, he fet for- He is conward by eafy journies to London, extremely concerned to London. think, he was going to appear as a criminal in a city, where He dies by he had before commanded with almost a fovereign autho- the way. rity. But in all likelihood his grief turned to his advantage, as it threw him into a fit of fickness, which constrained him to ftop at Leicefter abbey, where he ended his days the 30th of November 2. Before he expired, he faid to the His laft king's words.

t By Thomas Cromwell, his late fervant. Fiddes, p. 514. ^u But before he fet out, he received from the king the fum of ten thoufand pounds. Cavendish.

w And feventy two carts with his houshold stuff. Burnet, tom. I. p. 81. * A caffle about twelve miles from York, belonging to the archbishops.

y Henry Percy; and by fir Walter Welsh. Fiddes, p. 522. Hall fays, VOL. VI that he had writ to the pope and feveral princes, letters reflecting on the king, and firred them to revenge his cause, fol. 104.

2 In his way he flayed a fortnight at the earl of Shrewsbury's, at Sheffield Park, where he was taken ill one day at dinner. Cavendish fays, speaking of the effects of his diftemper, it was apparent he had poifoned himfelf. By the mediation of the earl, fir Wil-Y 'liam

Herbert. Cavend, Stow. Hollingfh.

king's officer who flood near his bed : " If I had ferved "God as diligently as I have done the king, he would not " have given me over in my grey hairs." But I do not know whether he had reafon to boaft of his zeal and difintereftedness in the fervices he had done the king. He added, speaking to the fame officer, that if, as he thought him worthy, he fhould ever be admitted to the king's council, he fhould take care what he put in his head, for he would never be able to put it out again. This feems to intimate, he had counfelled the king to undertake the divorce, which afterwards he would have diffuaded him from. And indeed, he defired the fame perfon to tell the king, that he prayed him to call to remembrance what had palled betwixt them about the divorce, and hoped, that when he fhould be lefs prejudiced, he would do him more justice. This shows that he looked upon that affair as the fole caufe of his difgrace. Thus died this famous cardinal, the proudeft and most haughty of men, and we may add, the most ambitious and most greedy of estates and honours. It is affirmed, that while he governed the king, he never gave him advice without a view to his own interest. This alone would be sufficient to obfcure all the fine qualities he might otherwife have, but which in the main amounted only to a great penetration, whereof he made an ill ufe. The king flowed a concern for his death a. And yet, fince he had ordered him to be arrefted for high treason, very probably his ruin was determined. Henry was of a temper to accomplish whatever liam Kingfton, constable of the Tower, . (the perfon to whom he fpoke his laft words) was fent by the king to convey him to London. With much ado, being hardly able to fit his horfe, he got to Leicester abbey, where upon their coming out to receive him, he faid, father abbot, I am come to lay my bones among you. He was buried in the abbey chapel, of which even the ruins are not at prefent to be difcovered. He died the 28th of November, according to Burnet ; and according to Fiddes the 29th, of a dyfentery, p. 529. He had begun a monument for himfelf with his own image, which one Benedetto, a flatuary of Florence took in hand 1524, and continued till 1529, receiving for fo much as was already done, four thousand two hundred and fifty ducats. The defign whereof was fo glorious, that it exceeded far that of Henry VII. But upon his death the king feized what was finished and called it his. Thus the cardinal's tombhad the fame fate with his college. He is faid to behave mighty well during the time he was in the north, after his difgrace, and to become very popular. As no man (fays Polydore) did ever rife with fewer virtues, fo (fays lord' Herbert) few that ever fell from for high a place had leffer crimes objected against him. He is faid (according to one of the articles of his impeachment) to leave two natural fons behind him, whereof one called Winter, was load. ed with church preferments. Herbert, Burnet, Stow, &c. Fiddes, p. 521, &cc. 530. a He was very much afflicted with the news of it, and faid he would have given twenty thousand pounds he had but lived. Herbert, p. 148.

The king flows fome concern for his death. Herbert,

he

he undertook ^b. This will plainly appear hereafter, in his 1530. extraordinary feverity to perfons, who doubtlefs were not fo guilty as this favourite.

The affair of the divorce c and its confequences employing Henry during the refidue of his life, it will for the future be the principal thing I shall have to speak of to the end of this reign. But as by the alterations introduced by this prince into his kingdom, his affairs led him to concern himfelf with the troubles of Germany, it is neceffary, for the understanding of the fequel, briefly to mention what paffed in that country.

The emperor's aim in calling the diet of Augfburg, was Affairs of rather to inflame than appeale the religious troubles. Since Germany as to religion. he made peace with France, and Italy was as it were fubject sleidan to his yoke, he was forming vast projects. He faw himself master of Spain, Italy, and the Low Countries ; his brother Ferdinand was now king of Bohemia, and had been elected king of Hungary. With these advantages, he hoped to be able to fubdue the reft of Europe. It was necessary to begin with Germany, where he had great power, as emperor and archduke of Auftria, becaufe if he once became abfolute in the empire, and could difpole of the forces of the German princes, he imagined France and England would not be able to refift him. The troubles caufed by religion in Germany feemed to him a very fpecious pretence to arm against the protestants, judging, that after ruining them by the help of the catholicks, these would in their turn be eafily fubdued. I cannot be accufed here of afcribing to this monarch defigns he never really had, fince it is notorious that himfelf and fucceffors purfued gradually, and, I may fay, openly the execution of the fame project. The wars that afflicted Europe for more than a century, were folely excited by the boundless ambition of the house of Austria, whom the other fovereigns were concerned to oppose.

Since Luther's preaching in Germany, the reformation Progress of had made fo great progrefs, that feveral princes of the en-thereforms; pire, and many Hans Towns had openly embraced it. As Sleidan. they were accused of introducing many innovations in religion, in answer to that charge, they protested, their intent was only to adhere to the doctrine of the gospel and religion. of the primitive church. And therefore, they demanded

b Bishop Burnet justly observes, that king Henry loved to raife mean perfons; and upon the least distaste to throw them down, and facrifice them to publick discontents. Tom. I: p. 9. c It was called the king's weighty affair. Burnet.

Y 2

that

that a free council might be held in fome city of Germany, 1530. I where the religious differences might be calmly examined by the word of God. But this was a method which their adverfaries could not allow. They supposed, as a thing certain, that the religion professed before Luther's appearance was the true religion, and being without fpot, wrinkle, or the like, had no need of reformation. According to that principle, they thought the point was not to examine it at all, but to compel the recufants or hereticks to conform. This was the conftant maxim, long fince followed by the Romifh clergy, and which caufed them to use fire and fword to extirpate those they were pleased to term hereticks. But in the fituation of Germany, at the time I am speaking of, it was not eafy to practife that maxim. It was not private perfons only who declared against the Roman church, but cities, whole nations, and fovereigns. So the zealous abettors of the old religion were not in condition to reduce them by force. Wherefore they chofe to feed them with hopes of a free council, till the affairs of Europe were fo difpofed, that it might be hoped to reduce them by way of authority. Several diets had been held upon that fubject in Germany, where, contrary to the opinion of the court of Rome, the emperor and the catholick princes had been obliged to conceal their fentiments and confent to a toleration, which however left them at liberty to act another time, according to their real principles.

> When Luther began to appear, the religious disputes turned only upon the exceffive abufes of the papal power, and a few other points. Then Luther had on his fide almost all the lay princes of Germany, and many Hans Towns, each of which was a republick. From that time, he made new discoveries, and published them to the world. But he had not upon all the articles the fame number of followers, as upon that of the papal authority. Befides, the emperor and the zealous catholicks oppofed with all their power the progress of the reformation. Care was taken to intimidate such as inclined that way, or to continue them in the old religion by promifes, by places, by pofts, which did not a little help to confirm them in their first fentiments. . So for fome years, the reformers used all possible endeavours to gain profelytes, and the Romifh clergy were as diligent to hinder their progrefs. Mean time, whilft they ftrove only in this manner, the reformation daily took root, which obliged the adverfaries to feek other means to prevent its growth, those hitherto ufed not proving very effectual.

In 1524 Charles V. coming to the diet of Worms, fent 1530. for Luther, and after a hearing banifhed him the empire with all his adherents, by a formal decree in the diet's name. But fome pretend, the diet was not concerned in the decree, However, the emperor perfifted to maintain it. But it feems the Germans confidered it not as obligatory. The next year, the diet held at Noremberg produced againft the court of Rome a hundred grievances, of which they demanded the redrefs by means of a free council.

Another diet held at the fame place paffed a decree, whereby it was refolved to demand a free council in Germany. But upon their diffolution, the catholicks affembled by themfelves at Ratifhon, and ordered the decree of Worms to be executed.

In another diet at Spires in 1526, the emperor caufed it to be declared, that he meant not that any refolution fhould be taken concerning the affairs of religion, but only concerning the method of executing the decree of Worms, till there fhould be a general council. But as this council was yet very remote, the diet decreed, the emperor fhould be prayed to procure a council in Germany within a year, and in the mean while, every one fhould fo govern himfelf in point of religion, as to be able to give an account of his conduct to God and the emperor.

During these transactions, the war which the Turks had carried into Hungary, suspended for some time the execution of Charles V's projects against those who had embraced the new religion, because he wanted the affistance of all the German princes, as well protestants as catholicks ^d. Besides, his war then with France suffered him not to think much of the affairs of Germany. But in 1529, being upon the point of making peace with France, he thought he might talk in a higher strain. He called a diet at Spires, where it was ordered that those who had hitherto obeyed the decree of Worms, should continue to observe it, and the rest that had not submitted, should make no innovations in religion, nor hinder their subjects from going to mass. Against this decree the elector of Saxony and Brandenburgh, the landgrave of Hesse, and the princes of Lunenburg, made a folemm protestation, from whence all their party were called d January 21, king Henry empowered Thomas, earl of Wiltfhire and Ormond, John Stokefley, bishop elect of London, dr. William Lee, and dr. William Benet, to conclude a league with the pope, the emperor, the kings of France, Portugal, &c. against the Turk. See Rymer's Fod. tom. XIV. P. 354-protestants.

proteftants. The emperor, who was then in Italy, very roughly received the proteftation brought to him by deputies, and thereby obliged the proteftants to unite for their common defence, the emperor difcovering by his words that he had ill defigns againft them. In the diet which was to meet at Augfburg in April 1530, but did not however affemble till June, he was refolved to lay the foundation of his projected war againft the proteftants.

At the opening of the diet, the emperor's chancellor made a long speech, complaining in his master's name of those who had hitherto endeavoured to alter the ancient faith, and cardinal Campegio exhorted the Germans to extirpate the errors that were crept into Germany. That done, the protestants defired, they might declare their belief before the diet. This was denied them, and they were made to take as a favour the leave granted them to deliver their confession The landgrave of Heffe feeing fo great of faith in writing. partiality in the diet, withdrew without taking leave ; whereupon the emperor commanded the gates of Augfburg to be fhut, fhowing, he intended to use violence towards those that remained in the city. But upon the elector of Saxony's remonstrances, he ordered them to be opened. In short, after many debates °, he caufed to be published in the diet's name, a decree entirely against the protestants, and which upon the hopes he gave them of a general council, obliged them to deftroy whatever had been done in point of religion to that day.

The diet ending in this manner, the emperor ordered the archbifhop of Mentz to affemble the electors, to proceed to the election of a king of the Romans, intending to caufe his brother Ferdinand to be chofen. The proteftants firenuoufly oppofed this meeting, affirming, there was no occafion to elect a king of the Romans, and demonstrating the inconveniencies which would arife from his defign to render the imperial crown as it were hereditary to the houfe of Auftria. In fine, feeing that notwithstanding their remonftrances it was defigned to proceed to the election, they met at Smalcald the 22d of December 1530, and concluded a defensive league against all who should attack them on account of religion. Then they made a formal protestation against the intended election of a king of the Romans

e In one of which, upon the proteflants affirming theirs was the ancient religion, the emperor would needs difpute himfelf, which the Spanish writers fay he did with that cagernes, that he drew his dagger. Herbert, p. 150.

2

without

League of Smalcald.

OF ENGLAND.

without their confent. In this fituation were the affairs of 1531. religion in Germany about the end of the year 1530.

After the emperor had quitted Italy, the pope's nuntio Theemperor continually pressed him to pronounce judgment upon the affair difobliges the of the duke of Ferrara. The pope could not imagine but affair of the judgment would be in his favour, confidering the em-Ferrara. peror's engagement with him, by the treaty of Barcelona. Guicciard. But whether the emperor had more fully examined the matter, or for fome other reason, he gave fentence, that Modena and Reggio belonged of right to the duke of Ferrara; but to fatisfy the pope, he fhould pay a hundred thoufand ducats, for which the pope fhould be obliged to give him the investiture of Ferrara, as granted to his, predeceffors; and to begin to execute this fentence, he delivered Modena to the duke. The pope, extremely difpleafed with a judgment to different from what he expected, refufed to fubmit to it, and in hopes of feizing Ferrara, would not receive the hundred thousand ducats offered him by the duke.

Clement VII. being thus incenfed against the emperor, Francis I. had great inclination to be reconciled with the kings of tries to gain France and England, imagining he should be received with the pope. open arms. Indeed, Francis I. had unwillingly agreed to the treaty of Cambray, and folely becaufe there was no other way to recover his fons. But fince he had received them, he had been thinking how to retrieve what he had loft by that treaty. To this end, he privately laboured to fow jealoufies among the princes, by making them apprehenfive of the emperor's ambition, and promifing them affiltance. As foon as he was informed of the pope's difcontent, he thought, nothing fhould be neglected to gain him to his interest at fo favorable a juncture. Wherefore he proposed a marriage He offers to between Catherine de Medici daughter of the late duke marry his fon Lorenzo, and the duke of Orleans his fecond fon; an ho- the duke of Orleans with nour to which the family of the Medici durft never afpire, Catherine t. the king had not offered it himfelf. On the other hand, de Medici. Henry knowing the union between the pope and the emperor was the fole caufe of the obstacles in the affair of the pope. divorce, did not question, he should easily effect his defigns, if he could fet them at variance. But two things He thinks hindered him from applying himfelf to that means. The first himfelf no was, he could not truft the pope. The fecond, that he bliged to re-began to find his fubjects much more inclined to fhake off ly upon him. the papal yoke, than he had imagined, and therefore did not think himfelf under a neceffity to depend upon the pope.

Y 4

If he had at first humbly addressed to the pope, it was partly becaufe he feared the people's prejudice in favour of Chrift's vicar. But when he found this prejudice was not fo ftrong as he had believed, he never troubled himfelf about the pope's opposition. His kingdom being fafe from invalions by land, he had nothing to fear from any prince in Europe, provided his fubjects were not terrified with the thunders of the Vatican. But the English were not in that respect the fame as formerly. Wickliff had begun to enlighten them; the conduct of the late popes had increased their light; and Luther's books and followers had quite opened their eyes. Since the fpreading of the new doctrine in England, the pope's authority was fo difcredited, that the Englifh for the most part wished for a favourable opportunity to throw off a yoke they had fo long groaned under. This made the king refolve to have his caufe tried by the parliament and convocation.

He imparts the affair of the divorce to the parliament. Herbert. Burnet.

Act. Pub. XIV.p.390, &c. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

The clergy decide in favour of the king. _ Burnet.

The parliament meeting the 6th of January, the chancellor opened the feffion with a fpeech, declaring, that the king earneftly wifhed to annul his marriage, not from difhoneft motives, as fome laboured to make his people believe, but for the peace of his confcience, and the welfare of the kingdom, being unwilling to leave the fucceffion of the crown in danger of being difputed. Then he caufed a great number of books and treatifes written on that fubject, with abstracts of feyeral authors both antient and modern, to be brought with the determinations of the univerfities of France, Italy and England, which were all left upon the table to be examined at leifure f. The king's defign was alfo brought before the convocation, who declared, they were fatisfied the king's marriage was contrary to the law of God. The king required no more at that time. He had another important affair to debate with the clergy, which was to be decided before this was farther examined. Very likely, the convocation being informed of the king's intent, the more readily gave their opinion for him, as they perfectly f The king first brought in the books and determinations of the universities to the houle of lords, and after they were read and confidered there, the chancellor did on the 20th of March, (or, according to lord Herbert, on the 31st) with twelve lords finitual and temporal, go down to the house of commons, and shewed them the books, and produced twelve original papers, with the feals of the univerfities to them, which fir Brian Tuke read openly in the houfe; when that was done, the chancellor fpoke the fpeech mentioned above. So that he did not open the feffion of parliament with it, as Rapin fays a few lines above. See Burnet, tom, I. p. 105. Herbert, p. 152. Hall, fol. 195.

knew

344 1531. knew how much they fhould want his favour in the business 1531. in hand, which was of the utmost confequence.

Cardinal Wolfey had been accufed by the attorney gene- All the clerral, of exercifing in England his Legatine authority without By are acthe king's fpecial licence, and of difpofing as legate of feveral cufed of breaking the benefices, contrary to the ftatutes of provifors and præmu- ftatutes of nire. Hence it naturally followed, that those who had præmunire. owned his authority, and appeared in his courts, were e- Herbert, Burnet. qually liable to be indicted. By this means, all the clergy were in the fame cafe, fince there was fcarce one but what had applied to him during the course of his legateship. So, after the king had procured of the convocation an approbation of his proceedings concerning the divorce, he ordered an indictment to be brought into the king's bench against all the clergy, for breaking the laws of the realm ⁸. He had in this a double view; the first to draw a good fum from the clergy; the fecond, to humble that powerful body, and fo leffen their great credit with the people, who before had always feen them supported by the royal authority. He knew he fhould meet with the greatest oppofition from the clergy in the affair of the divorce. For that reason, he was very glad to put it out of their power to hurt him, by keeping them as it were in dependence, and by fowing a kind of division between the clergy and people, by the fatisfaction these would probably express at the difgrace of the ecclefiafticks, who had ever treated them with great haughtinefs. He thereby put the clergy under a neceffity of recurring to the royal protection, and confequently of shewing less zeal for the interest of the court of Rome. This fucceeded according to his expectation. In vain did the clergy plead, that the king himfelf had connived at the cardinal's proceedings. What had not been ferviceable to Wolfey, was not capable of excufing them that had owned his authority. So the court proceeded to a fentence, that They are the clergy were all out of the king's protection, and liable condemned. to the pains in the flatute of præmunire. The people were Stow. extremely pleafed, and particularly the favourers of the new Hollingfh. religion, to fee the clergy humbled to fo great a degree. On the other hand, the clergy plainly perceived, that as the laity flood affected, it would be in vain to refift the king. They could expect no more affiftance from Rome. Since the pope had quarrelled with the king, he had loft all his s Namely, the flatutes against provisions and provisors. Burnet, tom, I. p. 106.

345

Herbert.

power ;

They offer the king 100,0001. An act is drawn up, wherein the clergy calls the church of England.

346

1531.

Act. Pub. March 22.

Opposition Burnet. Herbert.

power; and as the king fhewed he would no longer regard him, the thunders of the Vatican were looked upon with contempt. The clergy, in this their ill fituation, refolved to purchase the king's favour at any rate, finding they could no longer depend upon the people, who were much altered from what they were formerly. So the convocation of Canterbury having debated upon the affair, refolved h to offer the king a hundred thousand pounds for a pardon. Purfuant to the refolution, fome of their members were ordered to. draw an act for that purpose. Probably, they who were him head of charged with this commission were friends of the court, and had a mind to take this opportunity to give the king a prerogative which none of his predeceffors had ever enjoyed.

Lord Herbert and doctor Burnet fay, the convocation refolved to prefent a petition to the king, to pray him to accept of a hundred thousand pounds. But as this instrument is extant in the collection of the publick acts, it may XIV. p.413. now be spoken of with greater exactness. It was not a petition, but a publick act of the clergy, in form of letters patents, whereby they gave that fum to the king. It was faid in the instrument, that it was, first, in confideration of his great merit. Secondly, in testimony of the clergy's gratitude for the great benefits he had procured the catholick church, as well by his pen as his fword. Thirdly, for his zeal against the Lutherans, who were labouring to destroy the church of England, of which the clergy acknowledged the king fole protector, and supreme head i. Lastly, in hopes he would be pleafed to grant the clergy and all their members, a pardon of all the offences committed against the statutes of provisors and præmunire.

When this inftrument was read in the convocation, many to that utle. difliked that the clergy fhould be made to fay, that they acknowledged the king for protector and supreme head of the church of England. Some imagined, it was inferted through inadvertency and exceffive flattery, whereof the pen-, ners of the inftrument had not confidered the confequence. Others faid, it was intended to furprize the convocation, by inferting these words in the body of an instrument, which was only to grant a fum to the king. They added, these words, which feemed to be put in by accident, and without > h On January 24. This fum was to be levied in five years. Rymer, tom. XIV. p. 414.

> i - Cojus fingularem protectorem, unicum & supremum dominum, & quantum per Christi legem licet, etiam fupremum caput ipfius majestatem recognoscimus.----Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 414.

design,

OFENGLAND.

defign, were however of very great confequence, and as the convocation had not taken any refolution upon that point, L they were for razing them out. But on the other hand, those who were in the secret, pretended the words could not be put out by a formal refolve, without difpleafing the king, and giving him occafion to refufe the offered compensation. This cauled fuch debates, that they were forced to put off the decision of the affair to the next day. It was not without reason that several dreaded the confequence which might very naturally be drawn from these words, fince it was evident, the clergy was thereby engaged to acknowledge the pope no longer head of the church of England, which could not have two fupreme heads at once. This was in effect The king the king's intention, as well as theirs who had penned or extorts the clergy's cone drawn the inftrument, as plainly appeared the next day. fent. Thomas Cromwell, with others of the king's council, going Herbert. to the convocation very clearly hinted, that the point in Burnet, debate yesterday was very agreeable to the king, and he could not but confider the oppofers as very difaffected perfons. After fuch a declaration, there was not one that durft directly oppofe it, efpecially as the archbifhop and feveral other prelates openly maintained, that the king was truly the fupreme head of the church of England. So the act passed as it was drawn. Only fome moved to add this reftriction, as far "as is confiftent with the law of Chrift." But it was not the king's intention to leave a door for those to escape, who should hereafter dispute his supremacy k. The instrument being sealed the 22d of March, was presented to the king, who very gracioufly accepted both the clergy's prefent, and his new title, of which he afterwards made great ufe. The convocation of the province of York refolved likewife to give the king eighteen thoufand eight hundred and forty pounds. But as they omitted in the grant to acknowledge the king fupreme head of the church of England, they were told, that their prefent would not be accepted, if they spoke not like the convocation of Canterbury. So the clergy of York province were forced to infert the fame acknowledgment in their inftrument. In this

k Though archbishop Parker and our author fay, the act passed without the refiriction, yet it appears by feveral passages in Henry's letter to bishop Tunstal, who in the convocation at York had protested against it; that the words quantum per Chrifti legem licet were inferted, and the act fo paffed, by nine bishops, (the bishop of Rochester being one) and fifty two abbots and priors, and the major part of the lower house of convocation, and particularly Stephen Gardiner. Burnet, vol. I. p. 112. Herbert, p. 151.

manner

347 1531.

348

1531. The clergy of York province are low the example of those of Canterbury.

Pardon granted to the clergy. The commons want the laity to be included in it. fended at it. The pardon paffes. The laity pardoned. See Statut. Herbert. Burnet. Stow. Monafteries compound with the king. The people rejoice at the clergy's difgrace.

manner the king procured, or rather extorted from the clergy, the title of supreme head of the church of England. It is certain, that though fome freely gave it him, yet the major part were not of that opinion 1. This is evident from forced to fol- the method ufed to obtain it. The acknowledgment was procured in the manner we have feen, by Warham archbifhop of Canterbury, Thomas Cromwell, and fome others, who verily believed there was no occasion for the pope. Those who flattered themselves at first, that the words were inferted without defign in the inftrument brought into the convocation of Canterbury, might have feen their error, if they had attended to another article in the fame inftrument, and which was also inferted in that of the province of York, namely, that the clergy did promife for the future neither to make nor execute any conftitution without the king's licence. This was, in other words, acknowledging the king for fupreme head of the church of England. We fhall fee hereafter what use Henry made of this new title.

The king being fatisfied with the clergy, granted them a pardon in ample form. But when the pardon was brought into the house of commons, they refused to pass it, unless the laity, who might have been guilty of the fame offences, were allo included m. Henry offended at their opposition, fent them word, he would be mafter of his own favours, The kingof- and not fuffer them to be forced from him. The king's refolution terrified the commons, who to avoid his indignation, paffed the pardon as it was, throwing themfelves upon his mercy as to what concerned the laity. Then the king, fatisfied with their fubmiffion, granted to his temporal fubjects a pardon like that to his fpiritual. It feems however, that the colleges and monasteries were excepted, who not being included in the pardons, were forced to compound with the king, as we find in the collection of the publick acts.

So far were the people from rifing, (as they would doubtlefs have done, had they been under the fame prejudice with their anceftors in the reigns of Henry II. and king John;) that on the contrary, joy was visibly painted on their faces, being highly delighted to fee the clergy humbled. Thus

1 When archbishop Warham, upon fome not fpeaking for or against it, faid, that filence was to be taken for confent, they cried out, we are all filent then. Herbert, p. 851.

m They apprehended, that, either they might be brought into trouble, or at leaft their having tranfgreffed the statutes, might be made use of to draw a fubfidy from them. Burnet, tom. I. p. 113.

that body, fo formidable heretofore, inftead of daring to 1531. refift the king, were conftrained to fly to his protection, becaufe they faw plainly, the people fhewed no concern at their difgrace, and they had no remedy elfewhere ".

When the pope heard what had paffed in England, he The pope was terribly embarraffed. He faw Henry purfuing fuch mea- diffembles his fentifures as would probably be attended with fatal confequences. ments. However, he durft not venture to proceed haughtily, for fear Herbert. of engaging in a quarrel, which he forefaw would not be Burnet, to his advantage. Befides his not being pleafed with the emperor, he faw him upon the point of being fully employed by the Turks, and the German protestants, at a time when France and England were in strict union. So, perceiving no affiftance fpeedy enough, in cafe he fhould attempt to exert his authority, he chose to be filent, in expectation of a proper feafon to act, or at least to be reconciled to the king.

This affair being ended, Henry prorogued the parlia-Henry tries ment °. Then he ordered the determinations of the uni- in vain to bring the versities to be printed, with the opinions of the learned queen to concerning his marriage, that against the next fession every confent to one might be informed of the state of the cafe and of his the divorce. Herbert, motives to profecute the divorce. Mean while, as in put- Burnet. ting away the queen, his intent was to marry Anne Bullen, Strype's he paffionately wifhed the queen would be perfuaded to con-Hall. fent to the divorce, in order to avoid the inconveniencies Hollingth, which might arife from her obstinacy. To that purpose, he n During this feffion of parliament, one Richard Roufe, a cook, on the 16th of February, poifoned fome foop in the bishop of Rochester's kitchen, with which feventeen perfons were mortally infected ; one of the gentlemen died of it, and fome poor people that were charitably fed with the remainder, were also infected, one woman dying. The perfon was apprehended, and by act of parliament (22 Hen. VIII.) poifoning was declared treafon, and Roufe was attainted and fentenced to be boiled to death, which was to be the punishment of poisoning for all times to come; (but was repealed I Ed. VI. and I Mariæ I.) The fentence was executed in Smithfield foon after. Burnet. Stow, p. 560. Hall, fol. 199.

o It was prorogued, on March 31, to the 13th of October. The most remarkable flatutes enacted during this fession, were : 1. That no master, wardens, or fellowship of crafts, and trades, nor any rulers of fraternities, take from henceforth of any apprentice, or any other perfon, for the entry of any apprentice into their faid fellowfhip, above two fhillings and fixpence; nor for his entry, when his years and term is expired, above three fhillings and four pence, upon pain of forfeiting forty pounds. 2. That four juffices of the peace in every fhire, whereof one to be of the quorum, shall have power and authority to enquire, hear, and determine, in the general feffions of the peace, all matters relating to bridges and highways. This act alfo explains by whom bridges and highways are to be repaired. See Statute, 21 Hen. VIII.

THEHISTORY

350

Hall. Hollingfh.

Three perfons burnt for religion. Herbert. Fox. fent fome bifhops and lay-lords ^p, earneftly to prefs her, either to confent to the divorce, or refer the decifion of the affair to four prelates and four feculars. But as fhe could could not be prevailed with to defift from her appeal to the pope ^q, he fent her word to chufe where fhe would refide in any of his manors, and, the 14th of July 1531, took his leave of her, at Windfor, intending never to fee her more ^r.

What had lately paffed in the parliament and convocation encouraged the well-wifters to a reformation in the church, to which they already faw fome preparatives. For this reafon, religious difputes became more frequent and publick than formerly. But the king perceiving what inferences would be drawn from his firft proceedings, was pleafed to fhow, that in throwing off the papal yoke, he defigned not to ftrike at the fundamental truths of religion. So, to fruftrate thofe who had any fuch thought, he commanded the laws againft hereticks to be rigoroufly executed. This occafioned the death of three proteftants, namely, Bilney, Bayfield, and Baynham, of whom the two firft were burnt this year, and the other in the following April ^s.

Affairs of Germany. Sleidan. Herbert,

1 - - - -

Whilft thefe things were transacting in England, the affairs of Germany were more embroiled. In the beginning of the year, Ferdinand of Austria king of Bohemia and Hungary was elected king of the Romans, notwithstanding the protestation of the confederates of Smalcald, and crowned a few days after at Aix la Chapelle. This was in confequence of a league concluded between the catholick princes of Germany in the foregoing November. But this league was offensive, whereas that of Smalcald was only defensive. Never had the protestants any defign to force the confeiences of fuch as differed from them in opinion. But the intent of the catholick league was to compel the protestants to return to the church, they had forfaken. These protested against Ferdinand's election as unnecessary and contrary to the usual forms. But their protestation had no effect.

P Of his council, the last day of May, to Greenwich. Herbert, p. 153. Hall, fol. 199.

9 Her answer to the lords was, "That she prayed God to send the "king a quiet conscience, but that "the was his lawful wife, and would "abide by it, till the court of Rome "declared the contrary." Burnet, tom, I. p. 114. Hall, fol. 200.

21 1

r She removed first to Moor, then to Easthiamstead, and at last to Ampthill, where she stayed longer. Burnet, tom. I. p. 114.

⁵ Thomas Bilney, batchelor of both laws, was burnt August 19. Bayfield, a monk of Bury, November 27, 1531, and Baynham, a gentleman and lawyer, April 30, 1532. See Fox.

The

OF ENGLAND.

The reft of the year was spent in fundry negotiations, wherein the emperor feemed to have no other aim than to adjust the religious differences, though in effect his defign was only to amule the protestants, and hinder them from taking measures for their defence, when they should be attacked, As they were not ignorant of his artifices, they writ on that fubject to the kings of France and England, who returned them favourable anfwers, with a promife of affiftance in cafe it was attempted to opprefs them. Not that thefe two monarchs defired to countenance the reformation, but it was their interest to protect the German protestants, because their deftruction could not but exceedingly increase the emperor's power. Indeed, this was one of the chief means whereby that prince intended to execute his vaft defigns.

Whilft the emperor was forming projects to become ma-1532. fter of Germany, under colour of fupporting the interests of religion and the empire, Francis I. was trying to create him Francis tries troubles capable of producing fome change which he might to raife the improve. His vexation to have been forced to fign the treaty troubles. of Cambray threw him upon earneftly feeking means to re-Guicciard, pair his loffes, and efpecially to recover Genoa and Milan. Mezerai. To that end, he carefied or threatened the pope, according as he faw it proper to use one or other of these means, and put the protestants of Germany in hopes of a powerful assistance, in cafe they were attacked by the emperor t. But chiefly he laboured to fecure the king of England, becaufe he could be most serviceable to him. He confirmed him, as much as Herbert. possible, in his resolution to push the affair of the divorce, in order to keep him always at variance with the emperor and the pope. Sometimes he intimated to him, that if the justice due to him was obstinately refused, he would join in a league with him to withdraw their dominions from the tyrannical power of the court of Rome. Then, fearing he would agree with the emperor, he advised him speedily to marry Anne Bullen, well knowing it would be a certain means to widen their breach. Nay he fent a letter to the pope, wherein he appeared no lefs concerned than Henry himfelf in the affair of the divorce. Among other things he told him, that if out of complaifance or fear he continued to be governed by the emperor, he must not think it strange that the king of England fhould endeavour to procure by extraordinary means the just fatisfaction he had to long expected in vain ; adding, t And also firred up the Turks to invade the German dominions. Herbert, p. 154.

that

351 1531.

that his interefts were fo ftrictly united with Henry's, that he was indifpenfibly obliged to affift to the utmost of his power a prince of whom he gloried to be the perpetual ally. In fhort, he prayed him to confider, whether it was prudent to give those, who could not be compelled to obey the opportunity and will to withdraw their obedience. But Clement feeing only the emperor's forces in Italy, took care not to follow fuch dangerous counfels.

Francis and Henry try to frighten the emperor and pope. Burnet.

352 1 1532.

two treaties to that end.

Act. Pub. June 23. Herbert.

Divers reports about the treaty.

The two kings finding at length it was impoffible to gain the pope, refolved upon an interview, to contrive means to break the emperor's measures. But they thought proper first to fpread a report, they were going to make a new league, in order to frighten the pope, and hinder him from clofing again with the emperor, from whom he was a little alienated by the affair of Ferrara. Accordingly, they concluded a league at They make London figned the 23d of June. But it is manifest the treaty was made only with the forementioned view, fince it contained but two articles that could have reafonably alarmed the pope or the emperor, had they been known to them. The first was, that in cafe the emperor feized the English mer-XIV. p.435. chants effects in the Low Countries, the king of France would do the fame with respect to the emperor's subjects, the Germans excepted : nay, this article was guarded by fo many reftrictions on the part of the French king, that it plainly appeared to be only a mere pretence to make a treaty. By the fecond, if the king of England was attacked by the emperor, Francis was to fend him an aid of five hundred lances, and if the king of France was invaded, Henry was to affift him with a body of foot not exceeding five thousand men ". As the publick was not acquainted with the particulars of the treaty, feveral reports were fpread. Some faid, the two kings had agreed to join in the league of Smalcald, or at leaft, to fend a powerful aid to the German protestants. Others fancied, that as the Turks threatened Auftria, and the emperor would be unavoidably obliged to lead his forces into that country, Francis would invade at the fame time the duchy of Milan, and Henry carry war into the Low Countries. All thefe reports, though uncertain, made the emperor very uneafy, because they were grounded upon very probable conjectures.

> u When the French ambaffador in England, returned into France, king Henry fent by him fifty thousand crowns, to be employed in the defence of the rights and privileges of the empire. Herbert, p. 154.

The

The interview of the two kings between Calais and Bou-logne was not till October w. They had principally two things in view. The first, to divert the blame thrown on Francis and them by the emperor, in fpreading over all Europe, that interview! whilft Chriftendom was going to be invaded by the infidels, Hall. they remained idle spectators of the danger, without offering Stow: the least affiftance to those who were preparing to defend her. Herbert. Their other view was, to keep the Italians and Germans in the expectation of a fresh war, for fear they should become too compliant to the emperor's will. To effect their defign, they gave one another letters patents; 'whereby they engaged jointly to raife an army of eighty thousand men to ftop the progress of the Turks, and to lead the same either into Germany or Italy, as there fhould be occafion. But this pretended agreement was never put into the form of a treaty. Du Tillet speaks of it in his inventory of the treaties between France and England, by the name of letters of agreement : But there are no figns of it in the collection of the publick acts of England. Wherefore it is not probable, these two monarchs defired to execute this pretended project, the fole aim whereof was to justify them to the world and infpire the emperor and pope with terror. Doubtless that was the reason of their affecting to publish it.

During the interview, Henry complained much of the pope, Francis's and Francis even improved upon him, in a long enumeration Defigns. of the complaints he had received from the Gallican church on account of the court of Rome's exactions. . But this was only to amuse Henry, fince he was at that very time in secret negotiation with the pope concerning the duke of Orleans his fecond fon's marriage with Catherine de Medici. It manifeftly appears by that prince's whole conduct, that his fole aim was to make the king of England's friendship subservient to gain the pope, in order to recover Genoa and Milan, which he had always in view. Wherefore he outwardly expressed a strong attachment to Henry's interest. He even He advises prefied him not to ftay for the pope's dispensation to marry his Henry to marry Anne mistres, who was present at the interview, having lately Bullen. been made marchionels of Pembroke *. Whilft the two kings were together, they feasted one another feveral times, a particular account whereof is needless in this place. Henry w King Henry landed at Calais, &c. Stow, p. 561. October 11, and the interview was on the 20th. See an account of the nobility, and other remarkable perfons that attended him, in Hall, fol. 206,

VOL. VI.

* September 1, with a penfion of a thousand pounds a year: Hall, fol, 206.

Z

353 came

354

1532. The kings vifit one another. ries Anne Bullen. Burnet. T.III. p.70. Hall The Turks threaten Hungary. Theemperor is at a lofs, Sleidan.

came to fee Francis at Boulogne, and Francis returned his visit at Calais y. They parted the 30th of October to return, the one to Paris, the other to London. But by reafon of the bad weather, Henry staid fome days at Calais z, where Henry mar- it is faid he privately married Ann Bullen a. It is more probable however, as fome affirm, that it was not till the January following b.

> During this whole year, the emperor was greatly embarraffed. Soliman emperor of the Turks threatned to invade. Hungary with a powerful army, which he accordingly did. Germany was in trouble, becaufe the protestants who had now been menaced, were taking effectual measures for their defence, and refused to acknowledge Ferdinand of Auftria for king of the Romans. On the other hand, the emperor was not ignorant of the pope's difcontent on account of the duke of Ferrara's affair, and that the kings of France and England were using their utmost endeavours to draw him off from his party, in order to difturb Italy, Moreover, the Italians were quiet, only because there was still an imperial army in Italy and no preparation in France to support them, in cafe they attempted to hold up their head. Mean while, in the midit of this feeming tranquility, they eagerly wished to fee fome revolutions to free them from their apprehenfions of the emperor's over-grown power. In fine, the interview of Francis and Henry extremely troubled the emperor, apprehenfive as he was, that if Soliman profpered in Hungary, they would embrace that opportunity to invade the duchy of y Francis went back from Boulogne with Henry,' in this order, that while Francis was on French ground, he gave place, but when he came to the Engglish pale, Henry gave him the precedence. Being now come near Calais, the duke of Richmond, Henry's natural fon, a goodly young gentleman, bravely attended, met them. The lodging which Francis was brought to, was most richly furnished with cloth of gold and tiffue, imbroidered in fome places with pearls and precious flones. There feveral fervices were brought in a hundred and feventy difhes, all of maffy gold. The marchionels of Pembroke made them a curious and rich mask, in which both kings danced. The dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk were made knights of St. Michael. Stow fays, there was no lefs than eight thousand perfons in Calais on this occafion. See Hall, fol. 207, &c.

z He returned to England Novemb. 14. Hall, fol. 209.

2 Rowland Lee, afterwards bishop of Litchfield and Coventry, celebrated the marriage in the prefence of archbifhop Cranmer, the duke of Norfolk, her father, mother, and brothers. Herbert, p. 161.

b January 25. Others fay it was November 14. Stow, p. 562. Hall, fol. 209. Burnet, T. I. p. 126. The news of this marriage was foon carried to Rome. The pope published, on November 15. a brief against king Henry, in which he exhorted him, to bring back the queen, and to put Anne away, within a month after the receipt of the brief; otherwife he excommunicated both him and Anne. Burnet, T. III. P. 17.

Milan

Milan and the Low Countries. It was necessary therefore to' 1532. think without loss of time of preventing the dangers which might proceed from all these quarters, and to begin with the most urgent affair, the satisfying of the protestants in order to have their affiftance against the Turks. To that purpose, The diet of he came the beginning of the year to the diet of Ratisbon, Ratisbon where he found means to negotiate with the protestants an thing in faagreement, whereby no perfon was to be disturbed on ac- vour of the count of religion till a council was called. He intended not protestants. punctually to perform an agreement, extorted from him by neceffity. He received however this benefit by it, That all Charles obthe princes and states of Germany, as well protestant as ca-tains an aid; tholick, furnished him with a powerful aid, which enabled him to affemble an army of eighty thousand foot and thirty thousand horse.

Whilft this army was forming, the emperor, willing to He fufpects found the king of France's intentions, fent and defired his the king of assistance against the Turks, but received an unsatisfactory P. Daniel, answer, which, added to the interview of the two kings, confirmed his fufpicion that they were contriving fomething against him. But Soliman hastening his campaign in Hungary, hindered him from thinking of means to prevent the milchief he feared from the two confederate kings. Indeed, His camthe Turks not only advanced into Hungary, but even into paign again Auftria, with defign to give him battle. But he wifely a- Guicciard. voided it, fince in lofing it he would have been without re- Herbert. fuge, and Austria with part of Germany would inevitably have fallen under the dominion of the Turks. Whereas by ftanding, as he did, upon the defensive, with an army of above a hundred thousand men, he prevented them from making any confiderable progrefs, and compelled them at length to return into their own country. As foon as he had certain He paffes advice that Soliman was upon his march to Constantinople, into Italy. he departed for Italy, from whence he defigned to return into Spain.

About the middle of November he came to Bologna, where He confers the pope waited to-confer with him. As their defigns were with the very opposite, there was not that harmony between them, as Bologna. at their interview in the year 1529. The emperor thought Guicciard, only of fecuring Italy, and preventing the king of France's return. The pope, on the contrary, wifhed to keep him always unealy on that account, as well to render himfelf necelfaty as to be freed from a state of dependence. The emperor required the pope to call a council in Germany, otherwife he faw no pollibility of finding a lawful pretence to ruin the protestants.

355

1532. a council. P. Daniel.

a league for the fafety of Italy. Guicciard.

protestants. But after what had passed at Constance and Bafil, the very name of a council was become to odious to He demands the court of Rome, that Clement VII. could not refolve to call one. He knew what had befallen John XXII. and Eu-genius IV. and therefore had no mind to have his authority He proposes questioned. The emperor demanded moreover the pope's confent to a league, he intended to form between all the ftates of Italy, to which each fhould contribute in proportion to its forces, in order to fecure the country from all invafion. That is to fay, he would have in Italy an army maintained at the expence of others, and always ready to defend the duchy of Milan, in cafe the French king fhould think of invading it. The pope approved of the project, not in order to keep Italy in its prefent fituation, fince it was very much to his prejudice that the emperor fhould remain fo powerful there, but to have a pretence to be rid of the German and Spanish troops, who were a terror to the Italians. He forefaw that a league of fo many parties, whofe interefts were different, would not long fublift, and that after it was broken, he fhould himfelf become more neceffary and confiderable. He defired only that the Venetians fhould come into the league, and bear their part of the charge. In fhort, the emperor farther demanded of the pope, that he should give his neice Catherine de Medici to the duke of Milan; his aim being to engage him for his niece's fake in the defence of the Milanefe, for fear in the end the king of France fhould find a favourable opportunity to gain him to his intereft. But Clement alledged against this proposal, his engagement with the king of France, who had done him the honour to demand Catherine for the duke his fecond fon. He reprefented to the emperor, that he could not prefer the duke of Milan to the duke of Orleans, without making the king of France his irreconcileable enemy, who would never forgive fuch an affront. So their whole negotiation ended only in the projected league, in which the Venetians refused to be included. They contented themfelves with promifing the emperor, they would punctually perform their engagement with respect to the duchy of In fine, the emperor having fent for ambaffadors Milan. from Milan, Ferrara, and Mantua, it was endeavoured for fome time to fettle the terms of the league. But the difpute between the pope and the duke of Ferrara very much retarded the conclusion, because the duke would not come into the league before he was fecure of peace at home. However, after great pains, the emperor prevailed with the pope to allow the duke an eight months respite. This affair was was the reafon the league could not be figned till February 1532. the next year.

357

Henry's proceedings against the clergy, and his disposition How the with regard to the pope, greatly encouraged those who long- English flood ed to fee a reformation in the church. To conceive a right religion. notion how the English stood affected in this respect, it is neceffary to know what the people's fentiments were concerning religion. It may be undeniably affirmed, that as to the reformation of the pope's exorbitant power and the clergy's immunities, there was scarce an Englishman, if you except all or most of the ecclesiafticks, but what heartily wished it. It was now three hundred years fince the parliament first began to endeavour it, but without a perfect fuccefs, becaufe it was contrary to the interest of the kings. But as for a reformation of doctrine, the well-wishers to it were very far from being the majority, These were not sufficiently numerous to venture to propofe it openly, especially as they were not countenanced by the king. But when the pope's exceffive authority, or the pride and riches of the clergy were exclaimed against, they boldly joined with the rest of the people, without fear of being discovered, because that was the fentiment of all the people, or at least of almost all the laity. But in expressing their zeal against the clergy, their aim was to promote the reformation of dcctrine, becaufe they knew the chief obstacle would always proceed from the governors of the church. Here therefore they believed they ought to begin, in order to arrive at a thorough reformation. So, aamong those that wished to reduce within due bounds the papal power, and the clergy's immunities, there were doubtlefs many who had no farther views, and imagined the reformation would end there. Others, on the contrary, hoped that after taking this first step, it would be impossible to ftop, wherein they had for warrant what had happened in Germany. But they took care not to undeceive the others, for fear of cooling their zeal, by fhowing them too foon the confequences of the first step, in the business of the reformation.

The parliament meeting the 15th of January 1532, the The com-commons were almost unanimously inclined to redress the mons are ingrievances fo long complained of in vain, with refpect to the duce the papal power and the ecclefiaffical privileges. There had power of the never been to favourable an opportunity. When formerly clergy. the parliaments were disposed to make any attempt of this na-Hall. Herbert. ture, the kings were unwilling to concur with them, becaule the flate of their affairs permitted them not to break entirely 1532. entirely with Rome. But the affair of the divorce had put things upon another foot. The king was diffatisfied with the pope, and confidered the clergy both fecular and regular as fecret enemies, by reason of their attachment to the court of Rome, So, his interest required that the pope and clergy fhould be humbled, and division fown between them and the people, knowing that the former could hurt him only in proportion to their credit with the latter. As for what foreigners might do, he thought himfelf in no danger, fo long as he remained ftrictly united with France, and the more, as the emperor was then employed by his war with the Turks, and the troubles of Germany.

Z 3'

Address preking. The king's anfwer. Hall. Stow. Herbert. Hollingfh.

Statutes against the clergy.

Act concerning annates, or firft fruits.

All this being artfully infinuated to the houfe of commons, fented to the they prefented an address to the king , praying him to confent to a reformation of fundry grievances, occasioned by the immunities of the clergy ^d. The king answered, that before he gave his confent to their request, which seemed to him of great moment, he wished to hear what the clergy had to fay for themselves. But under this show of equity, his intent was to intimate to the clergy, how much they wanted his protection, fince he could either promote or reftrain the proceeding of the commons as he pleafed. Some time after, the parliament paffed certain acts, which only glanced at fome of the clergy's privileges, the people had most reason to complain of °. But for that time, the reformation was carried no farther. Nay, care was taken to make the ecclefiafticks amends, by paffing an act to release them from the payment of annates f, which was become a heavy burden. The act ran, that the kingdom was daily impoverished by the great fums paid to the fee of Rome, for first-fruits, for > c. Or rather a lift of their grievances comprized in a book. It was prefented April 30. Herbert, p. 155. Hall, fol. 205.

d They complained of the proceedings of the fpiritual courts, and efpecially their calling men before them, ex officio, and laying articles to their charge without any accufer ; and then admitting no purgation, but caufing the party accused, either to abjure, or to he burnt, Burnet, T. I. p. 116. Hall, fol. 202.

e By fome of these statutes it was enacted, 1. That no perfon in holy orders, convict of petit treason, wilful murder, &cc. fhall be admitted to make his purgation before the ordinary, and be fet at liberty; but shall remain in prifon, till he has given fureties for his good behaviour. 2. That clerks convict, breaking the prifons of their ordinaries, shall be adjudged felons. There were alfo other good flatutes made; for erecting goals in feveral parts of the kingdom; against perjury, and untrue verdicts; about the commission of fewers; that no perfon shall be cited out of the diocele where he lives, except in fome particular cafes; as alfo against making feoffments of estates to chauntries, parish churches, &c. See Statut. 23. Henry VIII.

f Or the first fruits of the bishoppricks.

palls,

OF ENGLAND.

palls, for bulls, &c. That fince the fecond year of the reign of Henry VII. one hundred and fixty thouland pounds ' had been paid to those uses, and that more was like to be fhortly exported, by reafon many of the bifhops were very aged : that befides, the annates were first introduced only as a contribution for the war against the infidels, to which however they were never applied. And therefore it was enacted, that all payments of annates should cease for the future : that as for the bulls, there should only be paid five pounds in the hundred, according to the clear annual value of the bishopricks. That if, on account of this regulation, bulls fhould be denied by the pope, the bifhop elect fhould be prefented by the king to the archbishop of the province for his confectation: that in cafe the archbifhop fhould refufe it on pretence of want of palls, bulls, and the like, any two bishops appointed by the king should perform the office, and, the bifhop fo confecrated acknowledged for lawful. Neverthelefs the parliament declared, it fhould be in the king's power to null or confirm the act within fuch a time; and if, in this interval, he fhould make an amicable composition with the court of Rome, it fhould have the force and authority of a law. But if, upon this act, the pope should pretend to vex the realm by excommunications or interdicts, fuch cenfures should neither be regarded nor published, and, all interdicts notwithstanding, the priests might lawfully, without any fcruples of confcience, celebrate divine fervice as before g.

Mean while, among the great number of representatives Boldness of a in the house of Commons, there were several who were entirely against a rupture with the pope. They perceived Hall, however, it would infallibly follow upon the king's di-Burnet, vorce. Wherefore they used all possible endeavours to prevent it. One Temse a member of parliament was so hardy as to move, that the house should go in a body and address the king to take his queen again. Henry hearing of this, The king fent for Thomas Audley the speaker, and in his person server verely reprimanded the commons, for fuffering a motion to mons.

Z 4

² This bill began in the house of lords; from whence it was sent to the commons, and being agreed to by them, received the royal assent that not the final confirmation mentioned in the act, before the 9th of July 1533, and then by letters patents, in which the act is at length recited, it was confirmed. Par. Rolls. By this act was laid the foundation of the breach that afterwards followed with Rome. This act is not in the flatute book. Burnet, T. I. p. 117, 118359 1532.

be

be made concerning an affair which fell not under their cog-1532. nizance h.

Some days after i, the king fent again for the speaker, and them to con- told him, that having compared the oath taken by the bishops to the pope with that they took to the king, it feemed to him they were but half fubjects, and therefore he defired the commons to examine the matter, and take care of the interefts of the crown. But the plague which raged then at London, and constrained the parliament to break up prefently after k, hindered the commons from debating upon this affair at that time 1.

> The power given the king by the parliament to abolifh the annates, or make an amicable composition with the pope, was a clear evidence that the act had been procured by the intrigues of the court. The pope was extremely offended at it. But when he complained to the king's agents, he was told, he might have faved himfelf that vexation, and there was still a remedy, fince the king had power to repeal the act. This was an intimation, that he might depend upon it, the king would behave according as he had reafon to be fatisfied with his proceedings.

> Thomas More, who was lord chancellor, and a perfon of excellent judgment, forefaw now, the king's proceedings would in the end produce a total rupture with Rome. He would have readily confented that fome abufes fhould be reformed." But he found, as matters were managed, the reformation would go much farther than he defired. He put great difference between withdrawing entirely from the pope's obedience, and retrenching fome of his usurpations. So. being unwilling to be inftrumental in the rupture, he refigned the great feal on the 16th of May. Some days after, the king made fir Thomas Audley, lord keeper of the great feal, till the 26th of January 1533, when he was made lord chancellor.

r h He told the fpeaker moreover, it touched his foul ; he wished his marriage were good, but the learned had determined it to be null and deteftable, and therefore he was obliged in confcience to abitain from her, which he affured him flowed from no luft, or foolifh appetite. He was then forty one years old, and at that age those heats abate. But except in Spain and Portugal, it had not been heard of, that a man married two fifters; and Ke never heard that any christian before himfelf, had married his brother's wife. Therefore he affured him his conscience was troubled, which he defired him to report to the house. 'Ibid. p. 122. Hall, fol. 205. i May 11. Hall, fol. 205.

k It was adjourned on May 14, to February the 3d, 1533. Hall, fol. 206.

1 Hall, Burnet, and lord Herbert, place Henry's interview with Francis, after this fession of parliament.

Whilft

Thomas More refigns the great feal, Burnet. Hall. which is given to fir Thomas Audley. Act. Pub. XIV.p.433, 439. p. 446.

fider the bishops oaths. Burnet, Hall.

360

He wills

The pope complains of the acts abolishing the annate's. Burnet. The king's agents answer.

OF ENGLAND.

Whilk Henry used fundry means to show the pope his 1532. danger, in obstinately refusing what he required, the emperor was no lefs ardently endeavouring to obtain a fentence in fa- The emperor your of queen Catherine. The way thefe two monarchs and Henry applied to the pope was not by humble intreaties, but by me- threaten the naces, which had the greater effect, as he was naturally ti-pope; Burnet. morous, and flow to refolve upon things that required a who is at a speedy resolution. By these two opposite demands he faw great loss. himfelf indeed between the hammer and anvil, as he faid himfelf in the beginning of the affair. On the other hand, he found by Henry's late proceedings, that England was going to be loft to him and his fucceffors. This confideration was very capable of putting him upon feeking expedients to content that monarch, without prejudice to the honour of the holy fee. He would thereby have preferved a kingdom which had been ever devoted to the popes, and from whence they had drawn large revenues. But on the other hand, the emperor had still an army in Italy, and was able to revenge his refufal. Clement of all things feared the lofs of Flo-His own rence, which the emperor could take from him with more interest prevails. eafe than he had procured him the possession. It is no wonder therefore, if this fear, being the most imminent, prevailed. It would be a great miltake to afcribe to the pope any motives of justice, equity, good, and benefit of the church, or religion. These things for some time had served only for preambles to bulls. His own and his family's intereft was the fole rule of his conduct. So, finding himfelf extremely preffed by the emperor to pass fentence upon queen Catherine's appeal, he could no longer be excufed from giving him fome fatisfaction m. He declared therefore to Herbert. the English agents ", that having long expected in vain that Burnet. their mafter would of himfelf return to the right way, he was obliged to cite him to Rome. Henry having notice of it, Karne fent fent with all fpeed Edward Karne, doctor of law, with the to Rome as new character of excufator, to alledge the reafons against a the king's excufator. citation to which the king of England could not be liable. Herbert. Karne coming to Rome in March o, the pope fcrupled to re-Burnet. ceive him as excufator, a character whereof there was no precedent to be found in the chancery. However, he committed the examination of this title to a congregation, which

m He writ, on January 25, to king Henry, to exhort him a fecond time to take again his wife. See Herbert, p. 156. Burnet, T. I. p. 118. n Sir George Caffali, and doctor William Benet. Herbert, p. 158. o He was accompanied by doctor Edmond Bonner. Burnet, T. I. p. 120.

361

made

362 1532.

made no hafte to give their opinion, that the excufator might not have power, before he was acknowledged, to oppose the refolutions already taken.

A new delay granted the king. Burnet.

The pope's offers. Burnet. Herbert.

The king's answer. Burnet. T.I.p. 125.

protefts against the citation. Act Pub. 422. Burnet. Herbert. He makes the pope three offers. which are tejected.

The king

At last, in a confistory the eighth of July, it was refolved, that, without examining the king of England's reafons for not appearing in perfon, he should be intreated to fend to Rome a proxy to defend his caufe. Mean while, as the vacation which was to laft till the first of October, was then just begun, a delay till that time was tacitly given the king.

During this interval, the pope fent him a brief to require him to fend a proxy to Rome. At the fame time he caufed the following overtures to be made him: that the affair of the divorce should be examined in any indifferent place by a legate and two auditors of the Rota; which done; the pope himfelf would would pass fentence. Secondly, That all the fovereign princes of Christendom fhould agree to a truce of three or four years, within which time the pope promifed to call a general council. The king replied by Sir Thomas Elliot who was fent on purpole, That he could not agree to a truce without the king of France's concurrence. Secondly, That it was not a proper juncture to call a council. Laftly, As for the affair of the divorce, being king of England, he was to take care of the prerogatives of the crown, and the laws of the realm, which allowed not that any process should be tried in a foreign court. That befides, the canons of the church exprefly decreed, that all matrimonial caufes fhould be judged in the countries where the parties refided.

To these reasons he added a protestation in form, declaring that he was not obliged to appear at Rome, either in perfon or by proxy, and tacked to the protestation the determinations of fome univerfities ^p, he had confulted. However, he XIV.p.416, proposed three things to the pope. First, he required that the cafe should be decided by the archbishop of Canterbury and two other bifhops, or elfe by the whole clergy of the kingdom. But it must be observed, that the see of Canterbury had been vacant fince August by Warham's death 9, and if the pope had clofed with this propofal, the king would not have failed to fill the fee with a prelate devoted to him. His fecond offer was, that the caufe fhould be judged by four arbitrators, one to be named by the king r, another > p Thofe of Orleans and Paris. See Rymer, tom. XIV. p. 416, &c. 9 He died August 23. Stow, p.

560.

r Either the bishop of London, or fir Thomas More. Herbert, p. 161.

by

by the queen, a third by the king of France, and that the archbishop of Canterbury should be the fourth. In the third place, he proposed that the cause being judged by the archbishop, or by umpires, if the queen should think fit to appeal from the fentence, the appeal fhould be brought before three judges, whereof he would name one, the pope another, and the king of France a third. The pope replied to these proposals, that he faw the king would not recede from his pretended rights, and therefore it fhould not be thought ftrange that he refolved to preferve his own.

It is however certain, if the pope durft have fatisfied the All the obking, he would gladly have done it, by reason of his fear to facles to the lose England entirely. It was not the difficulties in the af- from the fair of the divorce that hindered him from proceeding. Had emperor. they been much greater than they were, he would have readily overlooked them all. For, fuppofing the unlimited power affumed by the pope, it was as eafy for Clement VII. to null Henry's marriage, as it was for Julius II. to grant a dispensation. But he had to manage the honour of his fee, and the interefts of the emperor, who threatened him, and was able to execute his threats. Had not the emperor been concerned in the affair, it would have been very eafy to find an expedient to content the king, without prejudice to the papal authority. It was only to affure the king, the caufe fhould be decided in his favour, and he would have willingly agreed that the pope fhould have been the fole judge. But the pope could give him no fuch affurance by reafon of the emperor's opposition; and therefore Henry could not refolve to put the affair into his hands at the hazard of being condemned. Upon this account it was that he proposed infallible expedients to gain his caufe. But on the other hand, the pope could not accept of these expedients, without injuring his dignity. Thus the affair was folely retarded by the emperor's interpolition. Had it not been for him, the pope would have contented the king, and the king would have fubmitted to the pope, and remained as before an obedient fon of the holy fee. Hence therefore it may be inferred, that the king's proceedings as well in the late parliament as afterwards, flowed not fo much from his real opinion that the papal authority was usurped, as from his feeing no other way to be delivered from his prefent difficulties, than by denying it to be in the pope's power to do what Julius II. had done. It is however very likely, he was afterwards fully convinced of the truth of what he afferted at first only out of necessity. On the other hand, if the pope passed fentence

tence againft Henry, as we fhall fee prefently, it was not from a belief that his marriage with Catherine was lawful, but folely to fave the honour of the holy fee, and through fear of the emperor. And here who can forbear admiring the fecret ways of providence, which rendered a reconciliation between the pope and the king impracticable, in order to produce an event which was to be attended with fo momentous confequences for England?

Henry is cited to Rome. Herbert, Burnet.

Affairs between England and Scotland. Bochanan. Herbert. ' Hall. Hollingth,

At length the vacation being over, Henry was cited the fourth of October to appear at Rome, either in perfon or by proxy, and Karne folemnly protefted ' against the citation. What has been faid happened before the emperor's arrival at Bologna. Clement VII. who was going immediately after the citation to confer with that prince, promifed Karne that all proceedings fhould be fuspended, fo long as the emperor was in Italy. This was all the favour Karne could obtain t. Whilft Henry feemed wholly employed in the affair of his divorce, a quarrel arofe between England and Scotland. Buchanan pretends, Henry willing to take the advantage of his union with France, and imagining, Francis I. would fuffer him to oppress king James, made inroads into Scotland ", as if he intended to renew the war. He adds, that the only pretence of this rupture was, that the Scots had fpoken fome injurious words against the English. Be this as it will, the king of Scotland being prepared for his defence, Henry thought not fit to pursue his design. He chose rather to agree that the difference fhould be decided by the king of France's mediation, who for that purpole fent an ambaffador to Newcastle. The king of Scotland was so offended with Francis for fo cooly espousing his cause, that he was going to join with the emperor. But at length all was haps On November 14. Herbert, p. 159.

159. t King Henry having obtained from cardinal Wolfey, a grant of the archbifhop of York's palace at Weftminfter, then called York Place, now Whitehall; and got a confirmation of the cardinal's grant from the chapter for fourteen leprous maidens; and built in the room of it, the palace new called St. James's, to which he annexed the park, and enclosed it with a brick wall. Hall, fol. 203. Stow's Survey; b. VI. p. 4. — About June this year, the pope granted king Henry, by a bull, a commission to ereck fix new bishopricks, to be endowed by monasteries that were to be fupprefied. Burnet, T. I. p. 121. This defign was at first formed by cardinal Wolfey, as appears from Rymer's Fed. tom. XIV. p. 273, 291.

^u He ordered fir Arthur Darcey to make those inroads, pretending for cause thereof the restitution of the Douglasse. Herbert, p. 166.

pily

pily adjusted, and the two kings of England and Scotland 1533. remained friends as before.

It was not for Henry's interest to undertake a war against League con-Scotland, when he was to prepare for his defence against cluded at the emperor. It was very probable, the pope had not en- Rome for the fecurity gaged to judge queen Catherine's appeal without being first of Italy. affured, that the emperor, the queen's nephew, would exe- Guicciard. cute the fentence. This indeed was his defign, but the troubles which came upon him, hindered his engaging in that enterprife. He reckoned that the Italian league beforementioned would be a fure defence for the duchy of Milan. But he foon perceived, he was himfelf the dupe of the politick pope. This league was at length figned at Bologna the 24th of February 1533, according to his wifh. Every fovereign that had dominions in Italy, the Venetians excepted, engaged to find a certain fum monthly, for the maintenance of an army which Antonio de Leva was to command as general of the league. The emperor's intention was, that the army Different fhould confift of his own troops, and be conftantly main-views of the tained : but the defign of the confederates was very diffe- the allies. rent. They had confented to the league, only that the enperor, having nothing to fear for Italy, might withdraw all his, troops. But they never meant that the army, main- The allies tained at their expence, fhould ferve to keep them in fub- refute to keep an arjection, which would neceffarily be the cafe, if the army my in time continued always on foot, under the command of the em- of peace. peror's general. They represented to him therefore, that the Theemperor league being only defensive, it was not proper to continue withdraws his troops an army without neceffity, to ruin them in expences ; but out of Italy. upon the first motion of the French, they would not fail to perform their agreements. What arguments foever the emperor alledged, it was not poffible to bring them to what he defired. He was forced therefore to be fatisfied with their promises, because he was not in condition to maintain an army in Italy at his own charge. Then he difbanded part of his troops, and fent the reft to Naples and Spain. He de- He returns parted from Bologna about the end of February and came to Spain. to Genoa, where he ftaid fome time; after which, on the 8th of April, he embarked for Spain extremely difpleafed with the pope, who through all his difguifes could not help flow- The marriing his inclination to France. Indeed, he was now agreed age of the duke of with the cardinals of Tournon and Grammont upon an in- Orleans terview with Francis, and the marriage of Catherine de with Cathe-Medici with the duke of Orleans, tine de Medici agreed The upon.

The pope is againft a council. Sleidan.

of cardinals against the council.

366

Affairs of Germany.

Sleidan.

Herbert.

1533.

The flate of Italy was not the only thing that employed the emperor. He had, as was observed, promised the protestants a free council in Germany. But though the word free was equally used by those who demanded a council and by him that promifed it, they were far from meaning the fame thing. The protestants understood by that word, that a council should be held in Germany, where not only they might have free access and full liberty to produce their reafons, but also that the points in dispute should be decided folely by the word of God. The emperor meant, on the contrary, to retain only an outward flow of the word, and by rendering his party fuperior in the council, to caufe matters to be fo decided that the protestants should be forced, either to revoke all their innovations, or reject the council's decifions. In the latter cafe, which was most likely, the emperor plainly perceived, they would give him a pretence to attack them, which was the thing he intended, But in the execution of this defign a great obstacle occurred; namely, a council, let it be what it would, was a terror to the Though he knew the emperor demanded a council pope. not with intent to alter religion, yet he was afraid of being facrificed to the protestants, if that monarch's interest required it. Besides, the strict alliance between Francis and Henry made him uneafy. In fhort, he could not refolve to call a council, without being fure of managing it as he pleafed. And this could fcarce be expected, as matters then food in Christendom. Since his being on the papal throne, he had pleafed neither the emperor, nor the king of France, nor the king of England, nor the potentates of Italy, and vet, of the fubjects of all these fovereigns was the council chiefly to confift. He knew himfelf to be a baftard, and that alone to be fufficient to depose him, in case his enemies were fuperior in the council. What had paffed at Conftance and Bafil gave him just reason to dread, that a council held in a free city of Germany, might form the fame defigns. Upon all these confiderations, when the emperor defired him at the conference of Bologna, to call a council, he forbore to give a politive answer. He contented himself with committing the examination of his request to certain cardinals, under co-Reasons of a lour of being informed of the reasons pro and con. The popes congregation have a character to fultain, which often throws them into great perplexity. In publick, they must make show of a great zeal for God's glory, for religion, and for the good of the church, and withal of a great difinterestedness for every thing which perfonally concerns them. But, for fear what they thus profess outwardly should be taken literally, they they must in private undeceive those who treat with them, 1533. and discover to them that their own interest is the principal u fubject of the negotiation. So, what they fay publickly is always just and right, and feems to tend only to the greater glory of God. But in the end it is too frequently perceived, that religion ferves only for a cloak to their temporal concerns. On the prefent occasion, a general council feemed abfolutely neceffary to put an end to the troubles caufed by the religious differences in feveral places, and particularly in Germany. The pope not only agreed upon a council with the emperor, but even feigned to wish it heartily. Mean while, as a council was contrary to his interests, reasons drawn from the good and advantage of religion were to be found to reject it, or defer the convening. This was done by the commiffioners, appointed to examine the emperor's requeft. They drew a memorial fetting forth the neceffity of a council, but fhowing withal the inconveniences of admitting the protestants to dispute upon matters already settled, and the uselellinels of the council if they were not admitted. The memorial being communicated to Francis, he replied to Francis it by another, demonstrating that the inconveniencies men-aniwers tioned in the first ought not to hinder the calling of a council. Moreover, he particularly chalked out the methods Herbert, which were to be used to banish all partiality. But this memorial was not acceptable to the emperor, becaule a free council was not what he defired, but a council that would afford him an opportunity and pretence to attack the protestants of Germany; after which, he did not despair of bringing the catholicks also under his yoke. Francis answered the emperor's reasons against his memorial, but it was to no purpose. It was almost impossible that two princes, whole interests The council were so opposite and who were so jealous of each other, is put off. should agree in any one point. Thus the pope had his Herbert, wifh, fince the calling of the council was deferred to a more proper season. I must now speak of what passed in England in the year 1533.

Whilft the pope and emperor were conferring at Bologna, Settion of the Henry affembled the parliament the 4th of February. As parliament hitherto the pope had not relaxed in the least, except that he Herbert. had delayed the excommunication wherewith he had threat-Burnet. ned the king, it was deemed proper to proceed farther and Hall. let him fee, he was not at all feared. So, the parliament Statute paffed an act, expressly forbidding all appeals to Rome on against all pain of incurring a præmunire. This was to convince the Rome, pope, there was no occasion for him, fince at the very time in England.

appeals to

that

THE HISTORY

Cranmer made archbishop of Canterbury. Burnet. Hall. Herbert.

368

1533. that the point in question between him and the king was, to know whether the affair of the divorce fhould be judged in England, people were forbid to carry their caufes to Rome. But there was another reafon which induced the king to procure this act, namely, having heard that Francis was going to make an alliance with the pope, he imagined that for the future his friend would act but faintly in his favour; and therefore he was now determined to have his caufe tried in the kingdom, without troubling himfelf any farther about the pope's proceedings against him ". The archbishoprick of Canterbury being vacant by Warham's death, it was neceffary to fill the fee, that the fentence might be given by the primate of England.' Wherefore, Henry had caft his eyes on Dr. Thomas Cranmer then in Germany x. But, contrary to his expectation, he had found the doctor more averfe to accept than others would have been eager to defire that high dignity. It was fix months before he could be perfwaded to take upon him that burden. In fine, his reluctance being conquered by the king's patience, he began his journey to London, though very flowly, in hopes the king might alter his mind. However, as a farther delay was directly contrary to the king's measures, Cranmer could no longer defer fubmitting to his will. The king himfelf undertook to demand his bulls y, which, though eleven in all, were rated but at nine hundred ducats². The pope forbore of his own accord > w The other acts that passed this feffion were thefe. I. That beef, pork, mutton, and veal, should for the future be fold by Averdupois weight; and no perfon take for a pound of beef or pork, above one halfpenny; and for a pound of mutton, or veal, not above three farthings. 2. That a man killing a thief in his own defence, shall not forfeit his goods ; which was the penalty of those who were guilty of chance medley. 3. There was also an act made for encouraging the deftruction of crows, rooks, and choughs. 4. And one for paving the freetway between Charing Crofs, and Strand Crofs. See Statut. 24. Henry VIII.

* Negotiating the bufiness of the divorce among the learned men of Germany. Burnet, T. I. p. 127.

y And accordingly. fent for them about the end of January. Idem. p. 128.

z Thefe being the last bulls in his reign, it will not be amifs to give an account of them, as they are fet down in the beginning of Cranmer's register. By the first, he is, upon the king's nomination, promoted to the archbi-fhoprick of Canterbury; this is direct-ed to the king. By a fecond directed to himfelf, he is made archbishop. By a third, he is abfolved from all cenfures. A fourth, is to the fuffragans. A fifth, to the dean and chapter. A fixth, to the clergy of Canterbury. A feventh, to all the laity in his fee. An eighth, to all that held iands of it, requiring them to receive him as archbishop. All thefe are dated February 21, 1533. By a ninth, of February 22, he was to be confectated, upon taking the eath in the pontifical. By a tenth, dated the 2d of March, the pall was fent him. And by an eleventh of the fame date, the archbishop of York, and the bifhop of London, were required to put it on him. Thefe were the feveral artifices to make compositions high, and to enrich the apottolick chamber, Butnet, T. I. p. 128. 1

. 2.1

to

to require the annates, forefeeing they would be refused. To 1533. enable Cranmer to be at this charge, the king made him a prefent of the revenues of the archbishoprick, from the 9th of September the last year. These obstacles being removed, there arose another much more considerable. Cranmer re- He refuses fused to take the usual oath to the pope, believing he could to take the not do it with a fafe conficience. In his first journey into pope. Germany he had read Luther's books, which entirely con-Burnet, vinced him of the truth of many of the protestant tenets, and particularly of the little foundation in fcripture for the fpiritual power affumed by the pope over the whole church. Confequently, he could not refolve to fwear an obedience, which in his opinion was not due to him. Mean while, Henry confidering Cranmer as a perfon who by his principles and refolution could effectually ferve him in the decifion of the affair of the divorce, of which he defired to fee the end, preffed him to earneftly to fwear the cuftomary oath, that he was prevailed with at length by an expedient proposed to him, namely, to make a formal protestation against the oath he was to take 2. This is by no means one of his most He yields at commendable actions. However, he was confecrated the laft, but 13th of March according to Burnet. And yet, the king put proteffation. him not in posseffion of the temporalities till the 29th of A- Act. Pub. pril. This gives occasion to sufpect, there is a miltake in the XIV.p.456, first of these dates.

This affair being ended, the king required the convoca- p. 128. tion of the province of Canterbury to give their opinion up- The convo-on these two points. First, whether pope Julius's dispensa-Canterbury tion for the king's marriage with Catherine was fufficient and and York able to render fuch a marriage valid ? Secondly, whether it decide the was fufficiently proved that Arthur had confummated his points about the divorce marriage with Catherine ? Whereupon, the convocation de- for the king. clared on the 5th of April, that the pope had not power to Act. Pub. dispense contrary to the law of God, and that the confum-XIV.p.454, mation of Arthur's marriage was proved, as far as a thing Burnet, of that nature could be. The convocation of York made the like decision the 13th of May following.

Whilft the clergy were employed in debating these points, Francissends Henry writ to Francis, defiring him to fend a trufty perfon, de Bellai to London. to whom he might difcover fome things which he would Bellai. not make publick. Francis sent William de Bellay lord of Mezerai.

a This protestation imported, that he did not intend by that oath, to restrain himself from any thing that he was bound to, either by his duty to God, to the king, or the country; and that he renounced every thing in it that was contrary to any of those. Burnet, T. I. p. 129.

VOL. VI.

A a

Langeais,

157. Burnet. 472.

Herbert.

Henry imparts his marriage to Bellai. Herbert.

Herbert. p. 168.

Strype's

Mem.

P. 149.

publick.

Cranmer cites the

Herbert.

Burnet.

concluded a marriage between his fecond fon the duke of Orleans and Catherine de Medici, and that the pope and himfelf were to meet at Marfeilles to celebrate the nuptials: that in fuch a juncture he believed his prefence would be very neceflary to negotiate his own affairs himfelf with the pope: but in cafe he did not think proper to be at the interview, he would do well to fend fome perfon on his part. Langeais being come to London, the king told him that Clement VII. having obstinately refused to appoint him judges in England, he had determined at length to proceed; and therefore had already espoused Anne Bullen, with a resolution to have his marriage nulled by the archbishop of Canterbury. That however, he would keep his fecond marriage private till May, to fee what the king of France could do with the bifhop of Rome (for fo he called the pope.) But if he could obtain nothing, his defign was to withdraw himfelf wholly from the papal authority. He imagined then, the pope and Francis would meet in May, but it was not till October. He told Langeais further, that he had composed a treatife upon the incroachments of the bifhops of Rome and the prerogatives of fovereign princes, but would not publish it, till he faw no hopes of reconciliation.

He makes it Shortly after, the king's marriage with Anne Bullen was made publick, which certainly was very wrong. Since the king was refolved to have his first marriage nulled by the archbishop of Canterbury, he should have staid till the fen-Remark on tence was pronounced. All that can be faid in excufe of that subject. this irregular conduct is, that the new queen was four months gone with child, and her breeding could hardly be concealed any longer. But notwithstanding this, the king might have caufed his first marriage to be nulled a little fooner, or the fecond to be published a little later, fince there was but a month between the publication and the fentence. However, Henry defpairing to prevail with the pope, and not much fearing him, thought to have no farther regard either for him or the publick, being almost affured of fucceeding in whatever he undertook, confidering how the people ftood affected. In fhort, being fully determined to end the affair, he fo ordered, that the archbishop of Canterbury queen, and demanded his leave to fummon queen Catherine. Before he upon her not came to this extremity, he tried more than once to perfuade appearing the queen to confent to the divorce. But all his endeavours pronounces fentence: proving ineffectual, he granted the archbishop the leave he defired. The queen was cited to appear at Dunstable, in · · the .5

OF ENGLAND.

the neighbourhood of the place where fhe refided, the 20th of May b. But as the refused to appear, the archbishop gave fentence the 23d of the fame month, declaring the Hall. king's marriage with Catherine null, as being contrary to XIV.p.462, the law of God. On the 28th, at Lambeth, by another 467. fentence, he confirmed the king's marriage with Anne Bul- and confirms len, and on the 1ft of June the new queen was crowned.

Thus ended this famous process, the iffue whereof afford-riage. ed no less matter for divers reflections than the beginning, Reflections every one reasoning as swayed by prejudice or interest. Those who were against the king took notice of his error in ef-Burnet. poufing a fecond wife, before his first marriage was legally diffolved. They faid moreover, that of all the prelates in England, Cranmer was the last that should have been chosen for judge, fince he had fo openly declared against the first marriage. That his partiality was apparent, not only in his haste to give sentence, but also in his confirming the king's fecond marriage, which had been confummated whilft the first still subsisted.

Those who were for the king affirmed, the sentence was Reasons albut a mere formality, which rendered not the marriage void, ledged for the king. but only declared it fo. That it fufficed, the fentence was conformable to the determinations of the English clergy and all the universities in Europe, and to the fentiments of the pope himfelf, who would have nulled the marriage, had he not been biaffed by worldly confiderations. They juffified Cranmer by alledging, that having changed his character fince his declaring for the divorce, that declaration ought not to hinder him from being judge, no more than a lawyer when he comes to fit on the bench is debarred the trying of caufes in which he formerly gave counfel. That though there were some default in the form, it could not be denied,

A a a

b The archbishop went to Dunstable (about fix miles from Ampthill, where the queen was) accompanied with Gardiner, bifhop of Winchefter, and the bishops of London, Bath, and Lincoln, and fat in court on the 10th . of May, the king appearing by proxy, but the queen not at all. Upon which fhe was declared contumacious, and a fecond and third citation were iffued out. Then the evidences that had been brought before the legates of the confummation of the marriage with prince Arthur were read. After that, the determinations of the universities, divines, and canonifts, with the judgments of the convocations of both provinces were produced, and the whole merit of the caufe was opened. And then on the 23d, with the advice of all that were present, it was declared, that the matriage had been only de facto, and not de jure, and con-· fequently null from the beginning. One thing is to be observed, that the archbishop is called in the fentence, the legate of the apostolical fee. Whether this went of course as one of his titles, or was put in to make the fentence firmer, the reader may judge. Bur-net, T. I. p. 131. Hall, fol. 210.

the .

371

1533.

the king's fecond mar-

the fentence was just in itfelf, which was fufficient to quiet the king's confcience, who alone was concerned in the affair. As for the new queen, no fault could be found with her conduct, fince she proved not with child till after her marriage, whether the king espoused her in November last year, or in the January following. As for queen Catherine, it could not be thought ftrange that fhe fhould maintain the validity of her fecond marriage. But it was justly wondered at, the should so obstinately deny the confummation of the first, which was proved by all possible evidence. But as most people were then biassed on one side or other c, we are not to judge of the affair by what was published in those days but by reafon and equity. Let us therefore briefly confider it in that view, independently of the prejudices caufed by the confequences. It will not perhaps be unacceptable to the reader, to fee here a fhort recapitulation of the conduct of the chief actors in this scene. I shall confine myself to this, without fully examining the process, which is not fo much the bufinefs of a hiftorian as of a divine or civilian.

upon the processofthe divorce, and of the prin-Upon the king.

372

1533.

'It is almost impossible to know positively, whether Henry, Remarks when he undertook the affair of the divorce, was convinced that his marriage was contrary to the law of God, or at leaft the conduct was really troubled in confcience upon that account. All that can be faid in his favour is, that he himfelf affirmed as cipal parties. much, and none but the fearcher of all hearts can know, whether he thought as he fpoke. It cannot be denied, that the fole confideration of fuch a marriage is of itfelf capable of breeding fuch fcruples, especially as the king's might be confirmed by the archbishop of Canterbury's, and the bifhop of Lincoln's his confessor. But, on the other hand, it may be conjectured from feveral circumstances, that it was only a pretence to put away Catherine and marry Anne Bullen. In the first place, he had lived eighteen years with the queen without flowing any fcruple. In the fecond place, if he was not in love with Anne Bullen when his fcruples first feized him, it cannot be denied, he was very much fo, when "he most ardently pressed the affair of the divorce. So, it may be conjectured, that his love might turn into belief what at first was only a doubt. In the third place, very probably it was cardinal Wolfey that infpired, by himfelf or another, the king with these (cruples, to be revenged of the emperor and the queen. This bold and daring minister imagined.

> e The men generally spake in behalf of the king, and the women took the queen's part. Hall, fol. 199.

either the affair would eafily fucceed, confidering his great credit at the court of Rome, or in cafe of opposition, it u would be no more difficult on this than on feveral other occafions, to caufe the king to alter his mind. But Henry's love unexpectedly happening, Wolfey found he had taken wrong measures. Befides, the determinations of the universities did not a little contribute, without doubt, to confirm the king in his opinion. However, without farther in-, quiry whether Henry was fatisfied of the justice of his caufe, let us confider in few words how he behaved in fo nice an affair. He supposed that Julius II. could not grant a dispenfation for his marriage, and confequently the marriage was void of itfelf. And yet, he thought he wanted Clement VII's bull to declare it fo. Herein was a contradiction which could not but greatly embarafs him. If Julius's difpenfation was null by the law of God, it was needlefs to revoke it, and if a revocation was neceffary, confequently it was good till revoked. Thus, Henry was bound till the pope should pleafe to decide the point. When Cranmer had given him another notion of the affair, by intimating to him, that independently of the power affumed by the pope, the chief thing was to be affured of the right by the opinions of the learned, he cried out in a transport of joy, " He had got at " last the right fow by the ear", that is, he found in Cranmer's advice a folution of the difficulties, he could not get over in following the doubtful principle of the pope's power, because its extent was not settled. He resolved therefore to procure the opinions of the universities. But at length, weighing the confequences of a rupture with Rome, he refumed the first way, and applied again to the pope. By this he wronged his caufe very much ; for in taking the pope for judge, it was no longer in his power to limit the authority he was willing to acknowledge. But he was excufable, fince it was hardly poffible to throw off at once his prejudice with respect to the papal power, whereof he had not at first fo clear an idea as afterwards. Then, finding the pope acted only from worldly confiderations, which hindered him from giving him the fatisfaction he required, he returned to the way he had left. So, proceeding upon his own conviction, and the determinations of the universities, 'he caufed his marriage to be declared null, without regarding the pope's authority, which he was refolved to forfake. I omit the reafons he alledged to prove the necessity of his divorce, That of confcience was doubtlefs the beft, if fincere. That relating to the uncertainty of the fucceffion was proper to Aa 3 demand demand a sentence, but not to ground the divorce upon, because the divorce supposed the marriage void, which was to be judged.

373 1533. 374 1533.

Remarks on the pope.

Let us now confider the pope's conduct, where we find nothing favoring of chrift's vicar. Clement VII. never examined the cafe by the maxims of religion, juffice, or equity, but always with respect to his own or his family's interefts. If he had attended to what religion required, he would have examined, whether Henry's marriage was contrary to the law of God, and whether in that cafe, a pope had power to grant a difpenfation. If he had been convinced that Julius II. affumed a right which belonged not to him he fhould have readily granted Henry the bull he demanded. But if, on the contrary, he was perfuaded, the marriage was agreeable to the divine law, or not being fo, it was in the power of a pope to grant a difpensation, he fhould have confirmed it, and tried to remove the king's fcruples, without feeking fo many evaluons. That was the duty of a pope. But inftead of acting in that manner, he confidered only what good or hurt might accrue to him from the king's demand, independently of the justice or injustice of the thing. Whilft he was prisoner in the castle of St. Angelo, or fugitive at Orvieto, and thought he flood in need of Henry, he politively promifed to content him, Afterwards, he only amufed him, till, by the emperor's means, he had recovered Florence. As foon as he was in possession of that state, which he had fo much defired, he avocated the process to Rome, but, in all appearance, with intent never to decide it, if he could help it; becaufe whilft the two parties remained uncertain of the decifion, he made himfelf neceffary to both. Can it therefore be faid, there was any fign of justice or religion in his proceedings? certainly, if Henry was to blame, as it is pretended, to feign fcruples on purpofe to gratify his paffion. Clement was no lefs fo, not to try to reclaim him before the affair was begun, or to content him in cafe his fcruples were well-grounded. Though Henry had acted only through passion, which is however very uncertain, he would have been much more excufable than the pope, who, in the post he filled, ought to have proceeded upon very different principles,

Remarks on

As for the emperor, he undoubtedly acted in this affair the emperor, from motives of honour, intereft, and policy, without juftice or religion being concerned in his proceedings. He looked upon the queen of England, his aunt's divorce, as a difhonour, which, added to his intereft to create Henry troubles.

OF ENGLAND.

bles, who was in strict alliance with France, was but too ca- 1533. pable of inducing him to obftruct it to the utmost of his power.

As for queen Catherine, very probably, fhe acted with Upon queen Catherine, fincerity. As the believed the pope's authority unlimited, the thought herfelf the king's lawful wife, and in that belief, did not think herfelf obliged to refign her right to another, on pretence of the king her hufband's fcruples, which, in her opinion, were groundlefs. Befides, fhe could not own her marriage null, without greatly injuring her daughter the princess Mary. Though the had been convinced her marriage was unlawful in itfelf, fhe believed the pope had power to render it valid, being ready however to fubmit to the fame authority as foon as it should be declared. Neverthelefs, the may be justly suspected of having taken a falfe oath, to make her caufe better.

Much has been faid against Anne Bullen. But without Upon Anne infifting upon Sanders's invectives, which have been fuffici- Bullen. ently refuted d, fhe can be charged before marriage but with one fingle fault, namely, her yielding to the king before his marriage with Catherine was nulled. But it was very difficult for a young lady of her rank, to have refolution e-. nough to refift the temptation of being a queen, if the could be fo lawfully, as it is likely the king made her believe. It cannot however be faid, fhe yielded to the king's defires before her marriage. He espoused her at the lateft in January, and fhe was not brought to bed till September °. So there is nothing in that which can give occafion for any fuspicion.

As for the reft who were concerned in the affair, as the Upon the cardinals, and the king's, and the emperors minister's, it pope's, the king's, and d Sanders has affured the world, that the king liking her mother, fent her hufband, fir Thomas Bullen, ambaffador to France, and in his abfence, begot Anne Bullen upon his wife. At his return, he fued a divorce against her in the archbishop's court, but the king letting him know the was with child by him, he was, upon the king's de-fire, reconciled to his wife. Thus Anne Bullen, though the went under the name of fir Thomas's daughter, vet was of the king's begetting. As he defcribes her, the was ill thaped and ugly, had fix fingers, a gag tooth, and a tumour under her chin. At fifteen years of age, he fays, both her father's butler, and chaplain lay with her; and when in France fhe led fuch a diffolute life, that fhe was called the Eng- the empelifth hackney. That the French king ror's agent's, liking her, the was called the king's mule. But returning to England, she gained the king's affection, by the appearance of a fevere virtue, with which fhe difguifed herfelf. The fame author adds, that the king had likewife enjoyed her fifter, with a great deal more to the difgrace of this lady and her family. Hence we may fee to what a height of rancour and malice bigotry and blind zeal in religious matters are capable of carrying a man! Burnet, T. I. p. 41.

e September 7, of the princefs Eli-zabeth, which afterwards mounted the throne. Hall, fol, 217. Stow, &c.

Aa4

may

THE HISTORY

1533. may be affirmed, they acted only from worldly views, without any regard to religion.

Upon the

It cannot be faid, the univerlities of France and England universities, decided the questions proposed with entire freedom, fince it is known what an influence fovereigns have upon the actions of their fubjects, when they are concerned. As to the universities of Italy, both parties accused one another of having corrupted them, the one by money, and the other by threats. As for the English clergy, they had lately received fuch a check, that they had reafon to dread giving the king a fresh occasion of anger. But it cannot be thence inferred, that they decided contrary to their fentiments, fince it often happens that truth is not oppofite to intereft.

mer.

Upon Cran- The fame may be faid of Cranmer, who being now tinctured with Luther's doctrine, could not look upon Julius's difpenfation as capable of rendering a marriage valid, which in itfelf was null and repugnant to the law of God. Indeed. he may have earneftly embraced this opportunity, to give a mortal wound to the papal authority, in order to promote the reformation. But it cannot be affirmed, that he acted against his knowledge, in pronouncing the sentence of divorce. At least, his whole behaviour was directly oppofite to fuch obliquities.

By what has been faid, it may be eafily perceived, that in this affair, which was properly a cafe of confcience, very few of the actors had any but political views, without much regard to the precepts of religion. Neverthelefs, God who directs all the actions of men, without their knowing very often to what they may tend, drew from the proceedings of Henry, Clement, and Charles, the end he defigned, that is, the reformation of the church of England, as will be feen in the fequel. If any one defires fully to examine the cafe of Henry VIII's divorce, he would do well to caft off all prejudice, and take care not to be milled by the authors who have writ on the fubject. But if a man is contented with examining it hiftorically, he is to confider only the political views of the principal actors.

Catherine remains inflexible. Burnet. Hall. Herbert, She is to be dowager. Act. Pub. XIV. p. 482,

The fentence of divorce being made publick, Henry took care to acquaint Catherine with it, by the lord Mountjoy, who tried in vain to perfuade her to fubmit. She still remained inflexible affirming, fhe would be the king's wife till the pope had nulled the marriage. This answer being brought to the king, he ordered her to be ftiled only prin-Alledprincess cefs dowager of Wales. But the refused to be ferved by any that would not treat her as queen; and the king thought not not fit to remove such as would show her that respect f. Shortly after, he notified his divorce, and new marriage to all the fovereigns, and particularly to the emperor, who Henry no-coldly told the English ambaflador ^g, he would confider what marriage to he was to do in the cafe.

The news of the king's marriage, and the archbishop of Herbert. Canterbury's fentence having reached Rome, the pope was The pope extremely angry with Henry, and the more, as a copy of nulls the his book against the papal authority had now appeared in archbishop's Rome itfelf. The cardinals of the imperial faction improving this occasion, very earnestly pressed him to give fen-Burnet. tence against the king, remonstrating to him, that if he re- Hollingsh. fented not fuch an affront, the authority of the holy fee would be at an end. These remonstrances produced their effect. The pope nulled the archbishop's sentence, and The pope declared the king himfelf liable to excommunication, un- gives a comlefs during the month of September, he reftored the caufe fentence ato its former state h. He contented himself for this time with gainst the only threatening him, becaufe he did not yet defpair of re- king. claiming him by the king of France's means, with whom he was going to confer at Marfeilles.

The pope's aim in that interview was, first to celebrate The pope's the nuptials between Catherine his niece, and the duke of defign in the inter-Orleans. In the next place, to devife with Francis fome view of expedient to adjust his differences with the king of England, Marfeilles, or if that could not be done, to difingage Francis from Henry's interefts. Francis wifhed fincerely, that fome way might be found to reconcile them, because he hoped to join in a league with both, the more eafily to recover the duchy of Milan. Henry had used his utmost endeavours Burnet. to diffuade him from the interview, being apprehenfive it T. III. would produce between Francis and Clement an union which f William Blount, lord Mountjoy, was to mix promifes with threatnings, particularly concerning Catherine's daughter's being put next queen Anne's iffue in the fucceffion. But all would not do. She faid, the would not damn her foul, nor fubmit to fuch an infamy : that fhe was his wife, and would never call herfelf by any other name, fince the process still depended at Rome. Mountjoy having written a relation of what had paffed between him and her, showed it her; but she dashed with a pen all those places in which the was called princefs dowager. Burnet, T. I. p. 132.

g Sir Thomas Wyat.

h The more moderate cardinals were for finding a temper, that the fentence should not be definitive, but should be given upon what had been attempted in England by the archbishop of Canterbury, (which in the file of the canon law, was called the attentates,) and it was done accordingly. The fentence was affixed foon after at Dunkirk. Burnet, T. I, p. 133. Herbert, p. 172, could

377 1533.

theemperor.

minatory

THE HISTORY

1533.

fign.

dukeof Norfolk to Marfeilles, Hall. Herbert. Burnet. Hollingfh.

He recalls him.

> Gardiner, Brian, and Bonner, are feilles.

The dake of Orleans's marriage.

The pope promifes Francis to content Henry. Herbert. Burnet.

could not but be to his prejudice i. He had ever reckoned - that Francis would act in concert with him to frighten the pope, and that their menaces would induce him at last to give him the fatisfaction he required. But perceiving he Henry's de- could not prevail, he had published his marriage. From that time, he was fully bent to widen the breach with Rome, unless the pope and the king of France should find during their interview, fome fatisfactory expedient, for which he was very He fends the willing to wait. Mean while, he fent the duke of Norfolk k in embaffy to Francis, with orders to accompany him to Marfeilles, and fee whether there was yet any hopes of agreement.

The duke of Norfolk coming to the French court the Ift of July, waited upon the king who was then on his journey to Marfeilles 1, intending however to make fome ftay in Languedoc, before he went to the congress. He accompanied him fome time, but hearing in the beginning of August, what was done at Rome against the king his master, would have returned, imagining his prefence would be of little fervice at Marfeilles. Nevertheless, at the king of France's follicitation, he contented himfelf with fending the lord Rochfort for fresh instructions from the king, who immediately recalled him. However, Francis fo artfully managed Henry, that he perfuaded him to fend a perfon to Marfeilles, to be a witnefs of what fhould pass at the interview. Henry made choice of Stephen Gardiner, Sir John Wallop and Sir Francis fent to Mar- Brian, with Edmund Bonner, a very proper perfon to execute the orders he gave him.

The pope and Francis met at Marfeilles the beginning of October, and within a few days, the duke of Orleans confunmated his marriage with Catherine de Medici^m. This affair being ended, Francis follicited the pope in behalf of the king of England, and prevailed with him at last to give Henry entire fatisfaction; but, to fave the honour of the holy fee, he would judge the caufe himfelf in a confiftory, i Francis acquinted king Henry, that his chief defign in this interview, was to ferve him; but Henry replied, that he was fo fure of his nobility and commons, that he had no apprehension of any thing the pope could do. Burnet, T. III. p. 72.

k Together with George Bullen, lord Rochford, fir William Paulet, fir Anthony Brown, and fir Francis Biian, attended with a hundred and fixty horfe. Hall, fol. 211. Herbert, p. 168.

1 And endeavoured to diffuade him from the interview and marriage proposed, or, at least, to suspend it till the pope had given our king fatisfaction; offering also aid for a war in Piedmont, if he would fuffer no more money to go out of his realm to Rome, and instead of the pope, to creft a patriarch.

Herbert, p. 169. m The pope himself married the young co ple. Herbert, p. 170.

from

OF ENGLAND.

from which the cardinals of the emperor's faction should be 1533. excluded. Thus far all went very well. But Bonner, to whom doubtlefs it was not thought fit to difcover the fecret, Bonner ac-demanding an audience of the pope ", acquainted him with pope with the king his mafter's appeal to the next general council, from the king's the fentence given or to be given against him. The pope appeal. told him, before he declared himself, he would advife with XIV.p.476. the cardinals that were with him. Some days after o, hav- Herbert, ing fent for Bonner, he gave him for answer, that according Burnet. The pope to the opinion of the cardinals, the appeal was unlawful. rejects it. Bonner, without being furprized at the anfwer, acquainted Bonner nohim in the fame manner with the like appeal of the archbishop tifies Cranof Canterbury, from the fentence which nulled his judgment mer's apfor the divorce. This put the pope into fuch a rage, that The pope he talked of throwing Bonner into a cauldon of melted lead P. threatens Guicciardini fays Francis was fo offended with Bonner's in-him. Burnet, folence, that he offered the pope to do all that lay in his power to procure him fatisfaction for the affront. But if this be true, it was only a mere compliment.

Clement departed from Marfeilles the 12th of November, The bifhop as much pleafed with the king of France as he was dif- of Paris is fent to fatisfied with Henry. Mean while, Francis not defpairing Henry with yet to adjust this affair, sent into England John de Bellay fresh expebifhop of Paris, to propound new expedients to the king. dients. Herbert. This prelate, who had refided fome time at the court of Eng- Henry acland as ambaffador, wrought fo with Henry, that he per- cepts them. fuaded him at length to agree to an expedient he proposed Burnet. to him 9. So, pleafed with having obtained more than he The bishop durft have expected, he very readily undertook to carry the goes to Rome, good news himfelf to the pope, though it was then in the Herbert. depth of winter. He found the pope inclined to do what Burnet. he could to end the affair amicably, and drew from him a politive promile, that the caule should be judged at Cambray by fuch as the king of England fhould have no reafon to except against. But Clement not trusting entirely to a The pope verbal promise, defired to have it under the king's own defires the king's aphand, that he approved of what was concerted. Moreo- probation in ver, to avoid all delays and evafions, he fixed the day for writing.

379 peal.

- November 7. Ibid.
 November 10. Ibid.

p Or burning him alive. Burnet, T. I. p. 134.

q Namely, that if the pope would put off the execution of his fentence, uptil he had indifferent judges fent, who might hear the bufinefs, he would alfo defer the execution of what he was inclined to do in withdrawing his obedience from the Roman fee, Herbert, p. 173.

L He fixes the day for an answer. The emperor's agents prefs the pope to retract. Burnet.

380

The pope refufes a delay of fix days. Herbert. Burnet.

a fentence againft 4 Henry.

rerurns juft after. The pope refufes to revoke the fentence, Herbert. Burnet.

Remark on the king's conduct.

the return of the courier, who was to be fent into Eng-1533. land.

This weighty affair being thus upon the point of conclufion, the emperor's agents were very urgent with the pope to revoke his engagement; but he told them he had given his word. However, they repeated their inftances with fuch earneftnefs, that at length they got him to promife, if Henry's anfwer came not by the time appointed, he fhould think himfelf difingaged. The courier not returning on the day appointed, the imperialists prefied the pope to give fentence against Henry representing to him that he was amused, and threatening him with the emperor's refentment. In fhort, they fo ardently follicited him, that though the bifhop of Paris only defired a delay of fix days, he could not obtain it. The pope, frighted by the menaces of the imperialifts, was fo entirely devoted to them, that what should have been done, according to the ufual forms, in three confiftories, was done in one. In a word, the pope, without flaying for He publishes an answer from England, published a sentence , declaring Henry's marriage with Catherine good and lawful, and requiring him to take his wife again, with denunciation of censures in case of disobedience. Two days after came the The courier courier with full powers for the bifhop of Paris, as the pope had defired. Several cardinals moved to revoke what had been done; but the emperor's party prefied him fo clofely, that the motion was rejected. Thus the pope, who had amufed the king for fix years by affected delays, could not be perfuaded to grant him fix days, and by this precipitation, was the caufe of the Romifh church's lofs of the kingdom of England.

It must however be confessed, that it is very difficult to conceive what the king's view was in the agreement he pretended to make with the pope. Can it be supposed he meant to quit his newly acquired title of fupreme head of the church of England? but he appeared fo jealous, during the reft of his days, of this fupremacy, which kept the elergy in awe, whereas before, the clergy depended more on the pope than on him, that there is no likelihood he would think of parting with this prerogative. And yet, how could the king's fupremacy fublift in cafe he agreed with the pope? Or how could the pope refolve to content him with refpect to his divorce, without requiring him to refign his fupremaey? Certainly it is impoffible to reconcile these two things;

r Qn the and of March. Burnet, T. I. p. 136.

which

which gives occasion to suspect, the king acted not with fincerity in his pretended agreement with the pope, and that after having justified his divorce by the pope's fentence, he meant to drop him there, and withdraw from his obedience. This Burnet. fuspicion is confirmed by what passed in England, at the T.III. p. 92. very time the king difpatched the courier to Rome, with the engagement the pope had defired. I have observed that the bishop of Paris went post from London about the end of December: that upon his arrival at Rome he fent a courier to the king to acquaint him with what he had obtained of the pope; and that the king fent back the fame courier with his approbation. Now what fpeed foever the bishop and courier could make, it is impossible the courier could return to Rome before the middle of January. But at the very time the king difpatched the courier, he held at Westminster a parliament, where acts were passed directly contrary to the agreement he feemed to defire *.

The parliament meeting the fifteenth of January 1534, 1534. opened the feffion with repealing the statute of Henry IV. against hereticks. This was not with defign to exempt Parliament them from the penalties in that flatute, fince it was enacted Herbert. in this that they fhould be burned, but only to hinder the Burnet. clergy from being fole judges in caufes of this nature. That Act to take was the real intent of the new act, whereby, for the fu- from the clergy the ture, hereticks were to be profecuted and tried according cognizance to the laws of the land, without any regard to the canon of herely. law t.

By another flatute, which the parliament paffed at the fame time, it was enacted, First, That all convocations should be called for the future by the king's writ. Secondly, That the king fhould name thirty two perfons, fix-

s This year, on June 24, died Mary, queen dowager of France, and wife of Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk. Hall, fol. 217. t By the statute of Henry IV. bishops might, upon suspicion of herefy, commit any perfon to prifon, without prefentment or acculation, contrary to what was practifed in all other cafes. Therefore the statute of Henry IV. was repealed, but those of Richard II. and Henry V. were left still in force, with the following regulation : that hereticks should be proceeded against upon prefentments, by two witneffes at leaft, and then committed, but brought to answer to their indictments in open court ; and if found guilty, and would not abjure, or were relapse, to be adjudged to death; the king's writ de hæretico comburendo being first had. This act is the fourteenth in the Statute book, thirty third in the records, thirty first in the journal. It may cafily be imagined how acceptable this act was to the whole nation, fince it was an effectual limitation of the ecclefialtical power, in one of the most uncafy parts of it. And this regulation of the arbitrary proceedings of the fpiritual courts, was a particular bleffing to the favourers of the reformation. Burnet, tom, I. p. 147.

THE HISTORY

teeen of both houses of parliament, and as many of the clergy, to examine the canons and conflitutions of the church, Another with power to abrogate or confirm fuch as they thought whereby the fit. As it is certain the parliament acted by the directions king is im- of the court, it may eafily be conceived the king was not powered to much inclined to agree with the pope, though by the engagename thirty ment he did fend or had already fent to Rome, he feemed refioners to re- folved.

. Here is another argument of the little regard Henry had for the pope, at the very time he was going to obtain all his defires. Before the news came to England of the fentence gainst Eliza- against the king, the parliament passed an act of attainder beth Barton. against Elizabeth Barton, commonly called the holy maid of Kent, who pretending to be infpired, foretold, that " if the " king married Anne Bullen he should not be a king a month An account " longer." This nun having been wrought upon and inftructed by a certain curate, counterfeited the prophetels and mixed with her prediction invectives against the king's proceedings in the affair of the divorce, and threats against his chief counfellors. Several Franciscans countenanced her pretended revelations, fo that fhe was in great repute with the people; nay, archbishop Warham, fir Thomas More, and John Fisher bishop of Rochester, were deceived with the reft. But at length, the nun and her accomplices being apprejudged todie. hended by the king's order, the affair was fo carefully examined, that the whole contrivance was discovered, and the counterfeit prophetels condemned to die with her corrupters. However, as the affair had made a great noife, the king was pleafed it should be brought before the parliament, to render their condemnation more authentick. Sanders would fain reckon this nun and her accomplices for mar-· tyrs, though their own confessions sufficiently justified their condemnation ". If the king had really intended to be reconciled to the court of Rome, nothing could be more unfeasonable than to pass this act, when the affair of the divorce feemed to be upon the point of being adjusted to his fatisfaction.

Whilf

" Elizabeth Barton, of Kent, in the parish of Aldington, being troubled with a fort of hysterical fits, which distorted her limbs fo, that people began to think her infpired of God, was perfuaded by Richard Mafter, the parish prieft, who hoped to draw great advantages from it, to pretend to prophecy and fupernatural impulse. Whereupon he taught her to counterfeit trances, and to utter speeches against the wickedness of the times, particularly against herefy and innovation. At length she gave out, that on such a day the thould be perfectly cured, if the went in pilgrimage to the image of the form the canons. Act of attainder a-Hall. Burnet.

Burnet.

of her. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh. Burnet. Strype's Mem.

She is ad-

1534.

OF ENGLAND.

Whilft the parliament was employed in these matters, Henry received news of the fentence " given and published ____ against him at Rome, with all the circumstances demon- The king strating the little regard the pope had for his perfon and dig- and parlia-mentoffendnity. These hasty proceedings convincing him there was no- ed at the thing more to be expected from Rome, he no longer delayed news of the to execute his refolution to break off all correspondence with pope's fenthe pope. The parliament was no less offended than the king Herbert. with the pope's conduct. So, the whole legislature, being in the fame mind, refolved utterly to abolish the papal authority in England. After what Clement had done, there was the bleffed virgin, in a chapel within the parish of Aldington, the reputation whereof the crafty priest had a mind to raife. On the day appointed, above two thousand people were gathered together to fee the miraculous cure. Being brought to the chapel, she fell into one of her fits, and fpoke many words of great piety, faying, that by the inspiration of God, she was called to be a nun, and that doctor Bocking (a canon of Chrift church, in Canterbury, an affociate of the priest's) was to be her ghoftly father. Prefently after fhe feemed, by the interceffion of our lady, to be perfectly recovered, and afterwards became a nun, in the priory of St. Sepulchre's, in Canterbury, where Bocking frequently vifited her. He, with fome others, being apprehenfive the king's marriage with Anne Bullen might be detrimental to the popish religion, perfuaded the nun to menance the king with death. The friers that were in the confpiracy, had agreed to publish these revelations in their fermons up and down the kingdom. They had given notice of them to the pope's ambaffadors, and brought the maid to declare her revelations to them. They had also fent an account to queen Catherine, for encouraging her to fland out and not fubmit to the laws. The king, who had defpifed the thing long, ordered, that in November the last year, the mad and her accomplices should be brought into the Star Chamber, where, before many lords, they all without rack or torture confelled the whole cheat, and were adjudged to fland in St. Paul's all the fermon time, after which, every one on the Sunday following read his confession openly before the people. Then they were carried to the Tower, where they lay till the feffion of parliament. The matter being brought before the house, the nun, Richard Master, doctor Bocking, Richard Dering, Henry Gold, a London minister, Richard Rifby, were attainted of high treafon, and executed at Tyburn, April 21. The bifhop of Rochester, Thomas Abel, and four more, were judged guilty of misprifion of treason, and to forfeit their goods and chattels to the king, and to be imprifoned during pleafure. The wicked defigns of this imposture did much alienate people from the interest of Rome, and made the other acts both pafs more easily, and be better received by the people. It was also generally believed, that what was now discovered was no new practice, but that many of the vifions and miracles by which. religious orders had raifed their credit, were of the fame nature; and it made way for the deftroying of all the monasteries in England. Bishop Fisher; pleaded in his excuse, that all he did was, only to try whether her revelations were true. And for his concealing what fhe had told him about the king, he thought it needlefs to fay any thing, because she (as she faid) had told it to the king herself. So he refused to make any fubmiffion ; and yet it does not appear that the king proceeded against him upon this act., See Hall, fol. 219, &c. Stow, p. 570. Bur-net, tom. I. p. 150, &c.

w From Edward Karne, and William Revet, who were employed to folicit this important bufinefs. Herbert, P. 173.

no other way; it was neceffary either to withftand him vigo-1534. roufly, or prepare to endure all the feverities and indignities, \sim to which England was liable in the reigns of Henry II. and John Lackland. But the times were altered. The English were no longer willing to fubmit to the bafe actions required by the popes of their ancestors, neither was the king's interest different from that of his subjects. Thus, every one being equally tired of the papal yoke, it was deemed more honourable to demolifh at once that formidable power, under which the kingdom had fo long groaned, than vainly to expect, it would of itfelf be reduced within due bounds. It may be eafily judged, the favourers of the new religion were not fparing of their pains to bring things to this state. The refo-Statut. c. 20. lution that had been taken was quickly put in execution. In a few days an act was pafled containing fundry articles, all

Act abolifhauthority.

The first confirmed the statute for abolishing the annates, ing the papal or first fruits.

> By the fecond it was enacted, that for the future, the pope fhall have nothing to do in the nominating or prefenting of bishops; but that, when a bishoprick shall become vacant, the king shall fend to the chapter a congé d'elire, and in cafe the election fhall not be over within twelve days after the licence, it shall belong to the king. That the bishop elect shall fwear fealty to the king, and then be recommended by his majefty to the archbishop to be confecrated. That if the bifhop elect or archbishop refuse to obey the contents of this act, they shall be liable to the penalty of præmunire. Moreover, all perfons were expresly forbid to apply to the bishop of Rome for bulls, palls, and the like .-

Statut. c.21.

By a third article, were abolished, Peter-pence, all procurations, delegations, expeditions of bulls, and difpenfations coming from the court of Rome; and the archbifhop of Canterbury was appointed to grant all fuch difpenfations, &c. as should not be contrary to the law of God, on condition that part of the money thence arising should be paid into the . king's exchequer *. Moreover; all religious houfes, exempt and not exempt, should be subject to the archbishop's visitation y.

* All difpenfations formerly taxed at or above four pounds, should be also confirmed under the great feal.

tending to the fame point.

y All monasteries, &c. heretofore - exempt from the archbishop's visitation, were fill to be fo, and fuch abbeys whole elections were formerly confirmed by the pope, were now to be confirmed by the king. See the act, be-ing 21 in the Statute book, 27 in the Record, and S in the Journal.

By

By a fourth, it was enacted that the king's marriage with Catherine, widow of his brother prince Arthur, fhould be held null and void, and that the thould be reputed only prin-Statut, c.23 cefs dowager of Wales. On the contrary, the king's marriage with Anne Bullen is declared valid, and the fucceffion to the crown fettled upon their iffue. Moreover, it is faid, that any perfon of what quality foever, who fhall fpeak or write against the king's marriage, shall be adjudged a traitor to the king and flate, and that all the king's fubjects without diffinction shall be obliged to swear, they will observe and maintain the contents of this act, After this, follows a lift of the marriages forbid by the law of God, among which is that of a man with his brother's widow; and it was enacted, that no fuch marriages fhould be allowed for the future, and that fuch as were then in being fhould be diffolved.

Thus was the papal authority abolished in England by act The people. of patliament. Indeed, there were few bishops and abbots rejoice at it, present when the act passed z. However, there was but one fingle bishop who refused to fet his name to it, because they made a great difference between fubmitting to an act paffed by a lawful authority and giving their vote for it. The generality of the people expressed great joy to fee themselves freed from a yoke, which neither they, nor their forefathers could bear. None but the monks exclaimed against it, and drew upon themselves the king's indignation, the effects whereof they afterwards felt. Those who wished for the reformation were highly pleafed to fee the main obstacle removed, believing the reft would quickly follow. But this reformation, which they fo impatiently expected, made not in this reign all the progrefs, they imagined they had reafon to hope.

The parliament breaking up the 30th of March 2, after all the members had fworn to observe what was enjoined in the z There were prefent only the archbishop of Canterbury, the bishops of London, Winchefter, Bath and Wells, Landaffe, and Carlifle, with twelve abbots. Burnet, tom. I. p. 144.

a Belides the acts mentioned above. there were others of fome importance made; namely, 1. That perfons in-, dicted of petit treason, wilful murder, robbery, or other felony, and upon their arraignment standing mute, or peremptorily challenging above twenty of the jury, or elfe refufing to answer directly to their indictments, shall not have the benefit of the clergy. 2. By another, the deteftable vice of buggery was adjudged felony. 3. There was also an act made to prevent the deftroying of wild fowl, whereby it was enjoined, that none should be taken from the last day of May, to the last of Auguft, upon pain of one year's imprifonment. 4. Whereas fome people had gathered into few hands, feveral farms, 3 b. 224

VOL. VI.

1534.

1534. \sim Oath taken by the fubing to the act. Act. Pub. XIV.p.487, &c.-527. Burnet. T. I. p. 146.

Act. Pub.

Fisher and More refuse to take the oath, and are fent to the Tower. Herbert, Strype: Burnet.

the fore mentioned act, the king fent commissioners throughout the kingdom to administer the same oath to all his subjects. The collection of the publick acts contains the oaths jects accord. of feveral abbots and fryars of all orders to this effect : that they would be faithful to the king, the queen, their heirs and fucceffors : that they owned the king for supreme head of the church of England : that the bishop of Rome has no more jurifdiction than any other bifhop : that they renounced his .obedience : that they would preach fincerely doctrines agreeable to the holy fcriptures : that in their prayers, they would pray first for the king as supreme head of the church of England, then for the queen and her iffue, and laftly for the archbishop of Canterbury b. Some time after, Lee archbi-XIV.p.492. fhop of York certified by a writing of the 5th of May, that in the convocation of his province it was declared, the pope had no more power in England than any other bifhop. Only John Fisher bishop of Rochester, and fir Thomas More late chancellor, refused to fign the act of parliament, which contained three principal articles, the fuccession of the crown, the nullity of the king's first marriage with the validity of his fecond, and the abolishment of the papal authority. They offered to fign the first article; but for the other two, they faid, their confcience would not fuffer them to confent to them, whereupon they were committed to the Tower c.

Whilf-

and great plenty of cattle; particularly fheep, fome to the number of twenty thousand, whereby the rents of lands were not only increafed, but alfo tillage very much decayed, fome churches and towns had been pulled down, and the price of corn, cattle, &c. excef-fively enhanced ; it was therefore enacted, that no man should keep above two thousand sheep at one time: and not hold above two farms at once, and those to be in the parish where he lives. 5. That no man fhould buy bound books brought from beyond fea, nor buy any fuch by retail.. See Statut .. 25 Hen. VIII.

b Gardiner wrote to Cromwell from Winchester the 6th of May, that the lord Audley and others, with all the abbots, priors, wardens, and curates, within the fhire had taken the oath. The forms in which they did it are not known, for though they were enrolled, yet in queen Marg's days Bonner and others were commissioned to. examine the records, and, raze out all things done either in contempt of the fee of Rome, or the defamation of religious houfes. However, two of the fubicriptions of religious orders, dated May 4, 1534, efcaped their diligence. One is by fix abbies, the other by the priorefe and convent of the Dominicannuns at Deptford. See Burnet's collection, N. 50. vol. I.

c At a meeting of the privy council. at Lambeth, many were cited to take the oath. More was first called, and the oath being tendered him, he replied, after having confidered the act, he would neither blame those that made it, nor those that fwore the oath :: but for his part, though he was willing. to fwear to the fucceffion, if he might be fuffered to draw up the oath himfelf, yet for the oath that was offeredhim, his confcience fo moved him, that he could not, without hazarding his · fouis

:36

Whilft these oaths were administring throughout the king- 1534. dom, the king fent the archbishop of York and the bishop of Durham d to tell Catherine, the must forbear affuming the ti- Henry actle of queen, and to lay before her the reafons that 'moved therine with the parliament to deprive her of it. But fhe replied, fhe the act of believed her marriage with the king good and lawful, and parliament. fhould hold it as fuch to her dying day : that fhe had never Herbert, p. 175. confummated her marriage with prince Arthur; and they who The queen's affirmed it, fpoke not the truth : that fhe was not bound to answer. fubmit to the archbishop of Canterbury's sentence, fince the pope had nulled it and decreed the contrary e: that the king's marriage with Anne was not valid, as being made during the appeal: that the was not obliged to fubmit to the acts of the parliament, not being the king's fubject but his wife : that befides, these acts were made by the king's subjects, upon an affair wherein he was party.

Though Henry would have been very glad of Catherine's Negotiation fubmission to what the parliament had enacted, it was not between her obstinacy that gave him the most uneafines. The em- Henry peror having undertaken to execute the pope's fentence, Hen-fruitlefs. iy was naturally to expect to be attacked by that powerful Heibert. enemy. In order therefore to prevent him, or to put himfelf in a state of defence, he defired to make a league with foul, take it. Upon which, deing defired to withdraw, others were called upon, and did all take the oath, except Fisher, who answered in almost the fame manner as More had done. Then More was again brought in, and they fhewed him how many had taken it ; he faid, he judged no man for doing it, only he could not do it himfelf. Being asked the reason, he replied; he feared it might provoke the king the more against him if he should offer reafons, which would be called difputing against law: but however, if the king would command him to do it, he would put them in writing. Cranmer urged him with this argument, that fince he blamed not others for taking it, it feemed he was not perfuaded it was a fin, but was doubtful in the matter: but he did know certainly, he ought to obey the king and the law; therefore he was obliged to do that'about which he was certain, notwithstanding his doubtings. He answered. though he had examined the matter very carefully, yet his confcience leaned politively to the other fide, and offered to purge himfelf by oath that it was purely out of confcience that he refused it. The abbot of Westminster presed him (with an argument too often ufed in the like cafes) that he might fee his confcience was erroneous, fince the great council of the realm was of another mind. Cranmer in a letter to Cromwell, earneftly preffed to accept . the oath as More and Fisher offered ; for if they once fwore to the fucceffion, it would quiet the kingdom, fince all others would acquiefce and fubmit to the judgments of fo great men. But this fage advice was not followed. Burnet, vol. I. p. 156. Strype's Mem. tom. I. p. 174:

d Edward Lee, and Cuthbert Tunstal : they waited upon Catherine at Bugden, near Huntingdon. Herbert, p. 175. Adding; that fhe would never leave the name of a queen; but always take herfelf for king Henry's wife. Herbert, p. 179.

Bb2

the 387

Francis and

the king of France by a new treaty, which would render their union more effectual for their common defence. Francis feemed very ready to comply, but meant that all the terms fhould be to his advantage, and to make Henry fubfervient to his defigns elfewhere. He had ftill an eye upon the duchy of Milan, as upon what belonged to him of right, and had been unjuftly taken from him, and defigned to recover it, though he had expressly renounced it by the treaty of Cambray. To that end he had facrificed the honour of his house, in marrying his second fon to a bastard branch of the family of the Medici, because he did not think he could proceed without the pope. But on the other hand, he was afraid of lofing the fruit of that alliance, by uniting too clofely with the king of England, whom the pope could now confider but as an open enemy. In this perplexity, he endeavoured to perfuade Henry to act only privately, by fending large fums to the German protestants to foment the diffention between them and the emperor, and embroil him fo, as to hinder him from thinking of Italy. Henry did not abfolutely reject the propofal. He was very willing to affift the protestants with a good fum of money : but pretended withal that Francis should attack Navarre with a powerful army, whilft on his part he carried war into Flanders. But Francis could not refolve to join fo openly with England, for fear of offending the pope. Befides, he turned all his thoughts to the Milanefe, where an accident about the end of the laft year gave him an opportunity to carry his arms. As this accident was the occafion or pretence of a new war between the emperor and the king of France, it will be neceffary briefly to mention it.

The duke of Milan beheads Merveilles the king of France's Bellai. Mezerai. to P. Daniel. W

Francesco Sforza was no sooner restored to Milan upon very hard terms, but he wished to be freed from the emperor's yoke, and the obligation to pay him the fum he had promifed. Francis having fome knowledge of Sforza's difpolition, believed he should cherish it, in hopes of reaping by it one day some advantage. But as Sforza greatly feared to give the emperor fuspicion, and confequently the affair was to be managed very privately, Francis found means to keep at Milan an envoy, who could not be suspected. He chofe for that purpose a Milanese gentleman, called Merveilles, who having been formerly banifhed from Milan by Ludovico the Black, had lived in France ever fince. The troubles of the Milanese being entirely ended by the peace of Cambray; Merveilles returned home with a letter of credence for the duke, to which the duke fent an answer, receiving 388 1534. ceiving the gentleman as envoy of France, though in pub-lick he treated him not as fuch. However fecret Marveilles's 1534. negotiation might be, the emperor had fome notice of it, and made great complaints to the duke, who, to remove all fuspicion, refolved to facrifice to him this envoy. Accordingly, he fuborned a perfon to quarrel with Merveilles, which ended in the murder of the party employed, who was killed by Merveilles's fervants, without however their mafter's being prefent. Whereupon Merveilles was committed to prifon, and two days after beheaded, without any one being fuffered to speak with him. Francis hearing of it, wrote a menacing letter to the duke, and acquainted all his allies with what had happened. The duke would have excufed himfelf, by denying that Merveilles was at Milan as envoy. What he faid was true in respect to the publick. But he could not difown his own letter to the king in anfwer to the letter of credence. When the French ambaffador informed the emperor of the outrage committed at Milan upon Merveilles, he coldly answered, He could not conceive, how the king of France could be affected with the death of a fubject of the duke of Milan, whom his fovereign had punished according to his deferts. This answer made the king believe, the emperor was concerned in Merveilles's death, which was a fresh cause of disgust, and inflamed his defire of revenge. But on the other hand, he was not forry the fa- Francistakes tisfaction he demanded was refused, because he intended to eccasion to take occasion from thence to enter the Milanese fword in into the hand. To that purpose, he ordered a levy of lansquenets Milanese. in Germany, and demanded pallage of the duke of Savoy to He demands go and chaftife the duke of Milan. But that prince fearing the duke of to difpleafe the emperor, would not grant it. For which Savoy, and reafon Francis, who could not enter the Milanefe but by upon his repaffing through the duke of Savoy's dominions; refolved to fulal declares make war upon him, using for pretence certain claims he had him, in right of Louisa his mother to the inheritance of the late duke of Savoy. Till every thing was ready to begin the war, he fpent the whole year in divers negotiations, tending to create the emperor troubles, and difable him to affift the duke of Savoy.

Whilft Francis was thus employed, the fituation of the Clement affairs of Italy was changed by the death of Clement VII. VII's death, who was carried off by a fit of fickness the twenty fixth of fucceeds September. The twelfth of October following, cardinal him. Farnefe was chosen pope, and affumed the name of Paul III. Guicciard, There

Bb3

THE HISTORY

1534. Affairs of Germany. Sleidan.

399

There were likewise this year in Germany some alterations, which put the affairs of the protestants in a tolerable fituation. The landgrave of Heffe defeated king Ferdinand's army, commanded by the count Palatine, and reftored the duke of Wirtemberg to his dominions. Ferdinand, not being able any longer to refift the landgrave, was forced to agree to the duke's reftoration; but withal obtained, that both the duke and the landgrave fhould acknowledge him for king of the Romans. Shortly after, the elector of Saxony acknowledged him alfo, having first got a promise from him, that he would not fuffer any perfon to be molefted in the empire on the account of religion.

Henry is bent to fland to the ruppope. Herbert. Burnet. Hall, Hollingfh. Divers acts paffed upon that occafion.

Clement VII's death caufed no alteration in the measures taken by the court of England to shake off entirely the pature with the pal yoke. Matters had been carried too far ever to recede. Befides, the king having not much to fear from abroad, by reason of the troubles, the emperor was like to be involved in, and his fubjects being inclined to fupport him, it would have been imprudent to neglect fo favourable a juncture, and leave his work unfinished. So, the parliament meeting the third of November, passed several material acts, of which it will fuffice to relate the fubftance, in order to flow they all tended to the fame point, that is, to break all the bonds which had ferved to hold the English in subjection to the popes.

I. Act confirms the king's title of head of

The first act confirmed the king's title of supreme head of the church of England, already given him by the clergy f. Though Henry had very willingly accepted this title from the church, the clergy, nay, had not left them the liberty to refuse it, he feemed however to doubt, whether he fhould receive it when offered by the parliament. He was pleafed first to advife with his council, and confult fome of the bifhops, whether out of scruple, or to show it was not extorted. They whom he confulted having fatisfied him, that the authority. affumed by the bifhop of Rome over the whole church had no foundation in scripture; he banished all his scruples, if it be true that he had any, and from thenceforward took all occafions to improve the prerogatives which flowed from this new title.

> f And declared, that the king, his heirs, and fucceflors, shall have full power and authority to vifit, reform, and reftrain, all fuch errors, herefies, abuses, and offences, which by any manner of spiritual jurifdiction ought to be reformed. See Statut.

By.

By a fecond act it was declared treafon to fpeak, write, 1534. or imagine any thing against the king or queen g.

The third debarred perfons accufed of treason of the bene- II. Treason fit of fanctuary.

By a fourth, the parliament prefcribed a form of oath con- III, Concerning the fucceffion, to be taken by all the king's fubjects; cerning and annulled all former oaths upon that head.

The fifth was very grievous to the clergy, as it gave the of oath. king the annates and first fruits of the benefices; whereas by V. Grants the act already passed, the ecclesiasticks were in hopes of the first fruits and being ever freed from that burden. Moreover, by the fame tenths to act the yearly revenue of the tenth part of all livings was the king. granted to the king h.

By a fixth statute, provision was made for twenty five fuf- VI. Suffrafragan bishops, each of whom was to depend on his dioce- gan bishops, fan, who was to prefent two to the king for him to choofe one. Thus was revived in the church of England the ufe of Chorepifcopi, introduced into the primitive church, but afterwards discontinued for several centuries 1.

Laftly, The parliament condemned Fisher bishop of Ro-Fisher and chefter, and Sir Thomas More to perpetual imprifonment, More are condemned and confiscated all their eftates, for refufing to take the oath by the parenjoined by the act of the former fession. This fentence liament. was confidered by fome as very unjust, whilst others admired Burnet.

g Or to call the king heretick, fchifmatick, tyrant, infidel, or ufurper, which opprobrious names fome infolent friars were very liberal of.

h To be paid between Christmas and the first of April. It was ordered in this act, that the chancellor of England should direct into every diocefe in the realm, commissions in the king's name, under his great feal, as well to the archbishop and bishop of every diocefe, as to fuch other perfons as the king fhould appoint; to examine, fearch, and require, by all ways and mcans, the true, just, and whole yearly value of all the manors, lands, tenements, hereditaments, rents, tithes, offerings, emoluments, and all other profits, as well spiritual as temporal, belonging to any archbishoprick, bishoprick, -archdeaconry, deanery, hofpital, college, prebend, cathedral, or collegiate church, - parfonage, vicarage, - free chapel, or any other benefices or promotion fpiritual. Accordingly, fevesal commissioners were appointed for each county, with whom were joined the bifhops of the refpective diocefes, and a certain number of auditors. The valuations that were thus taken by thefe commissioners, were all returned to Cromwell, mafter of the rolls; and according to them have the first fruits been paid ever fince. Strype's Mem. tom. I. p. 211.

i The towns appointed for fuffragan fees were, Thetford, Ipfwich, Colchefter, Dover, Guilford, Southampton, Taunton, Shaftsbury, Molton, Marlborough, Bedford, Leicester, Gloucefter, Shrewfbury, Briftol, Penreth, -Bridgwater, Nottingham, Grantham, Hull, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Pereth, and Berwick, St. Germans, and the Ifle of Wight: They were to exercife fuch jurifdiction as the bifhop of the diocefe fhould give to them; but their authority was to laft no longer than the bifhop continued his commif- . fion to them: In Burnet's collection, N. 51. vol. I. the reader may fee a writ for making a fuffragan bifhop, Bb4 in to fpeak evil of the king. sanctuaries. IV. Form 392 1534.

THE HISTORY

in the fame the effects of God's justice upon perfons that had been violent perfecutors of the Lutherans.

General pardon. Burnet,

Before the parliament broke up, the king granted a goneral pardon, from which however Fifher and More were excluded k.

Proclamation against the name of pope. Stow. Herbert. The bishops fwear against the pope." . Gardiner's diffimulation. Herbert. Progrefs of the reformation in England. Burnet, raifed by More. Burnet. Fox.

Bible burnt at London. Hall. Burnet.

Shortly after, the king iffued out a proclamation, forbidding to give to the bifhop of Rome the name of pope, and commanding that name to be razed out of all books to deftroy the remembrance of it if possible. Then the bishops voluntarily fwore to renounce expressly all obedience to the bishop of Rome. Gardiner, now bishop of Winchester, was not the laft to take this oath, though in his foul he abhorred it as very unjust. But a blind condescension for the king in this respect was then the only means to preferve his favour. Belides, Gardiner was thereby enabled to crofs upon other points the reformers, who daily gained ground ¹.

It was not only in Germany that the reformation had made fome progrefs, but also in many other places. In England it had been countenanced in fome measure by cardinal Wolfey, as during his ministry, no perfon was profecuted for herefy, though the clergy wanted not occafions to exercife their ufual feverifies, had they been left to take their own courfe. Perfecutions After Wolfey's difgrace, fir Thomas More being made chancellor, perfuaded the king that what did him the most injury at the court of Rome, was the report of his being a favourer of the innovators, and to remove this falle imputation, the most infallible way was to show a zeal for religion. Henry following this advice, ordered the laws against hereticks to be rigoroully executed, and very ftrictly prohibited the importing any of their books into the kingdom. But this prohibition was not capable of hindering feveral of Luther's treatifes from being brought into England with Tindal's tranflation of the New Testament, who was retired into Flanders. The bifhop of London having notice of it, caufed fome copies to be feized, and publickly burnt by the hangman m.

But

k This parliament granted the king a tenth and a fiftcenth, to be paid in three years. There had been no fubfidy granted for twelve years before. Burnet, tom. I. p. 158.

I This year, on the 11th of August, the monasteries of Observant friars at Canterbury, Greenwich and Richmond, Newark and Newcaftle, were fuppreffed, and Augustin friars, (according to fome) put in their room ; though others mention not this exchange. See Stow, p.

571. Herbert, p. 178. m Tunstal, bishop of London, being at Antwerp, (where Tindal was) in 1520, as he returned from his embaffy at the treaty of Cambray, fent for one Packington, an English mercant,

But this was fo far from injuring the reformation, that it 1534. rather turned to its advantage. Many perfons, full of indignation at this impious act, inferred that the fcriptures were contrary to the religion generally profeffed, fince the clergy took fuch care to hinder the bible from being read, and that alone raifed their curiofity to read. On the other hand, the diflike the English had taken to the pope, greatly increased by the reading of the Lutheran writings.

As the reformation gained ground, the zeal of its ene-Perfecution mies was inflamed against fuch as embraced it. Whilst in England Burnet, More was chancellor, he fpared no pains to deftroy them Fox. utterly. Many fuffered martyrdom " with a wonderful conflancy, which very much contributed to ftrengthen their brethren. At length, the king having to manage the German put a flop to, protestants, because he might afterwards want them, fufpended More's perfecution. On the other hand, Anne Bullen very much mollified the king in that refpect. Archbifhop Cranmer and Cranmer contributed to it likewife to the utmost of his Gromwell power, and Thomas Cromwell, now in great efteem with reformation. the king, feconded their endeavours as far as in him lay 9, Strong party But they had a ftrong party against them, confisting of the against duke of Norfolk, Gardiner bishop of Winchester, Longland Burnet, bishop of Lincoln, almost all the churchmen who had any accels to the court, and those who when they preached before the king filled their fermons with invectives against the reformation. All these had gained Henry's confidence by their compliance in the affair of the divorce and the fupremacy, though in the last they acted contrary to their fentiments. By this condescension, they were enabled effectually chant, and defired him to fee how many of Tindal's New Teftaments he might have for money. Packington acquainted Tindal with what the bifhop proposed. Tindal was very glad of it, for he was then defigning a new and more correct edition; but being poor, and the former impression not being fold off, he could not go about it, . So, giving Packington all the copies that lay in his hands, the bishop paid for them, and brought them over and burnt them in Cheapfide. Next year, when the fecond edition was finished, many more were brought over, and chancellor More enquiring of one Conftantine, who it was that encouraged and supported them at Antwerp, was told, that the greatest encouragement they had was from the bifhop of London, who bought up half the old impreffion. This made all that heard it laugh heartily. William Tindal, born on the borders of Wales, and brought up at Oxford, was afterwards burnt in 1536, at Filford, eighteen miles from Antwerp, crying out at the flake, Lord open the king of England's eyes. Hall, fol. 186, 227. Fox. Burnet, T. I. p. 159.

n As T. Hitton, in 1530, befides Bilney, and the reft mentioned above, p. 793, as also John Tewksbury, &c. See Burnet, tom. I. p. 162, &c. Fox, tom, II.

o He was, on April 12, appointed chancellor of the Exchequer. Rymer, tom. XIV. p. 456, and, on the 21ft of September, this fame year, mafter of the rolls. Stow, p. 571.

ta

to oppose the reformers in all the articles which concerned not the pope, and especially in that of the real prefence. which the king deemed unquestionable, and thought fo all his life. In fpite of all this, the heads of the reformed defpaired not of inclining him by degrees to a farther reformation, because of the connection, the articles of religion have one with another. Befides, their party grew ftronger every day, by the junction of fuch as read the holy fcriptures and the religious books which were handed about, notwithstanding the king's prohibition. Nothing fhows more the number and ftrength of that party, than the readiness wherewith the parliament paffed the acts which tended to leffen the clergy's power, and shake off the papal yoke.

The reformation made likewife fome progrefs in France : the king himfelf expressed an inclination for the doctrine of the protestants, which was privately countenanced by his fifter Margaret queen of Navarre. But the cardinals of Tournon and Lorrain, who were in great credit with Francis, diffuaded him from it fo earneftly, that they gained him at laft, nay, made him a violent perfecutor.

Before I close what relates to the events of the year 1534, tween Eng- I must not forget to mention that a twelvemonth's truce concluded the laft year P between England and Scotland, was turned into a peace the iith of May this year. By the treaty, the peace was to last till the death of one of the two kings, and Henry might without breaking it keep the Douglasses in England.

In the beginning of the year 1535, Francis I. fent an embaffy to Henry, under colour of discharging the duty of a good friend and ally, but in reality to try to deceive him, by feigning to acquaint him with his fecrets, and alk his advice. The occafion of the embally was this : the emperor having refolved to carry his arms into Africa, had a mind to amuse Francis, left in his absence he should attack the duke of Savoy, and fo open a way to the duchy of Milan, as he feemed to intend. To that purpole, he had dispatched an ambaffador to him, with orders to propole a marriage between his third daughter and Philip prince of Spain, and another betwen the dauphin and Mary, daughter of Henry and Catherine of Arragon. Moreover, he had offered him a penfion of a hundred thousand crowns for the duke of Orleans upon the duchy of Milan, and the duchy itself, after the death of Francesco Sforza, who had no heirs. It was evident,

P October 1. Rymer, tom. XIV. p. 480.

2

Francis I. feems to favour the reformation.

Peace beland and Scotland. Act Pub. XIV.p.480, 529-542. Herbert, Hall.

1535. -----Embaffy of France to fift Henry. Bellai. - Herbert.

394 1534.

evident, these overtures were defigned only to amuse Francis, who confidered them himfelf upon no other foot. Never- 4 thelefs, he imagined they would ferve to procure him fome advantage from Henry, if he let him know he was courted by the emperor. To that end, he fent into England admiral Chabot Seigneur de Brion, on pretence to advise with the king upon these offers. But his chief aim was to make him uneafy, and induce him to offer fome advantageous propofals. It appeared in the fequel he would have perfuaded him to things which were very far from his thoughts. The Henry's admiral having difcharged his commiffion, Henry anfwered, anfwer to Francis's he much wondered, the emperor fhould pretend to marry propofal, his daughter, over whom he neither had nor ever fhould Herbert. have any right or power : that it was manifest, he only fought to break the union between France and England, and therefore he hoped the king of France would not be fo much his own enemy, as to hearken to fuch overtures. Shortly after, Henry's he fent orders to his ambassador at Paris 9 to tell Francis, offer. Herbert, he would give Elizabeth his daughter and heir to the duke Hall. of Angoulême his third fon, upon the following conditions : Hollingth. that Francis himfelf, his three fons, the princes of the blood, the principal nobility of France, the parliaments, and univerfities should folemnly promife to cause to be revoked the fentence given against him by the bishop of Rome: that the duke of Angoulême should be sent into England to be educated : that in cafe by his marriage he fhould come to the crown of England, the duchy of Angoulême fhould be independent of the crown of France. These conditions were afterwards mitigated, and Francis I. feemed to agree to them. But he required in his turn, that Henry fhould affift Francis's him in the war of Savoy, and forgive him the perpetual annuity of a hundred thousand crowns, which he was bound to pay by a treaty. Henry perceiving Francis's infincerity, Henry de-mands what told the admiral, that inftead of forgiving the penfion he was due to expected, the king his mafter should pay the arrears, and him. clear by the time appointed all his other debts. This answer put an end to the negotiation, which probably was undertaken only to found Henry concerning the penfion.

Francis's grand defign was to recover the duchy of Milan, Francis's under pretence of revenging the affront done him by Sforza. projects. But, to execute this project, it was necessary to raife the demand.

9 Sir John Wallop. There were bishop of Ely, fir William Fitzwilliam, moreover fent upon this occafion, Tho- and doctor Fox. Herbert, p. 179. mas Howard, duke of Norfolk, the Hall, fol. 226.

395 1535.

emperor

emperor troubles, which would hinder him from affifting that duchy. There were four feveral quarters from whence he hoped to embroil the emperor. First, from the pope and the princes of Italy. Secondly, in Germany, by means of the league of Smalcald. Thirdly, by fomenting difcord between the king of England and the emperor. Laftly, by drawing the Turks into Germany. In order to all this, he had married his fon the duke of Orleans to Catherine de Medici: lodged a hundred thousand crowns in the hands of the duke of Bavaria to be ready upon occafion ; perfuaded Henry to end the affair of the divorce in the manner we have feen; and had fecret agents at Conftantinople to treat of an alliance with Soliman emperor of the Turks. But most of these, expedients, which he thought infallible, had proved unluccessful. The first had miscarried by the death of Clement VII. and by the election of a new pope, whom it was not eafy to gain to his intereft. The king of the Romans had fruftrated the fecond, by agreeing with the elector of Saxony, the landgrave of Heffe, and the duke of Wirtemberg. As for the third, he could not hope much from thence, because the king of England's intention was not to make war upon the emperor, but only to fland upon the defenfive. Confequently it was in the emperor's power to keep him quiet by not attacking him first. The Turks therefore alone could properly be fubfervient to his defigns. But, to rely upon them, it was neceffary to commence the war in Italy, otherwife it was not likely, Soliman would be perfuaded to begin it in Hungary. Upon that account, he continued at Constantinople a negotiation, which was discovered by a letter intercepted by the duke of Urbino, who fent it immediately to the emperor. Mean while, Francis still perfifted in his refolution to attack the duke of Savoy, and open a paffage to the Milanefe. He reckoned, the peace of Germany could not hold long: that the emperor and Henry would never live in a good understanding : and that, when once the war was begun, the pope, the potentates of Italy, the king of England, would readily affift to reduce the power of the house of Austria within due bounds. Above all, he depended upon the princes of the league of Smalcald, fancying they would embrace this opportunity to free themfelves from their uneafinefs, caufed by the advancement of that houfe. To that end, he continued his intrigues with them, and pretended to be fo far inclined to their religion, that he was going to invite Melancthon into France to confer with him. But withal, he plainly flowed he acted only upon upon political views, fince he caufed to be burnt in France 1535. those that separated from the church of Rome. Mean while, as there was fome difference between Luther and Calvin about religion, and as those that were burnt in France were Calvinifts, the rigid Lutherans not confidering them as their brethren, imagined Francis might treat them with the utmost feverity, without losing his regard for the Lutheran religion. Francis refolving to use his endeavours to re-con-P. Daniel. quer the duchy of Milan, attacked the duke of Savoy, and in the first campaign took from him Savoy and la Breffe.

Whilft Francis was labouring to accomplish his defigns, Defigns of Charles V. was forming vaft projects, which tended to no Charles V. less than establishing his dominion over all Europe. Indeed, France and England being clofely united together, could have opposed a ftrong fence against his ambition : But he did Herbert, not despair to difunite them in the end. That was his chief Hall. care, whilft on one hand, he excited the Irish to a rebellion, and the king of Scotland to a rupture with England. But whilft he was endeavouring to embroil his enemies, in hopes of finding his account in it, he was himfelf uneafy with regard to Soliman, who threatened Germany under colour of fupporting the interests of John de Zapol, whom he had caufed to be crowned king of Hungary. On the other hand, he faw with extreme concern the great progrefs of Haradin Barbaroffa, the famous corfair, who after expelling Muley Haffem, had made himfelf king of Tunis. Such a neighbour could not but disquiet him, because, to hinder him from ravaging the coafts of Spain, Naples and Sicily, it would have been neceffary constantly to maintain a fleet in the Mediterranean, which could not be done without a great expence, and this would have disconcerted his other projects. So confidering the war, he had refolved to wage with Ha- The emperadin, as the most urgent affair, he made this fummer an ror's expe-expedition into Africa, where he took the fort of la Gou-Africa. lette, after which, he became mafter of Tunis, and re-Hift. of Sp. Herbert. ftored Muley Haffem.

Henry gladly faw the emperor engaging in wars, which Henry's difprobably would keep him long employed. Whereupon he polition as refolued to improve this interval to complete the result. refolved to improve this interval, to compleat the regulation of his domeftick affairs, which were yet in a very doubtful ftate. He had abolifhed the papal authority, and been declared fupreme head of the church of England by acts of parliament. But though, by the conflitution of the government, these acts seemed to be above all contradiction, it was however but too true, that this was not fufficient.

As

As religion was concerned, and confeience cannot be compelled, the flatutes themfelves wanted to be supported by force, that an outward obedience at least might be paid them. It is certain, the uniformity which appeared in the determinations of the parliament and clergy, was in many the effect of fear rather than of inward perfuasion. Nay fome, as Fisher and More, were fo hardy as openly to difapprove these ordinances, and notwithstanding the severity exercifed upon them, still perfisted in the fame opinion. It is true, these instances of rigour to perfons of fuch diffinetion, made people filent, but were not capable of convincing them of the reafonableness of the flatutes. Thus, though the king found no publick opposition, it was easy for him to fee, that an obedience proceeding from fear could laft no longer than compulsion subsisted. On the other hand, he beheld with concern the triumph of the protestants, who imagined that after abolishing the papal authority, he was going to renounce all the errors they combated, though nothing was farther from his thoughts. Mean while, it was every where published, that he was upon the point of forfaking the antient religion; fome afferting it out of malice, to render him odious; and others, becaufe they wilhed it. To clear himfelf therefore from these imputations, at the very time he refused to recognize the pope's authority, he ordered those who were called facramentarians to be burnt. By this conduct; he made himfelf hateful to the catholicks and protestants. As for the protestants, he bore their illwill without much concern: befides that, he feared them not, he approved in their doctrine the articles only that oppofed the papal authority, and their fentiments of the friars, with whom he was extremely' incenfed, because they laboured with all their power to alienate from him the affections of his people. It is true, he valued and loved Cranmer and Cromwell, with fome others, who countenanced the reformation; but he did not look upon them as protestants. He believed them men of folid virtue and piety, who, preferving the effential doctrines of religion, were defirous of reforming the abuses crept into the church. But, as among these abuses, he himself acknowledged only what concerned the pope and the friars, he imagined the reform-ers kept within the fame bounds. They who perfectly knew him, took care not to difcover all their thoughts. But by. conforming themfelves to his fentiments on these two articles, they hoped to induce him by degrees to advance' the reformation, when by their pains he should become more enlightened.

398 1535.

enlightened. For which reafon the reformation began in England with thefe two points. As to the others, which was had no relation to thefe, they were not meddled with during this reign, or at least, but slightly. The reason is, because Henry would never fuffer his fubjects to go greater lengths than himfelf. But to fpeak the truth, his understanding was always directed by his intereft. If all the changes made in religion in his reign be examined, they will all be found to concur directly to establish an absolute power over his fubjects. That was ever the principal, and perhaps the fole motive of his proceedings, when he perceived the rupture with Rome to be an admirable means to that end. Hence. the enemies of the reformation take occasion to fay, it was eftablished in England on political views. This may be true, if the perfon of Henry VIII. be only confidered. But it does not follow, that they who promoted and embraced it acted upon the like motive. Befides, what was the reformation in Henry VIII's days? Only a bare renouncing of the papal power, whilft those were burnt that would have carried it farther. So, let what will be faid of Henry's perfon, and his motives to throw off the papal yoke, I do not fee that. the protestants are much concerned to undertake his defence.

Henry finding that many of his fubjects approved. not his conduct, would have been very glad to take from them the pretence they ufed, of the fentence published against him by the pope. To that purpose he would have engaged all France to join with him in procuring a revocation. But that method was impracticable, and a reconciliation with the court of Rome no lefs fo. He could never have refolved to part with the title of head of the church of England, and the pope would never have confented to an agreement, unless things were restored to their antient state. So Henry feeing himfelf obliged to purfue his point, refolved to overcome by force, the obstinacy of fuch of his subjects as refused to submit to the laws lately enacted. But on the other. hand, defiring to purge himfelf of the imputation of Herefy, wherewith he was charged, he affected to punish feverely those that embraced the new opinions. In this fort of medium, which pleafed neither party, he paffed the refidue of: his days. But this is faying too little. It must be further added, that confidering himfelf as a pattern for his fubjects, he compelled them to keep within the fame bounds, and would not fuffer them to believe more or lefs than himfelf.

1535.

15351

It was impossible that after fuch a refolution Henry should not live in a continual mistrust of his fubjects, which obliged him to have always an eye upon what paffed in the kingdom. Moreover, he had likewife to guard against the emperor's attacks, who had openly threatened him. He was fenfible, if he were once engaged in a war, those that durft not look him in the face during his prosperity, would not fcruple to declare against him, if his arms were unfuccefsful. The king of Scotland his nephew was the perfon most to be feared. As for the king of France, who profeffed himfelf his friend, and indeed was much obliged to him, he had fhown too plainly how felf-interested his friendship was to be relied on. They both intended to imbroil the emperor, but with different views: Each meant to make his ally fubfervient to his defigns; and to improve the advantages which flowed from their union. Thus Henry faw no refource but in his own fubjects, among whom however there were many male-contents. But as he had acted for fome time with great haughtiness, he found, if he relaxed on this occasion, it would certainly be ascribed either to his fcruples, or to a fenfe of his weaknefs, than which nothing could be more prejudicial to him. This confideration joined to his ftern and haughty temper, rendered him altogether untractable. From thenceforward he became fierce, cruel, infenfible of his people's calamities, and executing without mercy, the laws dictated by himfelf to his parliament. In fhort, he may, in fome manner be faid, to be no longer the fame king that had before reigned. All that can be alledged in his vindication; is, that he was often provoked by perfons, who, endeavouring to alienate the hearts of his fubjects, attacked him in the most fensible part, because his whole reliance was upon the affiftance of his people.

Reafon of the great fubmiffion of the English to Henry.

It will doutlefs, be furprizing to fee in this reign the English fo patient and submiffive to their fovereign's pleafure, that hardly do we find, from the beginning of the affair of the divorce, that the parliament refused him any thing, though his demands were very extraordinary. But it is eafy to discover the reason. Religion was the fole cause. The king, as it was observed, kept a fort of medium with respect to religion. But as no man could believe it possible for him to remain long in that fituation, those who defired the reformation, imagined they could not do better than comply with him in all things, to induce him to advance it by degrees. In like manner, the friends of the old religion, feeing fuch beginnings, were afraid he would proceed, and their their opposition but make him finish his work the sooner. 1535. So, each party ftriving to gain him to their intereft, there refulted for him an authority which none of his predeceffors had ever enjoyed, and which he could not have usurped in any other circumstances, without hazarding his crown. But both parties were alike deceived. Henry kept in the fame medium all the reft of his life, and made them both feel the fatal effects of that abfolute power they had fo eafily fuffered him to affume. It is true, he was always fo prudent, as not to act contrary to law. But he made use of his power to procure fuch laws as he pleafed, and then executed them without mercy. This will frequently be feen in the fequel. But after showing Henry's character and motives, his actions must be related, which will confirm what has been observed.

400

Though the acts concerning the king's marriage and the The monks papal power, bore the feal of the publick authority, they were become very far from being univerfally approved. As they were the king, not afcribed fo much to the two houfes as to the king, on him it was that the whole blame was caft. Among all the male-contents, the monks were the most open, by their attempts to blacken him in the minds of the people. They could not bear his fetting himfelf up in the pope's place, whom they had always confidered, and ftill did confider as their true head, notwithstanding the statutes made against him. These were the men that caused the pretended Kentish prophetefs to fay, if the king put away queen Catherine, and married another, he should die in a month, and come to a tragical end. A Franciscan, named Peto, preaching before Infolence of the king ', was fo hardy as to tell him to his face, " That a Francifcan. " God's judgments were ready to fall upon his head: that Stow. " he was always furrounded with a croud of lying pro-Burnet, " phets, who foretold him good fuccefs. But for himfelf, " like another Micaiah, he warned him that the dogs fhould " lick his blood, as they had done Ahab's." The friar's infolence and the daily reports of the invectives which were every where fpread against him, provoked him extremely against them, as well as against those that had the boldness

i At Greenwich, where Henry refided most in fummer. The king bore Pero's infolence patiently ; but, to undcceive the People, procured Dr. Curwin to preach the next Sunday, who juffified the king's proceedings, and condemned Peto, as a rebel, a flanderer, a dog, and a traitor. Peto was . buked for their infolence. Stow, p. 562. gone to Canterbury, but Elfion, another friar of the fame house, interrupted him, and faid, he was one of the lying prophets, that fought by adultery, to establish the fuccession to the crown. And yet, nothing more was done to these two friars, than that they were convened before the council, and re-Bornet, tom. 1, p. 1;1. Cc

VOL. VI.

401

to Debate of the council how the king was to behave. Herbert.

40z to put the laws in execution.

Priors and monks executed with fome protestants. Hall. Stow. Burnet. Strype. Hollingfh. Fox.

1535. to speak opprobriously of the acts of parliament. He was - however very patient for fome time, imagining that the people would at length be calmed. But when he faw they did not ceafe to afperfe him with all forts of calumnies, he called a council to confider how he fhould behave towards those who affected to contradict the laws and speak evil of him. Some of the council were for taking no notice of these offences, for fear too great a feverity should have a quite contrary effect to what he defired *. But others reprefented to him the ill confequence of fuch a conduct. They showed him, that these people's aim was to ftir up the people against him, to give the bifhop of Rome opportunity to affert his pretended authority, and therefore they were for putting It is refolved the laws in execution with the utmost rigor. The king himfelf was of this opinion, as most agreeable to his fierce and stern temper, which could not bear contradiction. Befides, he faw to what he fhould be reduced in the end, if his enemies fucceeded in their defign to render him odious to the people. It is not therefore very ftrange, that feeing himfelf thus provoked, he refolved to treat with rigor those who laboured with all their power to ruin him.

> The refolution being taken of executing the laws without mercy, certain priors, monks, and others, who had been too free with the new statutes, were apprehended, tried, and executed, according to the utmost rigor of the fame laws t. But at the fame time, the king fearing left this feverity fhould be afcribed to the inclination, he was charged with, for the new religion, affected to use the fame rigor to those who had openly embraced the reformation, and put them to death with the others. At last to keep every one in awe by an example which fhould make the boldeft tremble, he refolved to deliver up to the rigor of the law, Fifher and More, then prifoners in the Tower ". To that end, s They thought that imprifonment, banishment, or the like, was punishment enough for those, who, confesfing the king's fupreme authority in all temporal matters, did, out of fcrupulofity rather than malice, oppofe the rest. Herbert, p. 182.

t Namely, the prior of the Charter-House in London, the priors of Exham, and Benall, a monk of Sion, and John Haile vicar of Thiffleworth, on May 4; and three monks of the Charter-House, on July 18, 1535. They were all drawn and quartered at Tyburn. The Protestants put to death, were, John Frith, a man of great learn-ing, and Andrew Hewet, on July 22, 1534. As also nineteen men and fix women, born in Holland. These were burnt, Hall, fol. 225, 226. Stow, p. 571. Burnet, tom. 1. 166, &c. 352. Fox, tom. XI.

" Fisher was hardly used ; his goods being feized, he had only fome old rags left him to cover him, and he was neither well fupplied with diet nor other necessaries, Burnet, tom. I. p. 156.

Fifher

Fisher was required to take the oath of fupremacy, it being 1535. fuppofed he would refuse it, as he did indeed. About the fame time Paul III. created him cardinal, though he had Fisher is declared that if the cardinal's hat was laid at his feet, he Burnet. would not ftoop to take it up. But the pope, whole aim T.I. p. 155; was to encourage fuch as opposed the king, conferred how- 353: ever that dignity upon him, with the pompous elogy, that Herbert. he confidered him as the cardinal of cardinals. This un- The pope feafonable honour haftened in all likelihood Fifher's death, makes him who being condemned, was executed the 22d of June, a a cardinal. month after his being made cardinal, and fome days before the hat, fent him by the pope, came to London w. After Sir Thomas that, Sir Thomas More being required to take the fame More exeoath, refused to answer, faying, " The act of parliament is Hall. " like a fword with two edges, for if a man anfwer one Burnet. " way, it will deftroy the foul, and if he answer another, Herbert. " it will deftroy the body." Upon his refufal, he was condemned and executed. He was a man of great learning, and excellent parts, but fo addicted to jefting, that even the prefence of death could not make him lay afide his ufual facetiousness *. When upon the point of being exe-Hall. cuted, he had laid his head on the block to receive the mortal blow, he perceived his beard was got under his chin: whereupon haftily rifing up, he bid the executioner ftay a little till he had put his beard afide, fince having committed no treason it was not just it should be cut off y.

Whilft

W Burnet fays, the hat came no nearer him than Picardy. He was brought to his trial on the 17th of June. The lord chancellor, the duke of Suffolk, and fome other lords, together with the judges, fat upon him by a commission of over and terminer. He was beheaded in the eightieth year of his age, on Tower-hill, and his head was fet up on London-bridge. His body was first buried in Barking church-yard, and afterwards taken up and interred with More's in the Tower. He was many years confessor to the king's grandmother, the countefs of Richmond. It was believed, that he perfuaded her to found her two colleges in Cambridge, and upon that account was chosen chancellor of that university. Henry VII. gave him the bishoprick of Rochester, which he, following the rule of the primitive church, would never change for a better : he ufed to fay his church was his wife, and he would never part with her becaufe fhe was poor. Burnet, tom. I. P. 354.

P. 354. * When he was going up the flairs of the fcaffold, obferving they were weak; he defired one of the fheriff's officers to give him his hand to help him up; and faid, when I come down again, let me fhift for myfelf, as well as I can. Alfo, when he was firft committed to the Tower, one of the officers, demanding his upper garment (that is his gown) for his fee, Sir Thomas taking off his cap, gave it him, faying, that was the uppermoft garment he had. Hall, fol. 226.

y On the first of July, Sir Thomas More was brought to his trial, and beheaded on the 6th, in the fifty third year of his age. Though he was af- $C \in a$ terwards 5 Paul III. excommunicates Henry lifting the bull. Herbert. Burnet.

404

1535.

Whilft thefe things paffed in England, pope Paul III. ftill - kept fome correspondence with fir Gregory Caffali, who was at Rome though without character. The pope earneftly wifhed, that fome expedient might be found to heal the breach withoutpub- made by Clement VII's too great precipitation, and conferred from time to time with Caffali. But when news came of the execution of the monks and of Fifher and More, for denying the king's fupremacy, he defpaired of fucceeding. He perceived there was no more ceremony to be used, fince all regard for him was thrown afide in England, and a fettled defign fhown of fupporting what had been done. So, to maintain the honour of his fee, he drew up a thundering bull, excommunicating Henry and abfolving his fubjects from their oath. Moreover, he ordered all the ecclefiasticks to depart his dominions and the nobility to take up arms against him. He put the kingdom under an interdict, and forbid all chriflians to have any commerce with the English. He annulled all the treaties made by foreign princes with Henry before his marriage with Anne Bullen, declaring their iffue already born, or to be born, illegitimate. Mean while, as he was fenfible, these spiritual thunders would produce no great effect, unless supported with temporal arms, which were not yet ready, he deferred the publishing of this bull to a more convenient feafon.

Embally to the protefants of Germany.

But though the bull was not published, as no great care was taken to conceal it, it quickly came to Henry's knowledge. Whereupon he refolved to join with the protestants of Germany z, and keep the emperor employed in that counterwards fuperflitioufly devoted to the interest and passions of the popish clergy, and even affifted them in all their cruchties, yet in his youth he had freer thoughts of things, as appears by his Utopia, where he feems to borrow the difguife of a romance, only to declare his mind with greater freedom : he tells us, the Utopians allow liberty of confcience, and force their religion upon no body: that they hinder none from a fober enquiry into truth, nor use any violence upon the account of a different belief. He was, fays Burnet, no divine at all, neither did he know any thing of antiquity, beyond the quotations in the canon law, and in the master of fentences. Nor was he conversant at all in the critical learning upon the fcripture ; but his peculiar excellency in writing was, that he had a natural eafy expression, and prefented all the opinions of popery, with their fair fide to the reader, difguifing the black fide of them with neat art; and had upon all occasions great store of pleafant tales, which he applied wittily enough. But for juffice, con-tempt of money, humility, and a true generofity of mind, he was an example to the age in which he lived. He is faid to have but one hundred pounds a year when he refigned the chancellorship. Burnet, tom. I. p. 355. and tom. III. p. 29. Herbert, p. 184.

z And the rather, because the pope declared, he would give away England to fome of the German catholick princes, being unwilling to increase therewith the power of France or Spain. Herbert, p. 184.

try ..

try. He dispatched therefore Edward Fox to the league of 1535. Smalcald * whilft Francis I. made use for the fame purpose of William du Bellai lord of Langeais. But it was very diffi- Herbert. cult for a good and hearty union to be formed between these T. III. III. two monarchs and the protestants of Germany. The protef- Strype. tants meant only to preferve the liberty of profeffing their religion unmolefted, whereas the fole aim of Francis and Henry was to excite them against the emperor, without any regard to the protestant religion, which they were perfecuting in their kingdoms. It is true, to gain the protestants, they feigned an inclination for their religion, and a defire to eftablifh it in their dominions. Nay, Henry very much improved the conformity of his fentiments with theirs concerning the papal authority. But the rigour wherewith thefe two monarchs treated fuch of their fubjects as had embraced the new religion, deftroyed whatever their ambaffadors could fay. For this reason the protestants always infifted upon fettling the points which concerned religion, and continued to require that Henry fhould openly declare for the Augfburg confession, that their union might be built on a folid foundation. Henry feigned to approve of what they proposed, and to make them believe it the more, wifhed them to fend fome of their divines to confer with those of England. But he never really intended to conform himfelf to their notions. He rather wanted the Germans as well as the English to learn of him what they were to believe. And for this caufe the project of the proposed union was never executed. However, this negotiation made the pope and the emperor very uneafy, who plainly faw that in attacking Henry there was danger of really engaging him to unite with the league of Smalcald.

But Henry did not depend fo much upon foreign affistance Henry lays as upon his own ftrength. Mean while, as his fubjects were before the council the daily corrupted by the monks, who infinuated to them that fupprefion he was going to overturn all religion, he refolved to take all of the mapossible precautions to prevent the pernicious designs of these nasteries. dangerous adverfaries. To this end it was moved in the Burnet. council, whether it would not be proper to suppress at once all the monasteries. This question was debated with great Divers opiwarmth, by reason of the two contrary parties in the coun- nions upon cil. Cranmer and Cromwell looked upon the fuppreffion of thataccount, the monafteries as a great flep to the reformation. But on

2 With doctor Hethe. Earns had tom. III. p. 110. Strype's Mem. tom. been sent thither before. See Burnet, I. p. 225.

Ccz

405

406 1535.

Hc orders the monafteries to be vifited, Burnet, Herbert. Strype.

and leaves ment to Cromwell. Burnet. Herbert. Hall. Hollingfh.

the other hand, the duke of Norfolk, the bifhops of Win-~ chefter, Lincoln and others, who had with reluctance fubfcribed to what had been done against the pope, could not refolve to confent to the fuppression. They faw, after that, the kingdom would be irrecoverably loft to the pope, without reckoning that the diffolution of the monafteries might produce yet greater effects with regard to religion. The king having heard the arguments on both fides, found he should not be able to suppress the monasteries all at once, without giving offence to the greatest part of his subjects. He refolved therefore with himfelf to accomplifh it by degrees, and therefore to begin with a thing abfolutely neceffary, namely, to remove the people's prejudice in favour of the monks. To that end, he ordered a general visitation of the monasteries, to know perfectly the titles of their eftates, the behaviour of the friars and nuns, how the rules of each order were ob-T. I. p. 182. ferved, and other things of the like nature, He did not queftion, this vifitation would discover several confiderable abuses, which being made publick would sensibly diminish the people's veneration for the religious, and pave the way to his defign. He was extremely incenfed with the monks, whom he looked upon as difturbers of his repofe. On the other hand, the hopes of profiting by their estates did not a little contribute without doubt towards his pushing the affair with great earnestness b. Thomas Cromwell was chothe manage fen to manage the inquiry by the name of visitor general. This choice was a plain indication of the king's intent, fince he employed a perfon who was utterly averfe to the monks. Cromwell having appointed substitutes or commissioners c gave them very particular inftructions under eighty fix articles, and the vifitation began in October. It may be eafily judged that among fo great a number of monafteries as were in the kingdom, most of which had never been visited but very negligently, many were found abounding with irregularities, as well in respect of the lives of the friars and nuns, as in regard to the observance of the rule, and the management of the temporalities. The vifitors, who were not their friends, and doubtlefs had orders to terrify them, told them, they

> b He wanted money upon feveral accounts; chiefly, as he apprehended a war from the emperor, the most powerful prince then in the world, and who had large fleets of his own; therefore, to fecure himfelf against his attacks, he judged it necessary to fortify his ports, and to build new harbours. Burnet, tom. I. p. 189.

c Particularly Richard Leighton, Thomas Lee, and William Petre, doctors of law, doctor John London dean of Wallingford, &c. Herbert, p. 186. Burnet, tom, I, p. 183.

were

were going to be exposed to the king's utmost feverity, and the rigour of the law. Then, they fuggefted to them, that to fave themfelves harmlefs and withal to hide their diforders, the best way was to refign their houses to the king d, who upon that confideration would take care to provide for each in particular. A good number of priors being terrified by Several the visitors, chose to follow their advice, their monks agreeing abbots and priors furto it, fome to avoid punifhment, others to enjoy their liberty, render their and fome for want of refolution to refift . The reports of houses to the the commiffioners were published, that all might be fatisfied, king. Burnet, the king had not without reason and necessity ordered this The account general visitation. The truth is, in fome monasteries were of the visidiscovered monstrous disorders and horrible crimes, not only tation is with respect to the debaucheries of the friars and nuns, but published. chiefly on the account of the images and relicks, for which a fhameful trade was driven to enrich the monasteries by cherifhing the people's fuperfittion f. This occafioned an or- The king dinance of the king, who, as fupreme head of the church gives the of England, discharged from their vows such as were pro- to quit their fessed under four and twenty years of age, and allowed all monasteries. the reft to quit their houfes, and live like feculars if they Stow. pleased s. But as most were accustomed to an idle life, d Before this, namely, on February 24, 1533, the priory of the Trinity, or Chrift church, near Aldgate, in London, was suppressed, and the lands and church plate thereto belonging, given to Sir Thomas Audley the high chancellor. Stow, p. 560. e The first furrender was by the abbot of Langden in Kent, on November 13. (Rymer, tom. XIV. p. 555.) who, upon doctor Leighton's breaking open his door on a fudden, was found in bed with a whore, who went in the habit of a lay brother. This furrender was followed by that of the priory of Folkston, November 15; on the 16th, of that of Dover; and on February 21, 1536, of that of Bil-fingtoun, all three in Kent. As alfo of Merton in Yorkshire, February 9, of Tilty in Effex, and of Hornby in Yorkfhire, March 23. The original of these and the other furrenders are in the augmentation office. Burnet, tom. I. 191.

f They found great factions in the houfes, and barbarous cruelties exercifed by one faction against another, as either of them prevailed. They were all extremely addicted to idolatry and fuperfition. In fome they found inftruments and other tools for multiplying and coining. But for the lewduefs of the confesiors of nunneries, and the great corruption of that flate, whole houses being found almost all with child; for the diffolutenefs of abbots and the other monks and friars, not only with harlots but married women; and for their unnatural lufts and other brutish practices : these, fays Burnet, are not fit to be spoken of, much les enlarged on in a work of this nature. The full report of this vifitation is loft ; yet Burnet faw an extract of a part of it concerning one hundred forty four houfes, that contains abominations in it equal to any that were in Sodom.

Burnet, tom. I. p. 191. 3 The men, if in orders, were to have a prieft's habit given them, and forty shillings in money; the nuns were to have only a gown, fuch as fecular women wore. Some however for furrendering their houfes got fmall penfions. Herbert. Stow, p. 572.

Cc4

and 407 1535.

monks leave

408 1535.

and perceived when they forfook their monafteries they fhould - be forced to work for their livelihood, the liberty given them by the king produced no great effect. Befides, there were doubtlefs many, who out of confcience thought not proper to use it. So, Henry was obliged to take other measures.

Change of Act. Pub. XIV.p. 550, 552, 5.53. Burnet. T. I. p. 171. Stow.

Henry tries to perfuade the king of Scotland to pope. Buchanan. Herbert.

i .

It was but this year that cardinal Campegio loft the bifomebishops. shoprick of Salisbury, which was given to Nicholas Shaxton a friend to the reformers. Shortly after, the fee of Worcefter was taken from Ghinucci an Italian, and conferred on Hugh Latimer, great friend of Cranmer. John Hilfey was promoted to the fee of Rochefter, vacant by the death of Fisher, and Edward Fox to that of Hereford.

Among all the king's enemies, or enviers, none gave him more uneafinefs than his nephew the king of Scotland, and not without reason. During the whole time of that prince's renounce the minority, Henry had fomented the troubles of Scotland, and even fhown that his defigns tended to become mafter of that kingdom. James was fully informed, and though he fhowed great regard for the king his uncle, he let him fee however he did not confider him as a friend. Henry therefore was in danger, that if the innovations in religion cauled diffurbances in the kingdom, the king of Scotland would take occafion to be revenged by affifting the male-contents. This fear was the more just, as the emperor knowing the king of Scotland's disposition, had already laboured to inspire him with suspicions and jealoufies of France and England. Nay, he would have concluded a league with him, as I observed, had not Francis broken his measures by procuring a peace between England and Scotland. But notwithstanding the peace, Henry was always in diffrust of that quarter. So, to make himfelf eafy, he formed the project to inftill into the king of Scotland the refolution to follow his example, and renounce the pope's obedience. He confidered this as a fure means to preferve between the two kingdoms a strict union, which would be very advantageous in his present circumstances. He sent him therefore in the first place a long letter h, declaring the He demands reasons of his conduct with regard to the pope. Then, he aninterview. difpatched an ambaffador i to propole an interview, fancying that a conference with him would produce a greater effect

By William Barlow, bifhop elect i William Howard brother of the of St. Afaph, and Thomas Holcroft. duke of Norfolk. Herbert, p. 184. Herbert, p. 184.

than whatever he fhould fay to him by letter or embaffy. But though the reformation had already crept into Scotland, James had no inclination to embrace it. So, the ecclefiafticks about his perfon eafily diffiwaded him from accepting the interview, where they were afraid fome things might pafs very prejudicial to their religion. Mean while, James, not being willing openly to refuse the conference defired by the king his uncle, gave him hopes of his confent, after certain difficulties, purposely raifed, were removed. But at the fame time he demanded of the pope a brief, to forbid his having any interview with the king of England. When the brief came, he gave James exthe king his uncle notice of it. who having prepared for his cufes himfelf journey, was extremely offended at this refulal. Hence fprung the pope's a quarrel between them, which I shall have occasion to men- prohibition. tion hereafter.

Before I conclude the year 1535, I must not forget to re- Death of the late an event which very much changed the face of the affairs duke of of Europe. I mean the death of Francesco Sforza duke of Herbert, Milan, which happened in the month of October. As that prince left no iffue by Catherine of Denmark the emperor's neice, whom he had lately married, the duchy of Milan as fief of the empire, was fallen to the emperor to be disposed of as he pleafed. So, the fears and jealoufies of the pope, The emperor the king of France and the Venetians, were revived on this frigns not to intend to occasion; each of these powers having cause to fear the em- keep that peror would keep Milan for himfelf, or give it to his brother duchy. the king of the Romans. In that cafe, Italy would of courfe fall again into flavery, and the king of France lofe his hopes of recovering that duchy. To make them easy, the emperor declared he had no defign to keep Milan, but intended to present some prince with it, who should cause no suspicion to those that were concerned to preferve the peace of Italy. Alterwards, he wifely made use of it for a lure to amuse the king of France. But in reality he never defired to difpoffefs himfelf of it k.

k This year, Wales, which had hitherto been only a province to the English nation, was incorporated, united, and annexed for ever to the realm of England. Statut. 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26.---John Owen began this year to make brafs cannons, being the first that made this kind of artillery in England .---- The 8th of May, king Henry commanded all perfons about his court to cut their hair fhort, and to fet them an example, he caufed his own to be cut; and likewife began to wear his beard knotted, and was no more shaved. ____ August 16, the king's ftables at the Meufe (fo called becaufe the king's hawks were there mewed and kept) were burnt downs Hall, fol. 225. Stow, p. 571.

Queen

Death of queen Catherine. Herbert. Stow. Barnet.

410

1536.

Parliament meets.

Queen Catherine ended her days the beginning of the year 1536¹. Though her virtue had gained her an universal efteem, the died however little lamented by the publick, because the equally embaraffed her friends and enemies. Before fhe expired, 'fhe dictated a very tender letter to the king, who feemed to be extremely moved with it m. But in all appearance his grief was of no long continuance. He was very fond of her when first married, her mildness and modesty having a greater influence upon him than the could expect from her beauty, which was not extraordinary. In time, his affection abating, he treated her with indifference, though always with much civility. At last, after he had refolved to put her away, her obstinate refusal to comply with his will made him confider her as an enemy. Accordingly he ufed her rigoroufly when the fentence of divorce was pronounced, even to the not fuffering her to keep fervants who treated her as a queen. At last he publickly forbid to give her that title, though he was forced to connive at her difobedience.

The parliament meeting the 4th of February finished the work begun, by abolishing every thing relating to the pope's power, not to leave the least pretence to acknowledge his authority. But the king had a farther view, namely, to fuppress the monasteries, as well to be revenged of the monks and prevent their ill defigns, as to procure their eftates. In all appearance, the late visitation of the monasteries had convinced him that the monks were as unserviceable to religion, as prejudicial to his affairs in his prefent circumstances.

1 On the 8th of January at Kimbolton, in the fiftieth year of her age, thirty three years after the came into England. In her will, the appointed her body to be buried in a convent of Obfervants, who had done and fuffered moft for her, but the king ordered it to be laid in the abby-church of Peterborough, which he afterwards converted to a cathedral. Stow, p. 572. Queen Anne Bullen wore yellow for the morning. Hall, fol. 227.

m In the title fhe called him, "My "moft dear lord, king, and hufband," and concluded with faying, "I make "this vow, that mine eyes defire you "above all things. She advifed him "to look to the health of his foul. "She forgave him all the troubles he " had cast her into. She recommend-" ed their daughter Mary to him, de-" firing he would be a loving father " to her. She alfo defired he would " provide matches for her maids, who "were but three; and that he would " give her fervants one year's wages " more than was due to them." She was a devout and pious princefs, and led a fevere life. In her greatnefs she wrought much with her own hand, and kept her women well employed about her, as appeared when the two legates came once to fpeak with her. She came out to them with a skein of filk about her neck, and told them she had been within at work with her maids. Few fuch queens now-a-days ! Burnet, tom, I. p. 192.

As

As among the conftitutions observed in the church of Eng- 1536. land, there were not a few that had a manifest relation to the papal authority, it was abfolutely necessary to annull them Reasons of and make others, which fhould have for foundation the king's altering the supremacy. The parliament had already passed an act, em - constitupowering the king to nominate thirty two commissioners to tions. examine fuch as were to be abolifhed. But the king had not hastened the nomination, because by this confusion, his authority was much more extensive. Indeed, the papal power was abolished by act of parliament, and yet it still subfifted in the conftitutions, which not being abrogated threw the clergy into great perplexities because they knew not what to do. But this was what the king defired, that the clergy might be more at his devotion, fince he could equally profecute them as guilty, whether they did or did not observe them. The parliament taking this contrariety into confideration would have cured it, by confirming the power formerly given the king, to appoint commissioners to alter these conftitutions. This was a fort of reproach for his negligence in that respect. But he feigned not to mind it, and left the affair in the fame state it was ".

He had another thing in his thoughts which affected him Act for fupmuch more, namely, to execute his defign upon the monks. prefing the leffer monaf-In this feffion, he represented to the parliament, that the teries. great number of monasteries in the kingdom were a burden to Act. Pub. the flate, and earneftly defired them to remedy the evil by XIV.P. 575. fuch means as they fhould judge proper. Whereupon it was enacted, That all houfes of two hundred pounds a year and under should be suppressed; and their effects given to the king °. Of this fort there were three hundred feventy fix, Herbert, and a revenue of thirty two thousand pounds a year fell to Stow. the crown, with above a hundred thousand pounds worth of plate, goods, ornaments of the churches, and the like. A Court of new court was erected, called the court of the augmentation augmentaof the king's revenue, which was to take cognizance of all Burnet. matters concerning this new acquifition P. The creeting of a court

" About this time, king Henry appointed an office for all ecclefiaftical matters, and ordered a feal to be cut. The archbishop of Canterbury's title was also in convocation ordered to be altered : instead of legate of the apoftolick fee, he was to be called, metropolitan and primate, Burnet, tom. III. p. 104.

· A commission was also directed, on June 16, 1535, to the bishops of Meath and Kildare, to John Allen mafter of the rolls, Gerard Ailmer chief baron of the Exchequer, and fome others, impowering them to suppress the monasteries in Ireland. Rymer's Ford. tom. XIV. p. 551,

P The court was to confift of a chancellor, a treasurer, an attorney and follicitor, ten auditors, seventeen receivçrs,

THE HISTORY

412 1536.

Recolution to let the people have the bible in English. Burnet.

a court for fo finall an income was a clear evidence, the king had no defign to ftop there, but intended to feize the revenues of all the monasteries in the kingdom 9.

The convocation fitting, as usual, at the fame time with the parliament, a motion was made there that there fhould be a translation of the bible in English, to be fet up in all churches, and the fame was approved of. It must be obferved, the king's intent was only to flow the people, there was nothing contrary to the holy fcriptures in what was done against the pope. But Cranmer, Cromwell, and the rest of the reformers had much farther views. They hoped, when the bible was in the hands of the people, they would fee their error in many other things which hitherto had been deemed effential to religion. But they took care to hide their defigns from the king, knowing how contrary they were to his. Henry was absolutely against all reformation of doctrine, and confequently they were to bring him infenfibly and by degrees to what they defired. They partly fucceeded, but they fell extremely fhort of what they had expected at first. However, they thought it very confiderable to obtain his confent that it should be moved in the convocation, to give the people the bible in English, and to have caused the motion to be approved. As there was then no other Engtakes it upon lifh verfion of the bible but Tindal's, made at Antwerp without the publick authority, the convocation petitioned the king for a good translation, which he was pleased to take upon himfelf r.

> ers, a clerk, an usher, and a messen- " ger. Belidos the prefent ones, the king was to have the lands of all those houses that had been diffolved within a year before this act. Burnet, tom. I.

> p. 194. 9 What remarkable statutes were enacted during this feffion, are as follows, I. Whereas pirates uled to be tried after the course of the civil laws, it was ordered, that they should be tried in fuch places as should be directed by the king's commission, and by juries, as offenders at land. 2. That every perfon who hath a park, shall keep two mares thirteen hands high, for breeding foals. 3. That clerks prefented to benefices, shall not pay tenths the first year in which they pay their first fruits. 4. That tithes, offerings, and other duties, shall be paid according to the ecclefiaftical laws and ordinances of the church of England, and after the laudable uses and customs of each parifh. 5. That all bargains and fales of lands shall be made by writing indented, fealed, and inrolled, in one of the king's courts of record at Weftminfter, or before the cuftos rotulorum, two justices, and a clerk of the peace, of the county where the lands lie. See Statut. 27 Hen.

r It is not known to whom that work was committed, or how they proceeded in it. For the account of thefe things has not been preferved, nor conveyed to us with that care that the importance of the thing required. Yet it appcars that the work was carried on at a good rate : for three years after this it was printed at Paris, which fhows they made all convenient hafte, in a thing that required fo much deliberation, Burnet, tom. I. p. 196.

Henry

The king himiclf.

Henry having obtained of the parliament all he defired, 1536. thought it time to diffolve it, which he did the 14th of April, after having continued it fix years. Never had The parliaparliament lasted to long fince the beginning of the mo- ment is difnarchy.

The care Henry took to fecure himfelf from the cabals of the monks and his other domestick enemies, did not prevent him from thinking of his foreign affairs, and of means to avoid the emperor's attacks. Francis was invading Savoy, P. Daniel. and it was but too manifest that his intent was to open a paffage into the Milanese. But as this was a great undertaking. confidering the fituation of France, the emperor could not believe, he had engaged in it without being first fure of Henry's affistance. Wherefore he refolved to use his utmost endeavours to break their union. From the death of Sforza, He promifes he had continued a private negotiation with Francis to re- Milan to a fign the duchy of Milan to one of his fons, and acted fo art- fon of Francis, fully that the treaty feemed to be very near a conclusion. This could not but infpire Henry with jealoufy. He plainly faw if the negotiation ended to the king of France's fatisfaction, he would be regardless of his interests. On the other and offers an hand, the emperor no fooner heard of the death of his aunt alliance with queen Catherine, but he fent and offered Henry to renew Henry. their alliance, with a mutual oblivion of all that was paffed. But leaft he should be taken at his word, he required three conditions, which left him the liberty to prolong the affair as much as he pleafed, his aim being only to fow division between Francis and Henry by making them sufpicious of each other. The first of these conditions was, that Henry should be reconciled to the pope, to which end he offered his mediation. By the fecond, he demanded a powerful affiftance against the Turks. By the third, that pursuant to their treaty in 1518, he should join with him in the defence of Milan against the attacks of the French king. Henry replied, that Henry's what had been done against the pope could not be revoked : answer. that as foon as christendom should be in peace, he would act Herbert. against the infidels as became a christian prince : that he was ready to renew his alliance with the emperor, provided it. was done without prejudice to the king of France his ally, that being friend of both, he might be the better enabled to labour their reconciliation, or if he could not fucceed, to affift. him that fhould be unjuftly attacked : that as to the reft, he refused not to agree with the emperor, provided he would own, the rupture came from him. The emperor perceiving Henry was upon his guard, thought not fit to push the affair any 414 1536.

Burnet.

413

THEHISTORY

any farther. Indeed Henry could eafily fee, his aim was to fet him at variance with France, fince at the very time thefe things paffed, Francis imparted to him the private negotiation concerning the duchy of Milan. Moreover he warned him, that the emperor intended to force him to return to the pope's obedience, and it was only upon that condition he offered to refign the Milanefe.

Henry tries to fide with the league of Smalcald. Sleidan. Herbert. Burnet.

The league propofing terms; Sleidan. Herbert.

he is at a lofs about them.

All these proceedings of the emperor convincing Henry that he fought occasion to attack him, he refolved to purfue his negotiation with the protestants of Germany, to make him a diversion in that country which should break his meafures with regard to England. To the fame end, he had fent Edward Fox to them last year. But they would not be his dupes, not imagining, as he would fain have made them believe, that he was inclined to their faith, whilft he ordered their brethren to be burnt in England. So, not to be engaged by faint hopes to be fubfervient to his defigns at their expence, they delivered to his ambaflador the terms on which they were willing to be ftrictly united with him. The terms were, that he fhould embrace the Augfburg confession; and defend it with all his power in a free council : that he fhould approve of no place for holding the council without their confent: that if the pope called a council at his own pleafure, Henry should join with them in protesting against it : that he fhould accept the title of protector of the league : that he fhould never return to the pope's obedience : that he fhould not affift their enemies : that he fhould find a hundred thousand crowns for the occasions of the league, and two hundred thousand if the war lasted any time. Adding, that when he fhould have declared himfelf upon thefe articles, they would fend ambaffadors and agree with him upon the reft.

Thefe propofals threw Henry into fome perplexity. He faw, the fole aim of the proteftants was to fupport their religion, and that however was the thing which diffurbed him the leaft. He was by no means fatisfied with the Augfburg confeffion, and yet he perceived, in cafe he openly rejected it, there was no likelihood of his being able to join with the league of Smalcald. On the other hand, it was his intereft to continue the negotiation, as well becaufe the proteftants might be ferviceable to him, as to keep the emperor in awe by that confideration. So his intereft required that he fhould favourably hear thefe propositions. But withal he refolved to infert in his anfwer fomething which fhould afford him occasion occafion to break, if he thought proper. He replied therefore, that he was willing to furnish the fums required, in cafe a league, of which he would treat with their ambaffa- His answer. dors, fhould be concluded between him and the protestants : March 12. Sleidan. that though he was fenfibe to what the title of protector of Herbert. the league would expose him, he was content to accept it, provided there were between him and them a conformity of doctrine, otherwife he could not engage to defend a faith, of whofe truth he was not convinced : that therefore he defired them to fend commiffioners with powers to mitigate fome articles of the Augfburg confession, which he could not approve. Moreover as to the supplies, he required that the engagement fhould be mutual, whether he or they were attacked. In fine, he demanded an authentic approbation of his divorce, and their promife to juftify it in a council. These proposals on both fides were of a nature to keep a treaty long on foot. But though the members of the league of Smalcald faw no great likelihood of a ftrict union, they The proappointed however Sturmius, Draco, Bucer, and Melanc- testants fend thon to go and confer with Henry and his divines. It was doctors to him. especially provided in their instructions, that nothing should be concluded to the prejudice of the emperor or empire. This negotiation was interrupted by the death of Anne Bullen, which happened fhortly after, and which very much altered the face of affairs as well as the king's mind, in respect to the reformation which fhe openly countenanced.

The king was poffeffed at once with two paffions; a vio- The king lent love for Jane Seymour maid of honour to the queen s, falls in love with Jane and an extreme jealoufy of his wife^t. Very likely, his jea-^{with} Jane loufy was a confequence of his love. When Anne Bullen's and grows enemies found, fhe no longer held in the king's heart the jealous of place fhe had formerly enjoyed, inftead of fearing to accufe Burnet. her of unfaithfulness to the king, they believed it would be Herbert. grateful to him, who began to be himfelf unfaithful. It is certain the king had loft that affection for the queen, which made him furmount fo many obstacles to posses her; whether enjoyment had quenched this first flame, or the queen's indifcretions given the king caufe to fufpect her, he fo gave himfelf over to jealoufy, that it was not in his power to os Daughter of Sir John Seymour of Wolf hall in Wiltshire, and of Elizabeth daughter of Sir Henry Wentworth of Nettlefted in Suffolk. Dugdale's baron, vol. II. p. 361.

t She mifcarried of a fon, January 29, this year. Stow, p. 572. This was thought to have made ill impreffions on the king, who from thence concluded, that this marriage was difagreeable to God. Burnet, tom. I. p. 196.

vercome

THE HISTORY

1536. Burnet.

416

Motives of the queen's encmies to Burnet.

Burnet.

She is accufed of adultery and inceft. Burner.

vercome it, or perhaps did not much endeavour it. However, the occasion was this. The queen had a great friendfhip for her brother the lord Rochford, but could not endure his wife, who lived very ill with her hufband and had an infamous character, as will evidently appear hereafter. It was this lady that whilpered in the king's ear the first report that the queen was unfaithful, and had a criminal commerce with her brother the lord Rochford. These feeds fell upon a foil already prepared to receive them. The king, now prejudiced by his paffion for Jane Seymour, was overjoyed to find in the pretended unfaithfulnels of the queen, a means to procure the poffeffion of the perfon he loved. As foon as queen Anne's enemies faw how the king flood affected towards her, factifice her, they took care to ruin her quite in his favour, by accufing her of fundry intrigues with her own domefticks. These enemies were the fame with those of the reformation. They imagined, the had put the king upon all his proceedings , against the pope, on purpose to favour the new religion. But though the had not done this, it was fufficient to hate her that fhe had been the caufe by infpiring the king with love, fince that had occafioned Catherine's divorce, and confequently all the innovations in religion. Policy might likewife enter into their project. They were fenfible, fo long as Anne lived the would be an invincible obstacle to a reconciliation with Rome, whereas if fne were dead, they hoped, all difficulties would be eafily removed. The duke of Norfolk inwardly burned with a defire to fee religion again eftablifhed upon the fame foot it was before these alterations, though, like a good courtier, he took care not to discover it to his mafter. His quality, zeal, and credit, had made him head of the party of the old religion, and, as he had the king's ear, he could eafily do ill offices to the contrary party. The king's jealoufy of the queen was too favourable an occafion to be neglected, fince he could at once ferve his party, and make his court to his mafter. So, it is commonly believed, this lord contributed the most to the queen's ruin, because among all her enemies, he had most access to the king. But however, whether it was he or another, the king was infpired with a jealoufy which threw him into a fort of fury. This is not very flrange, confidering his temper, the most impetuous and most impatient that ever was. The queen was accused of a criminal commerce, not only with the lord Rochford her brother, but also with Henry Norris groom of the stole, Francis Western and William Brereton of the king's privy chamber, and Mark Smeton a mufician. It

It must be confessed, the queen had some indiscreet ways, 1536. which the king never minded, whilf he was not prejudiced against her, but which afterwards were too capable of confirming his suspicions ". Besides, as soon as he hearkened to what was faid against her, probably, her enemies were very diligent to give an ill turn to her most innocent words or actions. Without doubt, Henry was fome time tormented with jealouly before he discovered it, but at last it broke Hall. out at a folemn jufts held at Greenwich w, from whence he Stow. Hollingth, fuddenly withdrew with figns of great anger, the caufe Herbert, whereof could not be gueffed. It is likely, he had observed fomething that confirmed his fuspicions, of which none but himfelf took notice. Sanders fays, the queen dropping her Burnet. handkerchief, one of her gallants took it up and wiped his Herbert, face with it. But this author is the only perfon that relates that circumstance *. However, the king was no fooner gone from the jufts, but he ordered the lord Rochford, Norris, Weston, Brereton and Smeton to be arrested. At She is apthe fame time the queen was confined to her chamber, and Hall. the next day conveyed to the Tower y. But what plainly Stow. fhowed the defign of her enemies to deftroy her was their Hollingfh-procuring an older for the archbifhop of Canterbury to Herbert

" She was, fays Burnet, of a very chearful temper, which was not always limited with the bounds of exact decency and difcretion. She had rallied fome of the king's fervants more than became her. tom. I. p. 197. w May the first. Hall, fol. 227. At these justs, George Boleyn, viscount Rochford, was chief challenger, and Henry Norris, principal defendant. Stow, p. 572.

x Burnet, who was at more than ordinary pains to learn all he could concerning this affair, observes, that this circumstance is not in Spelman, a judge at that time, who wilt an account of the matter with his own hand, in his common place book, of which Burnet had a fight. Spelman fays, the bufinefs was discovered in a very different manner. As for the evidence (fays he) of this matter, it was discovered by the lady Wingfield, who had been a fervant to the queen, and becoming on a fudden infirm some time before her death, did swear this matter to one of her -----. And here unluckily the reft of the page is torn off. By this it feems there was no legal evidence a-VOL. VI.

gainst the queen, and that it was a witnels at second hand who deposed what they heard the lady Wingfield fwear. Who this perfon was we know not, nor in what temper of mind the lady Wingfield might be when fhe fwore. And this it feems was that which was brought to the king at Greenwich during the jufts, who did thereupon immediately return to Whitehall. Burnet, tom. I. p. 191.

y Sir Thomas Audley lord chancellor, the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Cromwell the fecretary, and Sir William Kingston constable of the Tower, who were fent to apprehend her, letting her know, what crime she was charged with, fhe cried out, that fhe was wronged, and defired to fee the king before the was conveyed to the Tower, but in vain. When the was brought to the Tower, fhe fell on her knees before the fame lords, befeeching God to help her, as the was not guilty of that whereof fhe was accuied, and defired those lords to beseech the king's grace to be good unto her. Stow, p. 572. Herbert, p. 194.

417

Dd

retire

418 retire to his palace at Lambeth, for fear if he could speak 1536. with the king, he would find occasion to vindicate the queen.

Snares are Burnet.

It is not furprizing, this princefs in her fad condition laid for her. fhould be difordered, and having none to advife with fhould be infinared by her enemies. Her uncle's lady, the lady Bullen was appointed to lie in her chamber, with whom the was at great variance, and from this lady, who was placed there to watch her, it came to be known, that during her confinement, the faid fome things which helped to confirm the king's fuspicions. However, upon her examination, the politively denied, she had ever been falle to the king. Only when the was told that Norris, Wefton, Brereton and Smeton had accused her, though she might have easily seen it was purely to draw from her fome confession, the believed fhe ought not to conceal certain things which had paffed be-She confesses tween her and them. She faid concerning Norris, that afking him one day why he did not go on with his marriage, he replied, there was no hafte. Whereupon fhe faid, fhe plainly faw he was in hopes of having her, in cafe the king died. This feems to argue there was fome familiarity between her and Norris. Otherwife, supposing the truth of the fact, it is hard to conceive that a queen fhould think of talking thus

Strype's Mem. T. I. 280, &c. >

Burnet.

ges.

fome passa-

Id.

Id.

to one of her domeflicks. As for Smeton the mufician, fhe faid, he was never in her chamber but twice. That the last time the faw him there, fhe afked him why he was fo fad; and that in her converfation with him he had the boldness to tell her. No. no. madam, a look fuffices me ².

As for Weston, she owned he had taken the liberty to tell her, he loved her, and that the thereupon defied him ª.

Z She faid, " Smeton was never in " her chamber but when the king " was last at Winchester; and then " he came to play on the virginals : " " fhe faid, fhe never fpoke to him af-" ter that, but on Saturday before " May day, when the faw him stand-" ing in the window; and then the afk-" ed him, why he was fo fad ? he faid; " it was no matter. She answered, " you must not expect I should speak " to you as if you were a nobleman, " fince you are an inferior perfon. No, ee no, madam, faid he, a look fuffices " me. Burnet, tom, I. p. 199.

a She feemed more apprehensive of Weston than of any body. For on Whitson-monday last he faid to her, "That Norris came more to her " chamber upon her account, than for " any body elfe that was there. She " had observed that he loved a kins-" woman of hers, and challenged him " for it, and for not loving his wife. " But he answered her, that there " were women in the house whem he " loved better than them both : fhe " asked, who is that ? your felt, faid " he; upon which, she faid, she de-" fied him." Ibid.

But after all, the question is to know, whether the re-1536. gifters from whence this examination is taken are true, or whether the examination was impartially written. Indeed, this doubt alone is not fufficient to clear the queen. But then, when it is confidered, the had for adverfary a hufband, who was king, and jealous even to madnefs, very likely, they who were employed to examine her, gave her words fuch a turn and fenfe, as favoured the king's defigns, by pretending to fet down the fubftance of her answers instead of her very words.

As for the lord Rochford, all the evidence for his pre-Burnet, ... tended familiarity with the queen his fifter, amounted to no more than that he was once feen leaning on her bed.

When these men were examined, Norris swore he be- Deposition lieved the queen innocent, and perfifted in his affeveration of the acto his laft breath. Smeton confeffed, he had known the Idem, and queen carnally three times; but he was never confronted T. III, 118. with her; nay, he was condemned before fhe was brought to her trial, that he might not be a witnefs. This makes very much for the queen, fince it is not likely fuch an evidence would have been voluntarily neglected, had it been deemed as good as it appears to be. But probably it was feared that Smeton would retract or the queen confound him, if brought face to face with her. The reft pleaded not guilty; but however were condemned and executed b.

Three days after, the queen and the lord Rochford her She is conbrother were tried by their peers ', the duke of Norfolk be- demned with the lord ing lord high fleward for that occasion d. The queen was Rochford, accufed

b Their trial came on the 12th of May, on which day they were tried by a commission of over and terminer in Westminster-hall. They were twice indicted, and the indictments were found by two grand juries in the counties of Kent and Middlefex ; the crimes they were charged with being faid to be done in both counties. All protef-ted their innocence, only Smeton confeffed, he had well deferved to die, which gave occasion to many reflections. They were all beheaded but Smeton, who was hanged. It was generally faid, he was bribed into that confeffion, and had his life promifed ; but it was not fit to let him live to tell tales. Norris had been much in the king's favour, who fent for him, and offered him his life if he would confefs his guilt. He generoully rejected the offer, affirming, that in his confcience he thought the queen innocent, and that he would die a thoufand times rather than ruin an innocent perfon. Burnet, vol. I. p. 201. vol. III. p. 120.

c In the Tower of London on a fcaffold erected for that purpofe in the king's hall. Stow, p. 572.

d With him fat the duke of Suffolk, the marquis of Exeter, and the earls of Arundel, Oxford, Northumberland, Westmoreland, Derby, Worcester, Rutland, Suffex, and Huntington; the lords Audley, Delaware, Montague, Morley, Dacres, Cobham, Maltravers, Powis, Monteagle, Clenton, Sands, Windfor, Wentworth, Burgh, and Mordant. The charge ran, That the Dd2 . had men, and confpiring the king's death. But this laft charge being without any foundation, it was not thought proper to infift upon it. The queen and the lord Rochford pleaded not guilty, and yet were condemned without its being ever known upon what evidence the fentence was grounded. Judgment was given, that the lord Rochford should be beheaded and quartered. As for the queen, the was condemned to be Very probably, the king believed the queen guilty, and good proofs. But can the fame thing be faid of the peers who condemned her ? Did their confcience fuffer them to condemn a queen to death upon bare furmifes ? I fay furmifes, fince had there been folid proofs, they would very likely have been published, in order to justify a sentence of this nature, which was unprecedented in England. Such referve was not afterwards used with respect to another of Henry's queens, who was really guilty of the like crime. All that can be faid in favour of those who passed fentence on Anne Bullen is, that their dread of turning against themfelves the king's fury, if they complied not with his hu-burnt or beheaded at the king's pleasure.

419

Hall. Stow. Hollingfh. Burnet, Herbert.

Remarks on the fentence. under his prefent prejudice, figns and tokens were to him as mour, made them confider figns as real proofs. It is obfer-Stow. Burnet. vable, there were but twenty fix peers prefent at the trial, T. I. p. 363. Act. Pub. though there were then fifty three in England, as appears by XIV.p. 564. the fummons to parliament directed to them shortly after. This gives occafion to conjecture, that according to the me-363.

T. I. p. 202, As for Dr. Burnet's faying in his hiftory, that Anne Bullen's father was among her judges, it is known he retracted it afterwards. The fentence was excuted the 19th of May. Anne fuf-thod introduced by cardinal Wolfey, in the condemnation of the duke of Buckingham, care was taken to remove thofe, who were fuspected not to have formuch complaifance as to gratify the king's paffion at the expence of their confcience.

The queen is beheaded.

fered death with great conftancy, after a fhort speech to those that were present, wherein she neither confessed nor denied had procured her brother and the other four to lye with her, which they had often done ; that fhe had faid to them, that the king never had her heart; and had faid to every one of them by themfelves, that the loved them better than any perfon whatever, which was to the flander of the iffue that was be tween the king and her. And this was treafon according to the flatute made in the 26th year of this reign (fo that the law made for her and her iffue, is now made use of to deftroy her.) It was added in the indictment, that fhe and her accomplices had confpired the king's death; but this it feems was only put in to fwell the charge. Burnet, vol. I. p. 202, 363.

3

the

420 1536. the crime for which fhe was condemned. She contented 1536. herfelf with acknowledging her obligations to the king, with praying for him, and defiring the prayers of the people for herfelf °. It is generally believed, her fear of drawing the Burnet. king's anger on her daughter Elizabeth, prevented her from Herbert, infifting upon her own innocence f. As fhe knew the king's Hollingth, temper perfectly, and could not vindicate herfelf without charging him with injuffice, fhe was afraid Elizabeth would become the facrifice of the king her father's refentment. However, this was the tragical end of Anne Bullen, whom Different fome have vehemently defamed, and whofe conduct others about the have fludioufly juffified, without any poffibility yet of knowqueen. ing for certain whether fhe was guilty or innocent. The Burnet, enemies to her daughter Elizabeth and the reformation have e Her carriage the day fhe died will beft appear from the following original letter of Sir William Kingfton conftable of the Tower to Cromwell,

SIR,

" This shall be to advertise you, that " I have received your letter, wherein " you would have ftrangers conveyed " out of the Tower; and fo they be, " by the means of Richard Grefham, " and William Loke, and Whitepole. " But the number of ftrangers paft not " thirty, and not many hothe [other.] " And the ambaffador of the emperor " had a fervant there, and honeftly " put out: fir, if we have not an " hour certain, as it may be known in " London, I think here will be but " few, and I think a reasonable num-" ber were beft, for I fuppole she will " declare herfelf to be a good woman " for all men but for the king, at the " hour of her death. For this morn-" ing fhe fent for me, that I might be " with her at fuch time as fhe receiv-"ed the good Lord, to the intent I " should hear her speak as touching " her innocency alway to be clear. " And in the writing of this fhe fent " for me, and at my coming fhe faid: " mr. Kingfton, I hear I shall not die " afore noon, and I am very forry " therefore, for I thought to be dead " by this time, and past my pain. I " told her it fhould be no pain, it was " fo little. And then fhe faid, I heard " fay the executioner was very good, " and I have a little neck, and put her " hands about it, laughing heartily. I "I have feen many men and alfo wo-" men executed, and that they have " been in great forrow, and to my " knowledge this lady has much joy " and pleafure in death. Sir, her al-" moner is continually with her, and " had been fince two a clock after " midnight. This is the effect of any " thing that is here at this time, and " thus fare you well."

She was beheaded a little before noon, on the green within the Tower. There were prefent the dukes of Suffolk and Richmond, the lord chancellor Audley, and fecretary Cromwell, with the lord mayor, the fheriffs and aldermen of London. Her head was cut off by the hangman of Calais, as being more expert at his business than any in England : her eyes and lips were observed to move, after her head was cut off, as Spelman writes; her body was thrown into a common cheft " of elm that was made to put arrows in, and was buried in the chapel within the Tower before twelve o'clock, Burnet, vol. I. p. 203. Hall, fol. 227. Stow.

f On the 6th of May fhe writ a very moving letter to the king, wherein fhe infifted upon her innocence in the firongeft terms : and at another time, affirmed, fhe could confefs no more than fhe had already done. See Herbert, p. 194. Strype's Mem. tom. I. p. 283. Burnet, tom. I. p. 206.

Dd3

blackened

422.

blackened her reputation as much as poffible, imagining thereby to give a mortal wound to the protestant religion. For a contrary reason, the protestants have forgot nothing that could help to give of her a quite different idea. But both have reasoned upon a false principle, fince the goodness of a religion depends not upon the life and conversation of the professions. For my part, if I may speak my opinion, I can never believe, the peers, her judges, had fufficient evidence to condemn her as guilty of defiling the king's bed. However, it cannot be denied that by fome familiarities unbecoming a queen, the gave too great an advantage over As the was young and handfome, without doubt the her. was not displeased to see the effect of her beauty upon all forts of people, imagining that the love fhe infpired greatly heightened her merit. We fee too many ladies liable to this infirmity. Be this as it will, it is certain, the fpirit of party has not a little contributed to the diverfity of opinions concerning the queen. Had fhe not countenanced the reformation, fhe would have undoubtedly fewer accufers among the catholicks, and had fhe led the king to perfecute the reformed, not many of these would undertake her vindication. This is the way of the world. People are innocent or guilty according to the party they are of. But befides this general caufe, a particular reason may also be found in the carriage of Anne Bullen. She was of a very gay temper, which had charmed the king, but which, after fome years of enjoyment, ferved only to raife his jealoufy. On the other hand, it cannot be denied fhe had very good qualities, and particularly great charity to the poor, to whom a few days before her difgrace she had given two thousand pounds s. A circumstance in the ftory of her death shows likewife, she had a very tender confcience, After the was condemned, the fell upon her knees to the lady Bullen her fifter-in-law b, and conjured her for God's fake to tell the princefs Mary, the begged her pardon for her ill ufage of her. This charity, and this tenderness of confcience would little become a woman, who had held a fhameful and criminal commerce with four men and her own brother. But they would be very confiftent with great indifcretion and a little coquetry.

s She had diffributed in the laft nine months of her life, between fourteen and fifteen thousand pounds to the poor. And, in all appearance, if she had lived, the money that was raifed by the suppression of religious houses, had been better employed than it was. Burnet, tom. I. p. 196.

h Burnet fays, it was to the lady Kingston, the constable of the Tower's lady. tom. I. p. 204.

Though the king had procured the queen's condemnation, 1536. he was not fatisfied. He was pleafed to give her, before the died, a fresh cause of mortification, by annulling their mar-riage. To this end, he caused her to be fo wrought on, with Anne that at last the confessed a contract between her and the lord Bullen. Percy, now earl of Northumberland, though that lord pro-Hall. tested upon his falvation, there never was any formal promise Herbert. of marriage between them. It was believed this confession Burnet. was drawn from her, by an intimation that the king would Strype. on no other condition be prevailed with to mitigate that cruel part of her fentence of being burnt, into the milder part of being beheaded. However, upon this confession, the archbishop of Canterbury was forced to pass a sentence of divorce between the king and her¹, and declare their daugh-ter Elizabeth illegitimate. What is most firange in the king's proceedings is, the artifice he used, in causing the queen to be condemned before her marriage was nulled. Had the fentence of divorce been paffed before the trial, fhe could not have been condemned for adultery, fince her marriage with the king must have been confidered only as a concubinage. But Henry had acquired fuch an abfolute fway over his fubjects, that his will was the fole measure of juffice and law. Nay, he fo little regarded the publick and his own The king reputation, that he married Jane Seymour the next day marries Jane after Anne Bullen's death, wherein he expressed a passion Hall. which ferved greatly to justify the deceased queen.

The death of Anne Bullen revived the hopes of Mary the Burnet. king's daughter by his first wife Catherine. Her attach-Mary reconment to the queen her mother, and her obstinate refusal to ciled to the fubmit to the late acts of parliament, had quite thrown her king. out of the king's favour, who could not bear contradiction. Herbert. Burnet. But the late event caufing the friends of Rome to imagine the king might be reconciled to the pope, they advifed Mary to accommodate herfelf to the times, for fear of lofing the fruit, this change might produce. As there was nothing now that obstructed the union of the king with the emperor, it was hoped the act which declared her illegitimate might be repealed, provided the made her fubmiffion to the king her father. To this end, the refolved to write a very Burnet. humble and respectful letter to the king, protesting, for the Herbert. future she would have no other sentiments but his. But Strype. Henry not fatisfied with a fubmiffion expressed in fuch general terms, infifted, before he reftored her to favour, upon i At Lambeth, May 17. Burnet, T. I. p. 203.

Dd4

423

Stow.

her

1536. her figning certain articles which she had hitherto rejected : namely, the fupremacy, the renunciation of the bifhop of Rome, and the unlawfulnels of her mother's marriage. Mary tried all poffible ways to be excufed. But at length, finding the king remained inflexible, fhe figned them, though contrary to her opinion, in hopes that the ill fhe committed in acting against her conscience, might be productive of much good k. As for the princefs Elizabeth, then about three years old, fhe was divefted of the title of princefs of Wales, which the had enjoyed from her birth. However, the king still continued to educate her at court with all the care and tenderness of a father.

Parliament. A new act of fucceffion. Hall. Herbert. Stow. Burnet, 424

-

• A new parliament meeting the 8th of June 1, an act was paffed to fettle the fucceffion, that made, after their marriage being void by the fentence of divorce between the king and Anne Bullen. By the new act the other was repealed, and the iffue of the king's two first marriages declared illegitimate, and difabled from ever inheriting the crown. Moreover the act confirmed Anne Bullen's fentence as being grounded upon very just causes m, and fettled the crown after the king's death upon the iffue of queen Jane, or of any other queen whom he might afterwards marry. Finally, they gave the king full power to declare the fucceffion to the crown, either by his letters patents under the great feal, or by his laft will figned with his hand; and if any fo defigned to fucceed in default of others, fhould endeavour to usurp upon those before them, or to exclude them, they were declared traitors, as were also those who should maintain the lawfulness of the former marriages. Hence it may be eafily gueffed, with what an abfolute fway Henry then ruled, fince, without any examination, the parliament approved of all his actions, and granted him even more than he defired, by giving him

k There is one circumstance that fhews the frugality of that time, or rather how far money went then, on account of its fcarcity. In the eftablishment that was made for her family, there was only forty pounds a quarter affigned for her privy purfe. Burnet, tom: I. p. 208.

1 Burnet obferves, that if full forty days be neceffary for a fummons, then the writs must have been issued out the day before the late queen's difgrace; fo that it was defigned before the just at Greenwich, and confequently did not Sow from any thing that then appeared. tom. I. p. 209, and III. p. 118. The writs of fummons bear date, April 7. See Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 563.

m Queen Anne is faid in the act, to have been inflamed with pride and carnal defires of her body; and having confederated herfelf with her accomplices, to have committed divers treasons to the danger of the king's royal perfon, (with other aggravating words) for which the had juftly fuffered death, and is now attainted by act of parliament, Burnet, T. I. p. 210.

power to fettle the order of his fuccessors. By that it was in 1536. the king's power to replace Mary and Elizabeth in fuch order as he pleased, or exclude them entirely. This is a clear evidence, that the parliament had not juffice and equity fo much in view as pleafing the king.

When pope Paul III. heard of Anne Bullen's death, he en- The pope tertained hopes of a revocation of what had been done in triestomake England. And therefore declared his thoughts to fir Gre- with Henry, gory Caffali, formerly the king's ambaffador, and after fome Burnet. excufes concerning the fentence of excommunication which Herbert. he had given, but was not yet published, told him he would willingly clofe with any expedients that should be deemed proper to procure a good agreement between the king and him. But Henry, who fome few years before would have who rejects done much to obtain the pope's favour, was now of another his propomind. Nothing was capable of inducing him to dispossels himfelf of the authority acquired over the clergy, as well as over the reft of his fubjects, and which rendered his power more extensive than he expected at first. On the contrary, Statute entirely to deftroy the pope's expectations, he caufed the against the parliament to confirm by two new acts whatever had been Burnet, done against him. By the first, all perfons were to incur Statut. the pains of a præmunire, who endeavoured to reftore in c. 10. England the authority of the bifhop of Rome; and all officers both civil and ecclesiaftical were commanded, under fevere penalties, to punish those who should dare to violate this statute. The second nulled and abolished all dispensations, c. 16. immunities and privileges flowing from the court of Rome, faving to the archbishop of Canterbury the power of confirming what fhould not be contrary to the law of God, or common decency, which confirmation was to pass under the great feal.

In this feffion two confiderable acts were also paffed, but Another which related not to religion. By the first, it was forbid, about the marriage of under fevere penalties, to marry in the next degrees of the the king's blood royal, without the king's licence first had. This fia- relations. tute was made on account of Thomas Howard the duke of Occasion of Norfolk's brother, to whom Margaret Douglass the king's Hall. niece, and daughter to the queen of Scotland, then living in Stow. the English court, had plighted her faith, without acquaint- Hollingsh. ing the king her uncle. Henry offended at their boldnefs fent them both to the Tower, and to prevent the like for the future, procured the forementioned act. By the fecond it Another was provided, that all usurpations of the parliament upon the fatute in favour of the royal authority, before the king was twenty four years of king,

425

age

THE HISTORY age, might be repealed by letters patents under the great feal. Thus both houfes of parliament employed their whole authority to give the fovereign a power which his predeceffors

1536. Statut. c. 18.

425

The clergy approves of the king's late divorce. Burnet. had never enjoyed, as if they had been affembled for that purpofe. But it was not only with refpect to the civil goverment, that the bounds of the royal authority were enlarged. The clergy, unwilling to yield to the parliament in that point, uled the fame endeavours to become agreeable to the king, by approving all his proceedings. The convocation being met at the fame time, confirmed the fentence of the invalidity of the king's marriage with

Anne Bullen, upon the fame ground which had ferved to procure it, namely, a precontract with the lord Percy, though that lord denied it upon oath.

A few days after, the lower house of convocation sent to the upper house fixty seven opinions, which they thought worthy to be condemned. At the fame time the deputies made great complaints against those who were for making innovations in religion. These complaints were levelled at Cranmer, Cromwell, Shaxton, Latimer, and fome others who were noted as heads or promoters of the reformation, though they were not named n. Care was taken to mix with these fixty seven opinions, mostly drawn from the doctrine of the Lutherans, feveral tenets of the old lollards and the anabaptifts, to infinuate that those who were complained of embraced them all alike. The enemies of the reformers hoped to make them forfeit the king's favour, who affected a great rigour against fuch as were termed hereticks. After the death of Anne Bullen, they fcarce doubted that all whom the had loved or protected would thare in her ruin. But they were difappointed in their expectations. Cranmer and Cromwell were never more in the king's favour, who even gave prefently after to Cromwell a fresh mark of his efteem, by conftituting him his vicegerent in all ecclefiaftical matters °. So, the convocation's complaints, inftead of Cromwell is made vicegerent. Herbert. Stow. Hollingfh.

> Burnet obferves, that Crammer promoted the reformation prudently and folidly. Latimer, zealoufly and fimply; Shaxton, with much indiferent pride and vanity, tom. I. p. 214.

> • In a publick inftrument dated October 22, 1535. he is filled vicegerent: and in the writ of furmons, 1539, (in Dugdale) he is filled vicarius generalis. So that these two titles feem to have been promifcuoufly ufed. In right of his office of vicar general, he fat in convocation above the archbifhop of. Canterbury. See Burnet, tom. III. p. 402, 123. About this time he was made lord privy feal, upon the refignation of Thomas Boleyn carl of Wiltfhire; and on the 9th of July was created a baron. Stow, p. 573. Rymer's Fgd, tom, XIV. p. 571.

being

Complaints against the reformers. Burnet. being prejudicial to the reformation or reformers, feem rather 1536. to have increased the credit of the two heads. This was quickly perceived, when it was feen that they had perfuaded the king to advance the reformation, by retrenching in the publick worfhip fuch ceremonies as were not founded upon the word of God. This refolution being taken, the king acquainted the convocation that he wifhed them to examine the ceremonies, to the end fuch as were useless and infignicant might be retrenched.

But those who were against the reformation had a much Articles progreater caufe to be alarmed, when fome days after, Crom-poled by the well brought into the upper houfe of convocation, articles clergy. by the king himfelf, containing fundry alterations in the Hall. doctrines, with orders to examine them, and report to the Hollingfh. king the refult of their debates. Then it was that the Grand detwo parties openly divided, the one to promote, and the other bates beto oppose, the reformation. Cranmer was at the head of tween the two parties. the first, being supported by Godrick bishop of Ely, Shaxton Burnet, of Sarum, Latimer of Worcefter, Fox of Hereford, Hilfey of Rochefter, Barlow of St. David's. Lee archbishop of York, was chief of the fecond, and with him were Stokefly bishop of London, Tunstal of Durham, Gardiner of Winchefter, Longland of Lincoln, Sherburn P of Chichefter, Nix of Norwich 4, Kite of Carlille. Thefe, who were private favourers of the pope, ftill hoping a reconciliation with Rome, ftrenuoufly opposed all innovations for fear the breach should become wider. But this party lay under a great difadvantage, as Cromwell and Cranmer, who had the king's ear, suggested to him that most of the abuses which they defired to be abolished, directly tended to support the pope's usurpations. In fhort, after many debates, the convocation Conffituagreed upon certain articles which were digefted in form of tions made by the . conflitutions, the fubftance whereof was as follows:

clergy. Fuller.

I. The holy fcriptures are laid down as the foundation of Burnet. faith, jointly with the three Creeds, the Apoftles, the Ni-T.I.p. 215.

P Sherburn, upon what inducement is not known, refigned his bishoprick, which was given to Richard Sampfon dean of the chapel; a penfion of four hundred pounds being referved to Sherburn, and confirmed by parliament. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 570.

I Nix had alfo offended the king figually, by fome correspondence with Rome, and was long kept in the Marshalfea, and was convicted and found in a præmunire : but the king confidering his old age, upon his fubmission pardoned him. He died the last year, though Fuller in his flight way makes him fit in this convocation. Burnet, tom. I. p. 214. See Rymer, ibid. p. 573.

427

cene,

THE HISTORY

428

cene, and the Athanafian, and the four first general coun-

II. The neceffity of baptifm is established in the second, which forbids also to repeat it.

III. In the third, penance is reckoned neceffary to falvation, confifting of contrition, auricular confession, and amendment of life.

IV. The fourth eftablishes as a fundamental doctrine the real prefence of christ's body in the eucharist r.

V. In the fifth it is faid, that juffification is attained by regeneration, which confifts of contrition, faith, and charity.

VI. It is appointed in the fixth, that images fhould frand in the churches, but that in incenfing, kneeling, and offering to them, people fhould not do it to the image, but to God and his honour.

VII. In the feventh, faints are to be honoured, but without believing, fuch things are to be obtained at their hands, as belongs only to God to beftow.

VIII. In the eighth, faints are to be prayed to, provided it be done without fuperfition. The days fet apart for their memories are to be obferved, unlefs the king fhould leffen the number of them, which if he did, it was to be obeyed.

IX. The ceremonies used in the church are to be retained, as the vestments of the priests, holy-water, holybread, bearing candles on Candlemas-day, giving assories on Assories on Good-friday, and kiffing it, hallowing the font, and other exorcisms and benedictions.

'X. The tenth declares it good to pray for the dead, but that it is neceffary to correct the abufes advanced under the pretence of purgatory, the pope's pardons, maffes faid in certain places, or before certain images. In fine, that fince the ftate and place of fouls after death are unknown, they ought to be recommended to God's mercy in general terms only.

The king approves them. These conflitutions being presented to the king, who corrected them in several places ⁵, were signed by Cromwell, Cranmer, r It is obfervable, that there are only three facraments mentioned in thefe articles. Hall, fol. 228.

s The king did not correct the engroffed and figned arricles, as Rapin, and others have been led to imagine, by mifunderftanding Burnet's words in his vol. I. p. 217. For his meaning was

OF ENGLAND.

Cranmer, feventeen bishops, forty abbots and priors, and 1536. fifty archdeacons and proctors of the lower house of convocation, among whom was Polydore Virgil archdeacon of Wells, author of a hiftory of England, published after-wards by the king's order '. Their publication occasioned great variety of centures. Those that defired a reformation Opinions of had gained fome ground, with refpect to images and pur- the two pargatory, but chiefly in that the fcriptures were made the thefe arstandard of faith, because they hoped from that principle to ticles. draw one day very great confequences. But the determi- Burnet. nations concerning auricular confession, and the real prefence of chrift's body in the eucharift, troubled them extremely. Not only were thefe articles directly contrary to their fentiments, but they faw how difficult it would be to meddle with them again, by reafon of the king's prejudice, who believed them unquestionable. The other party were under an unspeakable consternation, to see articles fo long fince determined, brought under examination, the papal authority abolished, and the existence of purgatory called in question. Thus these conftitutions pleased neither party. The one thought the reformers had acted too faintly, in not advancing the reformation, and could not forbear blaming their compliance, in fuffering doctrines fo repugnant to truth, to be eftablished. But it was replied, that every thing could not be done at once, and that it would have been imprudent obstinately to require that the errors, the people were not yet fenfible of, fhould be fuddenly retrenched. The other party were very angry also with the bishops, for so basely abandoning truths, embraced for fo many ages by the catholick church. But indeed, it was not in the power of . either to act otherwife. The king himfelf managed the whole, having fettled in his cabinet council what he thought fit to alter or keep. But there was not a counfellor that dared to oppose his opinion, or believed it prudent to combat his fentiments, for fear a too great opposition should produce a quite contrary effect. All that could be done, was to try to enlighten the king gently and by degrees, without ftriving to bring him, by a fort of compulsion, to what was thought reafonable.

was, (as he explains it himfelf it in vol. III. p. 123.) That there are fe-veral draughts of these articles that are in many places corrected by the king's own hand, fome of which corrections are very long and very material. Of these he spoke, and pot of the engroffed articles figned by the convocation.

t And Peter Vannes archdeacon of Worcefter. Herbert, p. 202.

429

The king being cited to a council, the convocation. Burnet. Herbert 430

1536.

answer. Burnet. T. I.p. 219. Herbert. P. 203.

The king protefts against the council of Mantua, Burnet.

The parliament is prorogued.

Reginald Pole, falls out with the king. Herbert. Burnet. Strype.

Before the convocation broke up, the king communicated to both houfes a fummons he had received to a council, which was to meet at Mantua. The pope, without confulting him, had called this council in concert with the emadvifes with peror, and was to prefide by his legates. So Henry might well expect to lofe his caufe before fuch a council, had he been fo unwife as to fubmit to its decifions. Indeed he had appealed from the pope to a general council, but there were many queries to be refolved, in order to know whether this called at Mantua was lawful, and furnished with a fufficient authority. Mean while, before he answered the fummons, he was pleafed to advise with the clergy, who, after mature deliberation, prefented to him a writing to this The clergy's effect : that a true and lawful general council was a very good means to preferve the peace and union of the church: but before a council was called, it was neceffary to confider, first, who had authority to call it: fecondly, whether the reasons for calling it were weighty. Thirdly, who should affift as judges. Fourthly, what fhould be the order of proceeding. Fifthly, what doctrines were to be discussed. Then, it was declared that neither the pope nor any prince in the world had power to call a general council, without the confent of all the fovereigns in chriftendom. Purfuant to this declaration, Henry published a protestation against the council which was to meet at Mantua, speaking very plainly and freely of the defigns and conduct of the pope. He concluded with faying, that he could not confider as free and general, a council where the bifhop of Rome fhould prefide, which should meet in a suspected place, and which must be composed only of a small number of prelates, till the war between the emperor and France was ended.

> The eighteenth of July, the parliament was prorogued, after a feffion but of forty days, wherein however feveral acts of moment were paffed ".

At this time cardinal Pole was in high repute for his learning and eloquence. His name was de la Pole, but every where, except in England, he is fo well known by that of Polus, that he cannot be called by any other, with-

" Namely, those mentioned above ; against restoring the authority of the bishop of Rome; against immunities, &c.---- By an act now made, it was also injoined, that tithes, and other profits, arising or becoming due during the vacancy of any fpiritual promotion, shall belong to the person that is next prefented thereto, toward the payment of the first fruits. And by another, that French wine should be fold by retail only eight pence a gallon ; and fack or malmfey for twelve pence. See flatut. 28 Henry VIII.

out danger of confounding the reader. He was descended 1536. of Michael de la Pole, earl of Suffolk, and favourite of Richard II. From that time this family had been continually advanced, fo that in the reign of Henry VI. the earl of Suffolk was honoured with the title of duke. After that, a lord of this family married a daughter of the duke of Clarence, brother of Édward IV. Of this marriage was born among other children, Reginald de la Pole, or Polus, the cardinal I am fpeaking of, who confequently was coufin to the king w. Being a younger brother, he was defigned for the church, for which also his natural qualities rendered him very proper. In his younger years, he made fo great progrefs in all the fciences, that the king intending to raife him to the highest dignities of the church, conferred on him the deanery of Exeter, with feveral other benefices that he might go and finish his studies abroad. He went first to Paris, where he flayed fome years, and forfeited in fome measure the king's favour, for refusing to concur with his agents, in procuring the determinations of the French universities in the affair of the divorce. Notwithstanding this, he returned into England, where he affifted as dean of Exeter, at the convocation, which acknowledged the king fupreme head of the church of England *. There is even reason to prefume he was not of the number of those who opposed the new title, because he kept his deanery feveral years after. At length he travelled into Italy, and lived fome time at Padua, where he contracted a friendship with Bembo, Sadoletti, and other celebrated wits. The reputation he acquired in that country, made the king defirous to recall him, intending to reward his merit, which was univerfally known. But Pole still declined, on fome pretence or other to comply with the king's defire. At last, finding delays could prevail no longer, he was forced to write to the king the true reason of his refusal, which was, he could not approve either of his divorce, or his feparation from the apostolick fee. Henry, who was extremely defirous to gain him, fent him a writing, containing his apology, and the w This is one of the greateff miftakes concerning families Rapin has been guilty of. Cardinal Pole was no ways related to de la Pole duke of Suffolk. The cardinal's father Sir Richard Pole, knight of the garter, was a Welfman, and married Margaret aughter of the dake of Charence, See note e p. 96.

* He fays himfelf he was not prefent, which fhews, that at that time he was contented to be filent in his opinion, and that he did not think fit tooppofe what was doing. Burnet, tom. III. p. 124.

reafons

431

Burnet. T. III. 403. Herbert.

reasons of his proceedings against the pope y. Upon which Pole wrote his book de Unitate Ecclesiaftica, wherein he takes the liberty to fpeak of the king in very offenfive terms, comparing him to Nebuchadnezzar, and exhorting the emperor and the reft of the princes to turn their arms against him. He was not fatisfied with fending him his book in manufcript, but caufed it to be printed and published 2. Henry provoked, as may be eafily judged, at fuch a violent and difrespectful behaviour, tried to allure him into England, by writing to him how much he effected his book, defiring him withal to come and explain fome difficult paffages by word of mouth. Pole took took care not to be thus infnared. So the king perceiving this artifice took not effect, divefted him of all his dignities, the lofs whereof was amply repaired by the pope and the emperor. Some time after, he was rewarded with a cardinal's hat. He thereby became still more attached to the pope's interest, and a greater enemy to the king, who not being able to reach his perfon, made his family and kindred feel the effects of his indignation.

Suppreffions monasteries. Burnet, T. I. coll. P. 143.

The suppression of the lesser monasteries, enacted in the of the leffer last feffion of the late parliament, was not executed till August, though the commissioners appointed for that purpofe had received their inftructions in April. Probably, the king had a mind to fee the event of the new parliament before they proceeded. As their report was suppressed in the reign of queen Mary, it cannot politively be faid what it contained. Thus much is certain, the adherents of the pope and the old religion accufed them of committing numberlefs extortions and robberies, and of making falfe reports of what they discovered in this visitation, to leffen the horror of their oppreffions. This may be partly true. Nay, it is not unlikely that these men, either from a defire to make their court to the king, or from a greedinefs to enrich themselves, exceeded their instructions. On the other hand, it is also probable, their accufers highly aggravated the crimes laid to their charge. However this be, immenfe numbers were extremely displeased at the suppression of fo many religious houfes, which were had in great veneration. All the friars of these suppressed houses who > y In a book writ by dr. Sampfon. Idem. T. I. p. 221.

2 Pole's book was answered by bifhop Stokefly, and bifhop Tunftal, in a long and learned letter, directed to Pole. Gardiner published also against it, his book of true obedience; to which was added a preface by Bonner. Idem. tom. III. p. 126, &c. Herbert, p. 181.

wifhed to become feculars, had a difpenfation from the king, and the reft were removed to the larger monafteries, which were untouched. The churches and cloifters were pulled down; and the materials fold to the king's ufe.

It may be eafily judged, the monks fpared no pains to Abundance excite the people to rebel. They found it the more eafy, of people as great difcontents reigned every where. The nobility ed. and gentry took it very ill, that the king fhould have the Burnet. lands of the suppressed monasteries, most part whereof were founded by their anceftors. Befides, they were deprived of the conveniency of providing for their younger children, when they had too many; and of lodging; as they travelled, in these houses, where they were always well entertained. The poor murmured still louder, because multitudes lived by the alms which were daily diffributed in these houses. In fhort the devout bigots thought the fouls of their anceftors must now lie in purgatory, fince fo many masses which were faid for their deliverance, were abolifhed by the suppreffion of the monasteries.

The court hearing of these murmurs, endeavoured to The difcompose them, by publishing the diforders, discovered in orders of the these houses. But this fignified nothing. Besides that these houses pubreports were deemed very much aggravated, it was faid, why lifted. were not these abuses feverely punished and reformed; with-Burnet. out deftroying whole houses for ever? At last Cromwell found The king an expedient to allay the difcontents in great measure, by ad- fells their vifing the king to fell the lands of the suppressed monasteries lands at easy at very eafy rates, and oblige the purchasers, under severe penalties, to keep up the wanted hospitality *. But this expedient was not capable of entirely appealing the murmurs of the people, though the king ftrove to give them fome fatisfaction by re-endowing one and thirty of these houses b.

a The purchasers being obliged to keep up the old hofpitality, (which they were to do upon the penalty of paying every month fix pounds thirteen shillings and four pence, to be levied by the juffices of the peace, who were impowered to enquire of the matter) the common fort, who, like those of old, that followed Chrift for the loaves, were most concerned for the loss of a dinner on Sundays and holidays, were in a great measure satisfied; and the gentry, by having good bargains, were drawn in to like what was done, and to affift the crown for ever in the defence of these laws, their own interests being interwoven with the rights of the VOL. VI.

crown. The commissioners, as was but just, paid all the debts of the suppresfed monasteries : but when relicks happened to be pawned, it feems they refuled to redeem them. Thus one man loft forty pounds which he had lent upon St. Andrew's finger, except one ounce of filver with which it was covered; The writers that live near the time fay, about ten thousand friars and nuns were fent to feek for their livings, The abbots and priors had fmall penfions. Burnet. Herbert.

b Fifteen abbies, and fixteen nunneries. The king's letters patent for that purpofe are dated August 17. Burnet, tom. I. p. 224. and Collect. p. 142. Ee Whilft 1536.

1536. Injunctions Burnet. Herbert. p. 204. Stow. clergy murmer at them. Hollingfh.

434

Infurrection in Lincolnfhire. Herbert. Burnet, Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

Whilft people were in this fermentation, the king publifhed, in the name of the vice-gerent, fome injunctions to regulate the behaviour of perfons in holy orders, many of to the clergy, whom led very irregular lives. These injunctions contained nothing but what had been ordained by feveral fynods e, and yet the clergy were extremly offended, because they could. not endure to see themselves subject to the orders of the. The inferior vice-gerent, by whom they faid, they were going to be enflaved much more than by the pope. Thus the inferior clergy, the monks and the bigots being equally affected by what had been done, and by what, very probably, was intended to be done, inspired those on whom they had any influence, with a fpirit of rebellion, which quickly broke out into a flame.

The first rising was in Lincolnshire d, where Dr. Mackerel, prior of Barlings, drew after him great body of men, whom he headed under the name of captain Cobler. The rebels fent their grievances to the king in a very humble manner, telling him, they acknowledged his fupremacy, and were content he fhould enjoy the tenths and first fruits of the livings, but withal prayed him to advife with his nobility concerning the redrefs of their grievances. This was taxing the king indirectly with following the counfels of Thomas Cromwell, who was of a mean extraction. These

c The preamble of these injunctions ran thus: "In the name of God, a-"men. By the authority and com-" miffion of the excellent prince Hen-" ry, by the grace of God king of " England and France, defender of ⁴⁴ the faith, lord of Ireland, and in ⁴⁴ earth fupreme head under Chrift of " the church of England. I Thomas " lord Cromwell, privy feal, and vice-" gerent to the king's faid highnefs, "for all his jurifdiction ecclefiaftical " within this realm, do for the ad-" vancement of the glory of Almighty "God, increase of virtue, and ho-" nour of the king's majefty, give and " exhibit unto you-thefe in-"junctions following, &c." This was the first act of pure supremacy done by the king. For in all that went before, he had the concurrence of the two convocations. They were penned, it is like, by Cranmer. They were not relified by the majority of the clergy. The great profits theymade by their images and relicks, and the pilgrimages to them, were now taken away; and yet fevere impositions were laid upon them : a fifth for repairs; a tenth at leaft for an exhibitioner, in either of the univerfities, or fome grammar school; and a fortieth for charity ; which were cried out upon as intolerable burdens. Their labour was also increased, and they were bound up to a frict life. In fhort, the very fame opinions about pilgrimages, faints, &c. and about instructing the people in the christian religion, in the vulgar tongue, for which the Lollards were not long ago burnt, were now fet up by the' king's authority. See Burnet's Collection, tom. I. p. 160, &c.

d In the beginning of October, occafioned by the levying of the fifteenth lately granted by parliament. Hall, fol. 229. Stow, p. 573. The duke of Suffolk was commissioned to go against them October 7. Herbert, p. 205.

grievances

grievances were, that he had suppressed a great number of 1536. monafteries: that large fublides had been granted by parlia-ment without any occasion: that he admitted into his coun-The grie-cil perfons of mean birth, whose sole view was to enrich the rebels. themfelves, inftead of confulting the good of the ftate : that Herbert. feveral bishops had subverted the antient faith e, and em-Burnet. braced new doctrines, at all times condemned by the church : Speed. p. 772. that having feen fo many religious houfes plundered, they were afraid the churches would undergo the fame fate.

The king returned an answer to these grievances in a large The king's manifesto f. But as his reasons were grounded upon princi- manifesto. ples not admitted by the malecontents, the manifesto had fol. 229, no great effect. Mean while the king was greatly embar-Burnet. raffed; his troops were few, and he had certain advice that Speed. a like infurrection was preparing in Yorkshire and other neighbouring counties. He ordered however the duke of Suffolk to march, though with very few troops, and try to ftop the progress of the rebels. But the duke finding himfelf too weak, thought it more proper to endeavour to appeafe the commotion by way of negotiation than by arms. So when he fent to the malecontents the king's answer to their grievances, he took occasion to let them know, they fhould not despair of pardon. Upon which, some of their heads privately fent him word, they had joined with the rebels only to reclaim them, wherein they hoped to fucceed, provided the king would be pleafed to grant them a general pardon. The duke difliked not the overture, which afforded him an opportunity to write to the king, and follicit him in their behalf, offering however to march against the rebels if he was ordered. At the fame time, the king re- The rebels ceived news that the Yorkshiremen had taken up arms, and accept of a as he feared the others would join them, iffued out a procla-pardon. mation, granting an abfolute pardon to all that fhould return to their homes. The proclamation fucceeded according to expectation. The rebels immediately disperfed, and fo freed the king from great perplexity. Some however chofe rather to join the Yorkshire rebels than accept of the pardon g.

e Particularly they complained, that four of their pretended feven facraments were taken away, and that they fhould foon lofe the other three. Hall, fol. 228.

f As to the suppression of the monafteries, he declared, that it was granted him by all the nobles spiritual and temporal of his realm, and by all the commons in the fame, by act of parliament, and not fet forth by any counfellors of his upon their mere will and fancy. Hall, fol. 229.

g Captain Cobler, with feveral others, were taken and executed. Hall, fol. 230. The reft made their fubmiffion, October 19. Hollingfh, p. 941. 435

The

A more dangerous rebellion in Yorkshire .. Hall .. Stow. Herbert. the rebels. Speed.

436

1536.

The infurrection of Yorkshire was much more dange-I rous than that of Lincolnshire. This feemed to have been accidental and fudden. The other was in purfuance of a fettled defign, wherein were concerned feveral perfons of note, who only waited, before they declared, to fee how the people in general were difpofed. Robert Afke, a man of good judgment, headed the malecontents of those parts, where Afke head of the diffance of the court, and the neighbourhood of Scotland, rendered the people more bold than elfewhere, befides that the monks had always been in more credit in the northern counties than in all the reft of the kingdom. Since July; Afke had tried to gain the lord Dacres, who had amuled him fome time with hopes that his negotiation would fucceed. Probably, this lord fent the king the first notice of the plot. At last, the malecontents took up arms, and affembled in very great numbers about the end of August, just after the Lincolnshire rebellion broke out. When they faw themfelves ftrong enough, they would not fuffer the lords and gentlemen to remain neuter at home, but forced them either to fly or join with them, and fwear they would be true to the cause, for which they intended to fight. This caufe was properly religion, as they plainly intimated, by putting a crucifix in their banners h. Befides, they reestablished the monks in some of the suppressed monasteries. As they met with no opposition, because the king's forces were employed against the rebels in Lincolnshire, they made great progrefs at first, and still much greater, after Richmondfhire, Lancashire, the bishoprick of Durham, and the The earl of county of Westmoreland engaged on their fide. George Talbot earl of Shrewfbury was the only perfon that ventured to take up arms for the king without receiving his commiffion, though he was not ignorant that at fuch a juncture his proceedings might be mifinterpreted. But as he meant Shrewfbury rifes for the king. Herbert. Hollingfh.

> h Their march was called the pilgrimage of grace, and to inveigle the people, some priests marched before them with croffes in their hands. In their banners they had a crucifix with the five wounds and a chalice, and every one wore on his fleeve as a hadge, an emblem of the five wounds of chrift, with the name of Jefus wrought in the midft. All that joined them took an cath, " That they entered into this " pilgrimage of grace, for the love of " God, the prefervation of the king's " perfon and iffue, the purifying the " nobility, and driving away all bafe-" born and evil counfellors; and for " no particular profit of their own, nor " to do displeasure to any, nor to kill " any for envy, but to take before. " them the crofs of Chrift, his faith, " the reftitution of the church, and " the suppression of hereticks, and " their opinions." These were specious pretences. So people flocked a-bout their croffes and flandards in fuch numbers, that they grew forty thoufand ftrong. Burnet, tom. I. p. 229-Hall, fol. 230. Stow, p. 574. well, well, he hoped the king would forgive a fault committed purely for his fervice. And indeed the king fent him a commission, constituting him his lieutenant against the rebels. At the fame time, he ordered the duke of Suffolk not to flir from Lincolnshire, lest the malecontents there should think of joining those of the north. Moreover, he gave commif- The duke of fions to feveral lords i to levy troops, whilft on his part he Norfolk affembled as many as poffible, in order to form an army, the the king's command whereof he defigned for the duke of Norfolk. forces. But, either from the backwardness of the people, or for fome other reafon, the army was not fufficiently numerous to refift the rebels.

Whilft the king was making his preparations, Afke was The archnot idle. He approached Pontfract caftle, where the arch-bifhop of bifhop of York and Thomas lord d'Arcy were, and forced the lord them to furrender the place. As these two lords were d'Arcy furreckoned well affected to the pope, many believed they were render Pont-fract, and not forry that the want of provisions furnished them with a are fufpectpretence to deliver Pontfract to the rebels, and march with ed. them in their other expeditions k. Shortly after, Afke took Hall. alfo York and Hull, and by fair or foul means obliged all The rebels the nobility of the country to join his army 1. Thus the af- take York fair grew daily more important, and the court became appre- and Huil. henfive that the reft of the kingdom would follow the example of the northern counties. This apprehenfion was the more just, as at the fame time there were in all parts men who made it their bufinefs, to fpread reports capable of inciting the whole nation to rebel, by putting them in fear of the utter fubverfion of the religion they had hitherto profeffed."

Mean while, the king chofe to amufe the rebels, till his The king army was ready. The 20th of October he fent a herald tries to with a proclamation to be read to the troops. Afke gave the anufe the rebels, herald audience, fitting in ftate with the archbishop on the one hand,' and the lord d'Arcy on the other. But when he heard the contents of the proclamation, he fent him away without fuffering him to publish it. Henry finding mattters

i Particularly to George Stanley, earl of Derby, October 17. At the fame time, George Haftings, earl of Huntingdon, and Thomas Manners, earl of Rutland, fent the king offers of their scrvices. Herbert, p. 206.

k They were both made to take the oath in the note above.

1 Henry Clifford, earl of Cumberland (17 Hen. VIII.) grandfon of the lord Clifford, flain in the first of Edw. IV. held out his caftle of Skipton, against all that force, though five hundred gentlemen (retained at his coff) had deferted him. Sir Ralph Evers alfo defended Scarborough caffle till he was relieved, though himfelf and men had nothing but bread and water for twenty days. Herbert, p. 206.

.437 1536.

Herbert.

Ee 3

THE HISTORY

Norfolk marches against the rebels. Hall. Hollingfh. Herbert.

438 1536.

Accident which hinders the royal army from being defeated. Hall. Stow. Hollingih.

Sentiments of the duke of Norfolk.

to the king. Herbert.

were in an ill way, difpatched the duke of Norfolk with what troops he had ready, which were to be joined by those The duke of under the command of the earl of Shrewfbury, and fome others levied in hafte by the marquis of Exeter m. But thefe three fmall bodies bore no proportion to the forces of the rebels. So the king found himfelf obliged to publish a proclamation, commanding all the nobility to meet him at Northampton the 7th of November. Mean time, Afke, at the head of thirty thousand men, advanced towards Doncafter, where the duke of Norfolk, the marquis of Exeter, and the earl of Shrewfbury, were encamped with five thoufand men only, and having no other refuge but to defend the pass of the river between the two armies. But as it was fordable in feveral places, they would doubtlefs have been extremely embarrafied, if a great ram, which fell very feafonably, had not made the river unpaffable. This was certainly a very fortunate accident for the king. If his troops had been defeated on this occasion, as it, was very likely, confidering their fmall number, it would have done him an unfreakable damage.

I have before observed, that the duke of Norfolk approved and conduct not of the alterations made in religion. And therefore, it could not but be very difagreeable to him to command the king's army, against people who had taken up arms in a caufe which he could not diflike. Mean while, he faw himfelf in a very dangerous fituation, fince he was as much afraid of conquering as of being conquered. In the first cafe, a victory over the rebels would infallibly ruin the party he fecretly favoured. In the fecond cafe, he ran the rifque of being fuspected by the king, and forfeiting his favour. Happily for him, his inability to hurt the rebels, freed him from this embarraffment, by affording him a pretence to proceed by way of negotiation. As he held intelligence with fome of their leaders, he fo ordered it by their means, that they came to a refolution to prefent a very humble petition to the king. That done, they acquainted the duke A truce very with it, intreating him to fecond it with his interest. The advantageous duke readily granted their request, but told them, that to obtain a favourable answer from the king, there must be a ceffation of arms, during which he took upon him to go himfelf and prefent their petition. The propofal being accepted, the ceffation was concluded, and the duke departed for London ". At fuch a juncture, the ceffation was very advanta- 1536. geous to the king, becaufe his army being very weak, he wanted time to raife more forces. For this very caufe, many of the rebels feeing that contrary to all reafon the king had leifure given him to affemble his troops, and imagining they were betrayed by their leaders, withdrew to their homes o.

m Henry Courtney.

OF ENGLAND.

The difcord which began to fpread among the rebels, gave Henry tries the king fome hopes of coming off upon eafy terms. And to gain time, Herbert, therefore he delayed fending an answer to their petition, expecting their army would difperfe by degrees P. But the leaders perceiving at length that the court purpofely prolonged the negotiation, and that those delays must utterly ruin their affairs, renewed their hoftilities, and refolved once more to attack the royal army. Had this refolution been executed, it would have probably changed the face of affairs very much; but another great rain fo fwelled the river which parted the two armies, that it was not possible for them to pass it 9. The king hearing of this, thought it necessary to give them fome fort of fatisfaction, for fear they fhould execute their refolution before he was ready. To that end, he Artifices of fent them an anfwer to their petition r; but it was expressed the court. in fuch general terms, that they could not depend upon what was promifed therein. At the fame time, he proposed, that if they would fend three hundred deputies to Doncaster, commissioners should meet them there, and treat of a peace. His aim was to gain time, in hopes, the three hundred deputies would difagree, and their diffention by prolonging the negotiation give him time to prepare his army. A few days Herbert. after, the duke of Norfolk returning to Doncafter, fent word to the rebels that he had brought them a general pardon, ten only excepted, fix of whom were named, and four not. But the pardon was unanimoully rejected, because the fix perfons named were fome of the heads, and each was in fear of being one of the four whom the king had referved. And indeed, the king had no other view but to fow difcord among them, and make way for the treaty at Donn Together with fir Ralph Elecker, and Robert Bowes, whom the rebels fent with him. Herbert, p. 206.

· Rumours were industriously spread among them, that fome of their chiefs would compound for themfelves, and leave the reft to the gallows. Herbert, ibid.

P He alfo detained Elecker and Bowes, under pretence, that the rebels had broken the ceffation. Ibid.

9 The fecond fwelling of the river, was not, according to Herbert, &c. till after the conference at Doncaster, when the rebels, upon the king's rejecting their demands, refolved to attack Doncaster, p. 207.

r By the duke of Norfolk. Herbert, ibid.

439

Ee4

cafter,

440 1536.

Conference

cafter, which they accepted at last, and fent their three hundred deputies thither s. The court had expected, these deputies would never agree about their demands, and fo would afford the time that was wanted. But as it was eafy atDoncaster. for the leaders to discover the court's intention, they gave the deputies their inftructions in writing, from which they were not to depart. These instructions contained ten demands, which the deputies made at the congress held at Doncaster the 6th of December.

The rebels demands, Herbert; Burnet,

I. They demanded a general pardon, without any exception.

II. That a parliament fhould be held at York.

III. That a court of juffice should be erected there, that the inhabitants of the northern counties might not be brought to London upon any law fuit.

IV. That fome acts of the late parliaments which were too grievous to the people, fhould be repealed t.

V. That the princefs Mary should be declared legitimate.

VI. That the papal authority fhould be re-eftablished upon the old foot.

VII. That the suppressed monasteries should be reftored to their former state.

VIII. That the Lutherans and all innovators in religion fhould be punished feverely.

IX. That Thomas Cromwell and Audley lord chancellor fhould be removed from the council, and excluded from the next parliament.

X. That Lee and Leighton, visitors of the monasteries, fhould be imprifoned and brought to account for their briberies and extortions.

The confeup. . . .

As the deputies had not power to gualify these demands, rence breaks fo the king's commiffioners were not authorifed to grant them.

The king took care not to deftroy in a moment the work of many years. Thus the congress ended without any fruit. The duke of Norfolk was very forry to fee that the affair was like to be decided by arms. He heartily wifhed, the s Among whom, were John lord Scroop, lord Latimer, John lord Lum-fey, Thomas lord d'Arcy, fir Thomas Percy, Robert Afke, &c. who were to treat with the duke of Norfolk, fir William Fitzwilliam, admiral 3 + 7 / 5 4 of England, &c. Herbert, ibid.

t Namely, those for the last fublidy, being a fifteenth, for ules, for making of words misprision of treason, for the clergy's paying their tenths and first fruits to the king. Herbert, p. 207.

king

OF ENGLAND.

king would grant the rebels all their demands; but knew 1536. too well his humour and character to venture to make him fuch a propofal. Mean while, he was extremely embarraffed. He must either betray the king's interests, or resolve bours to to fight the rebels, contrary to his own inclination, and with make up great danger of a defeat. At leaft, he could not avoid, pur- matters fuant to the intent of the court, to prolong the affair till the without a battle. king was ready to march, and then he faw, the ruin of the Hollingfh. rebels was inevitable. In this perplexity, he chofe to write Burnet. to the king that the number of the rebels daily increasing, Herbert, there was danger of their making fome attempt which it would be difficult to refift; and therefore, to prevent the threatened mischief, it was his opinion, if his highness pleased, that some of their demands should be granted. Upon this letter, the king empowered him to offer them a general pardon without exception ", and promife them in his name, that the next parliament fhould be held in the north. But withal, he ordered him not to use these remedies except in extremity, and when there was no other refource. The duke receiving these powers, thought proper to use them without delay, fince it was the only way to free him from his embarrafiment. He was unwilling openly to betray the king's interefts, and on the other hand, did not care to be inftrumental in the rebels deftruction, whole fentiments he approved, though he durft not fhow it. So, af- The rebels ter having by his correspondents prevailed with the leaders to accept of the comply with the king's offers, the agreement was concluded. and every man returned to his home, to the great forrow of the monks and bigots, who had expected quite another thing from their efforts to excite the people to rebel ". But the agreement hindered not the friars and ecclefiafticks of those parts, from continuing to foment among the people a fpirit of rebellion, which broke out again, as we shall fee hereafter. Something must now be faid of the emperor's affairs with the king of France, wherein all Europe was concerned.

When Francis I. began the war in Savoy about the end Affairs beof the last year, the emperor was in Sicily upon his return tween the from his Tunis expedition, but unable to assift the duke of Francis. Savoy. This made him choose to try to cool the king of Bellai. France's ardour by a negotiation, till he could aid his ally. P. Daniel,

" Their pardon was figned by king Henry at Richmond, December 7. Herbert, p. 207.

W The king fent alfo a long anfwer to their demands, which the reader may fee in Burnet, tom. I. p. 232. and Herbert, p. 207.

441

THE HISTORY

1536. -----

442

Negotiation about the duchy of Milan.

The death of Francesco Sforza, which happened in the mean time, furnished him with an opportunity. He intimated to the French ambaffador refiding at his court, that he would not difpose of the duchy of Milan, till he knew the king of France's fentiments. Franci s being informed of it, demanded the duchy for his fecond fon the duke of Orleans, and the emperor put him in hopes, he would give it to his third fon the duke of Angoulême upon certain terms, which left it in his power to prolong the negotiation as much as he pleased. And indeed, he amused him in this manner till April 1536, one while infifting upon the perfon of the duke of Angoulême, another while feeming inclined to confer the duchy on the duke of Orleans. Francis willing to end this affair, and knowing, the emperor intended to go to Rome, fent the cardinal of Lorrain for a politive answer, but left the events of the war should bring some obstacle to the negotiation, he ordered admiral Brion, who commanded in Piedmont, to ceafe hostilities.

Theemperor arrives at Rome. He offers before the pope and cardinals to decide his the French king in fingle combat.

He prepares his forces.

Francis Italy,

Whilft the cardinal of Lorrain was on his journey, the emperor arriving at Rome, went a few days after to a publick confiftory, which was affembled at his request. There before the pope and the cardinals he inveighed against the king of France, intimating, he was the fole author of the wars that had afflicted Europe ever fince his accession to the quarrel with throne. He thence took occasion to fay, that instead of fheding fo much innocent blood, it would be better to decide their quarrel by fingle combat with fword and poignard, in their fhirts in fome island or in a boat. But the next day, the French ambaffador demanding whether he defigned to challenge the king his mafter, he replied, he had no fuch intention, but meant only, that the expedient he proposed feemed to him more reasonable than a war.

Some time after, the emperor being at Sienna, the cardinal of Lorrain waited on him, and in his audiences difcovered he had never intended to give the duchy of Milan to a prince of the royal family of France. He writ therefore to the king, that he was to expect war. And indeed, the emperor was now affembling all his forces, proposing to bring three armies into the field, one in Piedmont, which he intended to command in perfon, another in Picardy, and a third in Champagne. This defign was already fo publick, that Francis could not be ignorant of it. So, believing the empetroops out of meant to make his most powerful effort in Picardy, he recalled the greatest part of his army in Piedmont, having ordered ordered Turin and his other conquests in that country to be 1536. well fored with ammunition.

The French troops quitting Piedmont, the emperor cau- The emperor fed Turin to be invefted, and during the fiege headed his marches into army and marched towards Provence. Francis, who was Francis then at Lyons, speedily provided Marfeilles with neceffaries, forms two and ordered two camps to be fortified, one at Cavaillon, un- armies. der the command of the marshal de Montmorency, the other at Valence, where he came himfelf. There he received the fad news of the death of his fon the dauphin, poiloned by Montecuculli,

The emperor having entered Provence took Aix, and then Theemperor laid fiege to Marfeilles, which was begun the 25th of Au- befieges Marfeilles, gust and raised the 9th of. September. He had so ill taken and raises his measures, that not knowing how to subliss his army in the siege, Provence, he was forced to retire in the utmost diforder, not without danger of being defeated in his retreat, if Francis had thought proper to attack him. He came to Genoa and returns the 2d of October and embarked for Spain. This was the into Spain. fuccefs of the Provence expedition, which he had been long meditating, and by means of which he hoped to give a mortal wound to France.

Whilft the emperor was waging war in Provence, the Campaignin count of Naffau entered Picardy with an army of thirty Picardy. thousand men and took Guise by storm. After that, he befieged Peronne, which was relieved by the duke of Guile.

Francis returning to Paris with unspeakable satisfaction, Marriage of at having difappointed the emperor's defigns, met upon the the king of way James V. king of Scotland, who was come to demand with Maghis daughter Magdalen in marriage. He was not without dalen of great difficulty prevailed with to grant his requeft, becaufe France. the princefs being fickly, it was thought marriage would but Mezerai, fhorten her days. However, the king of Scotland expreffing a very earnest defire for the marriage, it was concluded in December, and the nuptials were celebrated the ift of January 1537. Let us return now to the affairs of England.

The northern rebellion was appealed, but in fuch a man- 1537. ner that the cause still subsisted, the malecontents having received no redrefs of their grievances, except only that the Henry king had promifed to call a parliament in the north, which word with he never intended to do. The pretence he used was, that the rebels. they left in the monafteries the monks they had reftored. Herbert. But this was a precarious excufe, if ever there was one, Burnet. fince

443

Provence.

THE HISTORY

fince it was not their bufinefs to turn them out, but the king's, who had the power in his own hands, whereas they had nothing more to fay after quitting their arms. The king knowing how the people of the north ftood affected, ordered the duke of Norfolk \times to remain there with his army to keep them in awe. So the duke was employed for fome time with caufing perfons of all conditions to fwear to be true to the king γ , a very improper remedy for fuch fort of evils, fince the fame compulsion which extorts oaths from a difcontented people, ferves also for pretence to break them upon occasion. In the mean time, Afke, who had commanded the rebels, was ordered to court, where he was well received; but the lord d'Arcy, who had not fo readily obeyed the like order, was fent to the Tower upon his arrival at London.

Shortly after, two gentlemen of the north, Nicolas Mufgrave and Thomas Tilby, put themfelves at the head of eight thousand malecontents, and appeared before Carlifle in order to take the city. But being repulsed, and thereupon fuddenly attacked by the duke of Norfolk, they were entirely routed. Mufgrave had the good fortune to escape, but Tilby and feventy four others taken with him were hanged on the walls of Carlifle. Sir Francis Bigod and one Halam with another body of rebels, attempted at the fame time to furprize Hull, but were made prifoners themselves, and executed.

These attempts rendered the king so fierce, that he put to death Aske and the lord d' Arcy, notwithstanding the general pardon to appeale the first infurrection. The lord d' Arcy accused the duke of Norfolk of favouring the rebels, which perhaps was too true. But the duke cleared himself, or rather the king thought not fit strictly to examine the accusation ^z. Mean while, as he knew, the emperor was contriving

. * And the earl of Shrewfbury. Herbert, p. 211.

bert, p. 211. y The contents of the oath they took, were, 1. To revoke all oaths and promifes made in the former infurrection, afking the king's forgivenels on their knees. 2. To be true to the king, his heirs, and fucceffors. 3. To obferve and maintain all acts of parliament, fince the first year of the king's reign. 4. Not to take arms again, but by the king's authority. 5. To apprehend all feditious perfons. 6. To remove all the monks and nuns they had reinplaced in the late diffolved monafteries. Herbert, p. 211.

z Afke had left the court without leave, and being taken again, was hanged in chains on a tower in York. The lord d'Arcy and the lord Huffy were arraigned at Weftminfter, before the marques of Exetcr, then high fleward, and found guilty of treafon. The lord Huffy was beheaded at Lincoln, the ord d'Arcy on Tower-hill, the zoth of Junc, and buried in St. Batolph's Hall. Stow. Burnet.

New infurrection punifhed. Hall. fol. 231. Stow. Hollingfh. Herbert.

Afke and the lord d'Arcy executed. Hall. Stow. Herbert. Hollingfh.

444 1537. contriving fome plot in Ireland, he gave order that Thomas 1537. Fitzgerald, fon of the late earl of Kildare, and five of his uncles, after a long imprisonment at London, should fuffer Six of the death for a terror to the Irifh. But the earl of Kildares Kildare out youngest fon had the good fortune to escape and fled for re- to death. fuge to cardinal Pole².

The king could not be perfuaded but that it was the fol. 226, 231. monks who most contributed to preferve and foment the Herbert. people's difcontents. He confidered them as the chief authors The king of the late infurrections, and confequently as his perfonal frives to fupprefs all enemies. He believed to fee in their behaviour, that if they the monafichad power, they would not spare him, and therefore he ries. projected their ruin to prevent their defigns. Herein he found Burnet. two confiderable advantages, the one to free himfelf from his enemies, and the other to enjoy their spoils. It is not to be doubted, this last confideration had also a share in his project of vengeance upon them. The suppression of the lesser monasteries having only whetted his appetite, he refolved to suppress all the reft and feize their immense possefions b. The more eafily to accomplifh his defign, he used He appoints the fame means, he had practifed to fuppress the leffer monal- a frict visitation.

tolph's church. He endeavoured to purge himfelf, that he was forced to a compliance with them; and pleaded, that the long fervices he had done the crown for fifty years, he being fourfcore, together with his great age and infirmity, might mitigate the king's displeasure. He died much lamented, every body thinking he had hard meafure. Sir Robert Constable was hanged at Hull ; fir John Bulmer, fir Tho-mas Percy, fir Stephen Hamilton, Nicolas Tempeft, and William Lumley, fuffered at Tyburn ; and Margaret Cheney, alias, lady Bulmer, was burned in Smithfield. Hall, fol. 232. Stow, P. 574. Burnet, tom. I. p. 234.

a Gerald Fitzgerald, the eighth earl of Kildare, was made deputy of Ireland, in 1515, and again in 1524. But a quarrel arifing between him and James Butler, carl of Offory, the earl of Kildare was charged with male administration, and ordered by king Henry to repair to London. At his depar-ture, he left his fon Thomas, deputy in his room; who, upon a falle report, that his father, (then a prifoner in the Tower) was beheaded, defied king Henry and his authority, proclaimed open war, and applied to the emperor for affiftance ; whereupon, he and five of his uncles were attainted, and upon the king's fending an army into Ireland, were taken, and brought over to London, and now beheaded on February 3. Gerald Fitzgerald, the earl of Kildare's youngeft fon was packed up in a bundle of clothes, and conveyed to Ireland, and fo to France, and from thence to the Low Countries; in both which places being required of our king, he at length fled to cardinal Pole, who finding him a fit inftrument for his purpose, kept him till he might be reftored to his country and place. Herbert, p. 212, 181.

b In the records of this year there are extant, the furrenders of three monafteries only; namely, of the abby of Furnele in Lincolnshire, on April 9. valued at nine hundred and fixty pounds a year. Of Bermondsey in Surrey, June I, valued at five hundred and forty eight pounds, and of Bushlisham, or Bifhtam, in Berkshire, July 5, valued at two hundred and thirty feven pounds.' Burnet, tom, I. p. 235. Collect, p. 143.

Hall.

Burnet.

445

teries

teries, that is, he appointed a very ftrict vifitation of those 1537. that remained, not questioning but the discoveries which should be made would promote his defign.

Birth of prince Edward. Hall. Herbert. Death of queen Jane.

:446

Edward Seymour made earl of Hertford. Hall.

The war continues between the Francis. Bellai. Truce for Picardy and Italy.

Death of the queen of Scotland. Buchanan.

James V. demands Mary of Guife in marriage. The 12th of October the queen was delivered of a prince; who was called Edward. But his birth coft his mother her life, who died two days after her delivery c. As the king had caufed his two daughters by his former marriages to be declared illegitimate, nothing could be more acceptable than the birth of a fon, who put the fucceffion of the crown out of all difpute. And therefore in a few days he conferred on him, as his heir apparent, the title of prince of Wales, duke of Cornwal, and earl of Chefter. At the fame time, he created Edward Seymour the queen's brother and the new born prince's uncle, earl of Hertford d.

Whilft thefe things paffed in England, the war ftill continued between the emperor and the king of France, but emperor and was interrupted in Picardy by a fix months truce concluded in July, which was followed by another in November, for Italy. As by the last truce, it was agreed that each should keep what he possessed, the duke of Savoy remained equally defpoiled by his enemies, and by those he had called to his affiftance; the common fate of petty princes !

> The queen of Scotland died in July, to the great joy of those who dreaded the progress of the reformation, because that princefs had been educated by her aunt the queen of Navarre. Buchanan fays, the cuftom of wearing mourning was first introduced into Scotland on occasion of her death, which cuftom, though of forty years standing, was however not yet established in his time. James V. removed the uneafinefs of those, who were afraid of his being biaffed by the deceased queen in favour of the new religion, by demanding

- c The queen was delivered at Hampton Court, and died the 24th of October, as appears in a journal written by Cecil, that was in twelve days after Edward's birth : fo it is in the Heiald's office. Strype Correct. to Burnet, tom. III. p. 406, 419. She died not by the truelty of the furgeons riping up her belly to make way for the prince's birth, as fome writers gave out, but as the original letters yet extant, fhow, fhe died, after being well delivered, of a diftemper incident to women in that condition. Burnet, tom, III, ibid, Queen Jane was buried in the choir at Windfor, whofe lofs fo much afflicted the king, he having always found her difereet. humble, and loyal, that notwithftand ing fome good offers, he continued a widower above two years. Heibert, P. 212.

d Sir William Fitzwilliams was made earl of Southampton, and in March following fir William Paulet, treasurer of the king's house, was created lord St. John, and fir John Ruf-fel, controler, lord Ruffel. Herbert, p. 212.

in marriage Mary of Guile fifter of the duke of Guile and the 1537. cardinal of Lorrain.

The affairs of religion daily grew more important in a Divisions in great part of Europe, by reafon of the progrefs of the refor- Germany a-mation. Those who had embraced it withed only to live Steidan. in quiet with liberty of confcience. But this was what the old religion would never allow them. The glory of God and zeal for the interefts of the church ferved for pretence to this refusal. But the real causes were, first, the pride of most men, who cannot bear to be told that their opinions are wrong. Secondly, the temporal intereft of the clergy, who, wherever the reformation was eftablished, faw themselves deprived of their rich benefices, the revenues of the church. being applied by the reformed to uses very different from those in which they had hitherto been employed. Thirdly, the pope's interefts, who daily loft his fubjects, his revenues, his credit, his authority. There was another particular caufe They are foin Germany, which inflamed the troubles occafioned by re- mented by ligion, and that was, the emperor and his brother the king the emperor. of the Romans had formed a defign to use the pretence of obliging the protestants to re-enter the pale of the church. For that reason, instead of healing, they fomented the divi- Grievances fions to the utnioft of their power. The protestants com- of the proplained, among other things, that a council was called at Mantua, contrary to an express promise that it should be in Germany. Befides, they meant not to fubmit to the decifions of a council, where the pope prefided, and which, as they perceived, would be far from being free. The emperor The empeamufed them with evafive anfwers, till all fhould be ready to anfwers. attack them. Mean while, the pope, having deferred the opening of the council from May to November, charged in that interval the cardinals Contarini, Sadoletti, Pole, Bembo, all perfons of great reputation, to examine wherein the church wanted reformation. These able divines found nothing The pope amifs as to the doctrines. They only drew up, as to difcipline, orders com-mifioners to a lift of fundry triffes, which, in their opinion, deferved to be examine the rectified. To these alone they thought the reformation ought flate of the to be confined.

Mean while, the emperor was very ferioufly thinking of The empethe affairs of Germany, though he took great care to con- ror's defigns, ceal his defigns from the protestants. In order to free himfelf from all other incumbrances, and attack them with advantage, he had concluded the truce with Francis, in hopes it would foon be followed by a peace. He perceived, the Smalcaldick league would be an everlafting obftacle to the execution testants.

.church and

execution of his vaft projects, by Francis's and Henry's endeavours to gain it to their interefts. So, his chief aim was) to diffolve that league; that he might afterwards proceed against England with all the forces of Spain; Italy, Germany, and the Low Countries e.

Henry eafily judged, Charles V. and Francis I. had agreed to a truce, only in order to conclude a peace very foon; which would rob him of the affiftance of France: So, finding he had no refuge but in his own forces in cafe of attack, he confidered early of means to prevent infurrections at home: which must have greatly embarrassed him, if he should be engaged in a foreign war. He knew, the monks hated him mortally. They were the perfons that infpired the English with a fpirit of rebellion, the more dangerous as religion was the principal caufe. So, to deprive the pope and the emperor of fuch a support in his own realm, he resolved to supprefs all the religious houfes still remaining in England. He had a farther motive, which was not inconfiderable, namely, to have a fund fufficient to maintain the war, without being forced to over burden his fubjects. But as the suppression of part of the monasteries had already occasioned troubles in the kingdom, it was likely, the fuppression of all would raise ftill greater. Wherefore he believed he fhould prevent all commotions by removing the people's veneration for the monks. To that end, the report of the last visitation being liftes the re- brought to him, he ordered it to be immediately published. Very probably, the facts inferted concerning the diforderly lives of the friars and nuns, were fet forth fo as to be fubfervient to the king's defigns f. But what conduced most to recover people out of their fuperstitious fondness for the religious houses, was the discovery of the frauds committed there with refpect to relicts and images. Had the bulinefs been only the debaucheries of the monks and nuns, it might have been objected, that it fufficed to make ftrict inquiry of those who were guilty, and to punish them severely. But

> c This year, the manner of caffing pipes of lead for conveyance of water under ground, was first isvented by Robert Brock, one of the king's chaplains; Robert Cooper, goldimith, making the inftruments, and putting the invention first in practice. Hollingsh.

> p. 944. f Of the confessions then made to the vifitors, there is only now one extant, which, probably, escaped the de struction of all papers of that kind in queen Mary's time. It is from the Benedictines of St. Andrews, in Northampton, wherein they acknowledge their paft ill life, for which the pit of hell was ready to fwallow them up. They confess, they had neglected the worship of God, lived in idleness, gluttony, sensuality; &c. Burnet, tom. I. p. 237.

for

Henry pubport of the last vifitation. Burnet. Several pious frauds are difco-Herbert. P. 213. Burnet.

Final refolution to fuppreis all the monafteries. Herbert. Burnet.

for the pious frauds (as they are called,) it could hardly be 1538. thought but that the whole fociety was concerned. For this reason therefore, the king, to make them as visible as the fun, took care publickly to expose the counterfeit relicks found in the monasteries, and the springs by which the images of our Saviour, the virgin Mary, or any of the faints were made to move, which was looked upon by the ignorant multitude as the effect of a divine power. If the reader defires to fee a particular account of these pious impostures, he will find it, though withal very fhort, in the hiftory of the reformation of England. These frauds being thus detect- Hall. ed, whatever had ferved to engage the people in fuperfition, Stow. was by the king's order burnt in publick ^g. But what grieved the votaries most was, to see the bones of Thomas Becket, Becket's commonly called St. Thomas of Canterbury, publickly bones burnt, burnt. They accused the king of acting from a motive firine of a facrilegious avarice, in order to have a pretence to feized; feize the rich shrine of that faint, whereon, besides other Stow. precious stones, was a very fine diamond offered in 1179 Herbert, g And here, fays lord Herbert, out of our records I shall mention some of the images and relicks to which the pilgrimages of thefe times brought devotion and offerings ; as our lady's girdle showed in eleven places, and her milk in eight. The felt of St. Thomas of Lancaster, a remedy for the headach; the penknife and boots of St. Thomas of Canterbury, and a piece of his fhirt, much reverenced by great bellied women ; the coals that roaffed St. Laurence; two or three heads of St. Urfula; Malchus's ear; and the paring of St: Edmund's nails; the Image of an angel with one wing, which brought hither the fpear's head that pierced Chrift's fide; an image of our lady; with a taper in her hand, which burnt nine years together without wafting, till one forfwearing himfelf thereon, it went out, and was now found to be but a piece of wood. The crucifix of Boxley in Kent, commonly called the rood of grace, was a famous imposture, to which many pilgrimages were made, being contrived fo as to be able, by the help of fprings, to roll the eyes, and move the lips, to bow, to fhake the head, hands and feet. It was shewed publickly at Paul's crois, by John, biftop of Rochefter, and after a fermon upon it, there . VOL. VI.

great imposture was at Hales, in Gloucestershire, where the blood of Christ, brought from Jerufalem, was showed in a christal vial, and was faid to have this property, that if a man was in a mortal fin, and not abfolved, he could not fee it. Therefore every man that came to behold this miracle, was forced to continue to make prefents, till he bribed heaven to give him the fight of fo bleffed a relict. This was now difcovered to be the blood of a duck; renewed every week, and the one fide of the vial was fo thick, that there was no feeing through it, but the other was transparent. It was fo placed near the altar, that one in a fecret place behind could turn which fide he pleafed outward. There was brought out of Wales a huge image of wood, called Darvel Gatheren, which ferved for fuel to burn one friar Forreft, who advifed people in confession not to believe the king's fupremacy. Befides which, the images of our lady of Walfingham, cf Ipfwich, of Penrife, of Islington, and St. John of Ofulfton, called otherwife mr. John Shorne, who was faid to fhut up the devil in a boot, and many others, were publick'y burnt. Herbert, p. 213. Compl. Hift. Stow, p. 575.

broken in pieces, Feb. 24. Another

by.

Bitter invectives againft the Rome. Burnet.

12.00

1450

1538.

He is very angry with cardinal Pole,

. . . .

01 52

Paul III. publishes a bull againft the king. Herbert. Burnet. A violent book of Pole's.

. .

by Henry I. king of France, when he came in pilgrimage to Canterbury h. This proceeding to exafperated the adherents of the old religion, that they writ in a most virulent manner to Rome against the king, comparing him to the greatest tyrants that ever lived. Whereupon, at Rome and other places, numberless fatyrs were penned, which painted king fent to Henry as the most execrable of men to those who were not ufed to the hyperbolical expressions of the Italians. The king had his fpies at Rome, who acquainting him with what was published against him, told him withal that to cardinal Pole the informations fent from England were generally addreffed, and that his stile was visible in some of the fatyrs. This fo highly incenfed the king against the cardinal, that he made all his family and friends feel the effects, infomuch that he would fooner have pardoned any crime than a correspondence with him. It is ftrange that the cardinal, who feemed otherwife very prudent and moderate, fhould fo give way to his zeal or his paffion against the king, that he feared not, by fo unadvised a behaviour, to expose his friends to Henry's utmost refentment. His obstinacy in this respect was to great, that at length he was the occasion of his mother's lofing her head on the fcaffold, as will be feen hereafter.

All the king's proceedings convincing the pope that he was to expect no change in him, he published at length the bull of excommunication i, drawn and figned in 1535. Moreover, he tried to excite all the princes of Chriftendom against Henry, and offered the kingdom of England to the king of Scotland. Nay, Pole maintained in a book, published shortly after, that it was more meritorious to fight against Henry, than against the Turk. But the pope's thunders had fo loft their force in England, that the bull caufed

h For three hundred years he was accounted one of the greateft faints in heaven, as appears from the accounts of the leger books of the offerings to three of the greatest altars in Christ's church in Canterbury. In one year there was offered at Christ's altar, 31. 2 s. 6 d. At the virgin's altar, 631. 5s. 6d. But at St. Thomas's, 832 l. 12 s. 3 d. The next year the odds grew greater : at Chrift's altar not a penny; at the virgin's only 41. 15. 8d; but at St. Thomas's, 9541. 6s. 3d. The rich fione was offered by Lewis VII, of France, which our king fet in a ring and wore on his thumb. The spoil of the fhrine in gold and precious frones filled two chefts, which were fo heavy, that they were a load to eight ftrong men to carry them out of the church. His name was ftruck out of the Kalendar : the day of raifing his body, or as they called it, his translation, being the 7th of July, which was not only a holiday, but every 50th year there was a jubilee for fifteen days together, and indulgence granted to all that vifited his thrine. Burnet, tom. I. p. 244. Stow, p. 576.

i On Decemb. 17. Herbert, p. 216. Burnet, tom, I. p. 245,-248.

no commotion, or if it produced any effect, it was quite contrary to what the pope expected. Henry being more provoked with him, took fo good precautions to hinder him from executing his defigns, that he thereby advanced the reformation much more than he intended. As foon as he had heard of the bulls being published, he required the bishops and abbots to fwear again to renounce the papal authority. At the fame time, the new translation of the bi- Henry orble being prefented to him, he ordered fifteen hundred co-ders the new version of pies to be printed, and fet up in the principal churches, being the bible to fatisfied that nothing would be found there to support the be printed, exorbitant power affumed by the pope over all Chriften-Burnet. dom^k.

Shortly after, an injunction was published by the vice- The viceges gerent, to teach the people the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, rent's inand the Ten Commandments in English. Moreover, all junctions incumbents were ordered to inftruct the people by declaring, images. they must not trust in other men's works, but in their own; Burnet, and that relicks heads and the like, were unnecessary to T. I. p. 2494 and that relicks, beads, and the like, were unneceffary to Strype. falvation. They were also to take down all images, to which offerings were wont to be made, and to fuffer no candles to be fet up before any image, except our faviour's. In fine, they were to suppress all the Ora pro Nobis's which were added to the prayers addreffed to the faints 1.

This injunction was deemed a mortal wound to the old Submiffion religion, whole adherents were in the utmost consternation. of the Eng-But no man dared to ftir, fo abfolute a fway had the king king's will. acquired over his subjects. Nay, the most discontented af- Burnet, fected a blind fubmission to his will, knowing the least fufpicion would ruin them.

k Grafton the printer, printed fifteen hundred at his own charge, which amounted to five hundred pounds. This bible was prefented to the king by Cromwell, who procured the king's warrant, allowing all to read it without controul. For which Cranmer wrote Cromwell a letter of thanks, dated the 13th of August. The tranflation had been fent over to be printed at Paris; the workmen in England not being judged able to do it as it ought to be. It was recommended to Bonner's care, then ambafiador at Paris; and much in Cromwell's favour. It leaft. See Burnet, tom was printed in a large volume; but p. 180. Stow, p. 576. upon complaint of the French clergy, the prefs was floped, and most of the. copies feized and burnt : but fome were conveyed out of the way, and the workmen and forms brought over to England, where it was now finished. And one of these bibles were to be fet up in every church, at the joint charge of the incumbent, and the parishioners. Burnet; tom. I. p. 249. Strype's Mem. tom. I. p. 308.

1 Every incumbent was likewife enjoined to keep a register of weddings, chriftenings, and burials. And to preach one fermon every quarter of a year at leaft: See Burnet, tom. I. Collect,

Ff2

Gardiner

Stow. Strype.

Oardiner puts the king upon profecuting the reformed. Burnet.

Gardiner bifhop of Winchefter was now returned from his embaffy to France. He was one of the zealous adherents of the old religion. Nay, he was fuspected of being privately reconciled to the pope, and of holding correfpondence with the emperor. But he fo artfully diffembled his fentiments, that he perfuaded the king, it was only the devices of his enemies, on purpole to ruin him. It is however certain, though the king feemed fatisfied, he had not great effeem for him, and yet fuffered him to be near him on account of his extreme fubmiffion. His blind condefcenfion to the king's will afforded him many opportunities to ferve the party he privately favoured. The king confidering him not as a fulpected perfon, fince he fo readily complied with his orders, freely liftened to him when he fpoke against the Sacramentarians, being still extremely preposefed in favour of the doctrine of the real prefence of Chrift's body in the facrament. Then Gardiner could explain his fentiments without fear, becaufe they agreed with the king's. He infinuated to him, that fo long as he left that doctrine untouched, he would never be accufed of changing his religion, but would rather be extolled for having purged it in preferving the effentials. Thus Gardiner engaged him to perfecute the Sacramentarians, not fo much from a religious as from a political motive. He knew the king's temper to be impatient of contradiction. And therefore, by engaging him to maintain a doctrine which those of the new religion could not admit, he hoped their refistance would provoke him against them, and thereby he would be more easily led to be reconciled to the pope. That is to fay properly, he employed, to alienate the king from the protestants, the fame means they used to prejudice him against their adverfaries. But neither could fucceed. Henry reformed himself but by halves, and was never reconciled to the court of Rome. As he was grown abfolute, he would never fuffer his fubjects to go farther than himfelf, but compelled them. to ftop where he was pleafed to ftop, equally fevere, or rather unmerciful, to those who refused to follow him, and to those who would go beyond him. He showed this year an inftance of rigour capable of making the reformers defpair of any farther progrefs.

One John Nicolion, alias Lambert, being informed againft as a Sacramentarian ^m, the king convened a great affembly

in

m Lambert had been minister to the being acquainted with Tindal, and English merchants at Antwerp, where Frith, he became of their opinion. He afterwards in Westminster-hall, where he was pleased himself to difpute publickly with the party accused. The match was by no means equal. Lambert flood alone without a fecond; Henry dif-but the king was furrounded with a crowd of perfons, who lickly with applauded his arguments, and deemed them invincible; Lambert. whereas none dared to approve of what Lambert afferted. Hall. The difpute ended with the king's putting it to the choice For. of the unfortunate Lambert, either to abjure his opinion, Stow,. or be burnt. But whatever advantage the king feemed to have, he may be faid to be vanguished, fince he was forced to fly to fo rigorous a method to convince his adverfary, after flattering himfelf to perfuade him by dint of reafon; otherwife, probably, he would not have engaged in the difpute. However, he succeeded not by this extraordinary way, fince Lambert chose rather to die than abjure the opinion he still believed ". Henry had no occasion to be flattered. He He is highly had but too good a conceit of himfelf. Neverthelefs, flattered. Burnet, Gardiner and the reft of his party took occasion from the dispute to extol him above the most learned divines of the age. They infpired him with fuch an opinion of his learning, that he thought his notions ought to be a ftandard to all. But contrary to the expectations of his flatterers, this conceit of himfelf was no lefs fatal to them than to the other party, fince he refolved to punish feverely and indifferently all who dared to fwerve from what he himfelf deemed reasonable.

452

OF ENGLAND.

About this time the emperor concluded with France a ten Negotiations years truce, of which I shall speak presently. Henry, not with the German afterwards kept fchool at London, and hearing doctor Taylor preach of the real prefence, he came to him upon it, and gave him his reafons in writing, why he could not believe the doctrine he preached. Taylor carried thefe arguments to Cranmer, who was at that time of Luther's opinion, which he had imbibed from his friend Ofiander. Latimer was of the fame belief. Lambert being brought before them, they studied to make him retract his argument, but all was in vain, for Lambert fatally appealed to the king. Whereupon Gardiner perfuaded the king, to proceed folemnly and feverely in it. The king was foon prevailed with. So letters were written to many of the nobility and bifhops to come and hear this trial. In November, on the day prefixed, there was a great appear- Herbert. ance in the hall. The king's guards were all in white, and fo was the cloth of state. Burnet, tom. I. p. 252.

n Lambert disputed with ten one after another, particularly the king, Cranmer, Tunstal, and Stokefly, Cromwell read his fentence, declaring him an incorrigible heretick, and condemn ing him to be burnt. Which was foon after executed in Smithfield, in a barbarous manner ; for when his legs and thighs were burnt to the flumps, there not being fire enough to confume the reft, two of the officers, raising his body up with their halberds, let him fall into the fire, where he was quickly confumed to ashes. Burnet, tom. I. p. 254.

Ff3

doubting

1538.

protestants.

THE HISTORY.

doubting, it was in order to invade him, confidered of means 1538. to raife the emperor troubles, which should divert him from his purpofe. The Smalcaldick league furnished him with a good opportunity. But the prefervation of the Augfburg confession being the fole foundation of that league, he did not fee that he could poffibly join in it, to support a religion, all whofe articles were not approved by him. So his defign was, either to bring the protestants to conclude with him a general league, which should not be limited to the defence of their religion, or prevail with them to be fatisfied with the reformation he had himfelf introduced into England. To that end he fent ambaffadors ° with instructions to fee who were the confederates, and in cafe the league was confined to religion only, to defire them to fend fonie of their ablest divines to try, whether a common reli-T.I. P. 328. gion night not be agreed upon. The protestants replied, their league confifted of twenty fix imperial cities, and twenty four princes, among whom the king of Denmark was lately admitted: that at prefent they could not be without their divines, but defired him to declare himfelf politively upon. he proposition made, him, of embracing the Augsburg confeffion. Some time after, they fent ambalfadors capable of difputing upon the points of religion. But this embaffy was fruitless. Henry found in the Germans men of a very different ftamp from his own fubjects, and little inclined to. compliance. They would not allow him communion in one kind, private masses, auricular confession, celibacy of priefts, and gave him their reasons in writing; to which he replied, though to very little purpofe. As he could not put the fame choice to them as he had done to Lambert, he was forced to difmifs them without any conclusion, being as little fatisfied with them as they were with him.

The intereft of the reformers declines at court. Burnet.

Characters

Mean while, the interest of the reformers began visibly to decline at court fince the queen's death. There were only Cromwell and Cranmer that supported it by their credit and merit. Cromwell however was accufed of being too felf-interefted, and of thinking much more of his own than of the concerns of religion. As to the reft of the lower of the heads rank, there were few of eminent note. Shaxton bishop of of the party. Sarum was proud and litigious : Latimer bifhop of Worcefter was despifed for his weakness and simplicity; Barlow, who had been prior of Bifnam, and afterwards bifnop of St. Afaph, 9 Christopher Mount, and Thomas Paynel, in March. Herbert, p. 212, 217. Strype, p. 328.

p. 212, 213. Strype's Mem.

Herbert.

454

had

had no great judgment. In general, the preachers of the new religion fuffered themselves to be carried away with an L indifcreet zeal, and without confidering the king's temper, followed the motions of their confcience, let what would be the confequence. So, never troubling themfelves about the . effects of their zeal, they publickly preached doctrines, not yet approved by the king, which very much conduced to prejudice him against them, and all others who defired to advance the reformation.

In the mean time, Edward Fox bishop of Hereford de- Bonnermade parting this life, the reformers thought to do a good act in bifnop of procuring Edmund Bonner that fee, who had been ambaf- and then of fador in Spain, and afterwards in France, from whence he London. was lately recalled at the infrance of Francis I. who was Burnet, not pleafed with him. Shortly after, they caufed him tobe promoted to the lee of London, vacant by the death of Stokefly P. But they were greatly miftaken in their choice, fince this prelate, who was to much obliged to them, became afterwards one of their most mortal enemies.

At length, Cromwell and Cranmer feeing their party de- Cranmer and cay, and that the king began to liften to the enemies of the Cromwell reformation, in fuch a manner as made them dread the project to marry the confequences, deemed it neceffary to fupport their party by king with a means of a queen, who should afford them protection q. protestant. Herbert. They had happily experienced, how much Anne Bullen; and Jane Seymour had helped to foften the king's temper towards the reformed, and they did not question, that in' . . . 3 cafe they could give him a wife of the like disposition, the. would produce the fame effect. For this reason, they turn- They caft ed their eyes towards Germany, and Cromwell undertook their eyes, and to negotiate a marriage between the king and Anne of upon Anne Cleve, fifter to the duke of Cleve and the duchefs of Saxony. We shall see the next year the success of the negotiation, after a brief mention of the foreign affairs.

The emperor's and the king of France's forces were too. The truce equal, for either to expect any great advantages from a war between the they were left to wage all alone. Francis had ill taken his Francis is measures, in imagining that Henry would declare for him, prolonged. that the potentates of Italy would endeavour to fhake off Bellai. the emperor's yoke, and that the protestants of Germany Mezerai.

p He was elected bishop, October 20. Stow, p. 576.

q The emperor had fome time before proposed a marriage between king : Henry, and Christiana, duchels of Milan, fecond daughter of Christiern, king of Denmark ; but the propofal did not take effect. See Herbert, p. 214. Hall, fol. 233.

1538.

455:

Ff4

would

Both inelined to peace.

456

1538.

The pope and emperor.

Harbert,

Truce for ten years.

League againit the Turks.

Francis I. Herbert.

would embrace the opportunity of the war, to establish the liberty of confcience to which they aspired, and of which they were threatened to be deprived. But nothing of all this happening, he faw himfelf charged alone with almost an infupportable burden. On the other hand, the emperor was afraid Francis would at length unite all these powers against him, and the emperor of the Turks improve fo favourable a juncture to invade Germany. The pope allo feared the fame thing, and that the coafts of Italy would be infefted by the infidels. This, added to the defire of being revenged of the king of England, put him upon feeking means to procure a peace between the emperor and the king of France, that Henry being left alone, might be more eafily invaded. To this end he proposed to the two hostile monarchs a meeting at Nice, where he offered to come and act as mediator. The propofal being accepted, they all three met at that place about the middle of June, the pope conferring fometimes with the one, fometimes with the other, without the two monarchs ever feeing each other during the whole negotiation. The pope had his reasons for hindering them from conferring together, but by his means. He had a mind to treat privately of a marriage betweeen Octavian Farnese his nephew, and Margaret the emperor's natural daughter, widow of Alexander de Medici, and indeed the project fucceeded to his wifh.

Mean while, as the peace between the emperor and the king of France could not be effected, by reafon of the many difficulties which occurred, the pope obtained of the two monarchs at last their confent to a ten year's truce, which was almost as effectual as a peace. The truce being concluded, Paul III. immediately thought of means to form a league against the Turks. But as feveral reasons hindered the kings of France and England from coming into it, he was forced to conclude it with the emperor, the king of the Romans. and the Venetians.

When Francis had nothing more to fear from the empeflights Hen- ror, he grew very cool to Henry, though he had extremely careffed him fo long as he ftood in need of him. Henry was exceedingly incenfed, and fhowed his refentment, by ordering Bonner, in his return from Spain, to ftop at the French court, and demand an English rebel, who was retired into France, and the arrears of his penfion, there being now four years due. Bonner, who was naturally very bold, delivered his meffage fo haughtily, that Francis, offended at his infolence, fent an express to Henry to know whether he

he had ordered his ambaffador to use such language, and to defire Bonner might be recalled. Henry thought fit to comply with his demand. But it appeared he was not very Bonner be-angry with Bonner, fince at his arrival he promoted him, lently to the as has been faid, to the fee of Hereford, and fhortly after, king of to that of London.

Whilft Henry used all poffible precautions to fecure him- who has him recalled, felf from the attacks of his enemies, cardinal Pole was Cardinal labouring with all his power, by means of his correspon- Pole labours dents in England, to alienate from him the hearts of his to raife the fubjects, by publishing every where that he had subverted bles. all religion to fet up his own fictions. This acculation was Herbert. the most fensible wound that could be given the king, fince he pretended, religion confifted not in the things he had changed, but in those he had retained. This is what he frove to demonstrate to the people, because he plainly perceived, the general accufation of having fubverted religion could not but greatly poifon their allegiance. Accordingly, Pole and his emiffaries chiefly infifted upon this, in order to raife diffurbances in the kingdom. Several have thought, The cardithe cardinal had fome private views which concerned not nal's private religion. He was of the houfe of York by his mother, and Burnet. is faid also to have an inclination for the princess Mary, and T. I. p. 221. to beftir himfelf thus, in order to marry, and fet her on the throne in the room of her father. At leaft, there is reafon to fuspect, his extraordinary zeal was fortified by fome hidden views, and that in acting for the pope, he was labouring his own advancement. But this is only conjecture. However, Sir Jeffrey Pole, near relation of the cardinal r, Several of privately acquainted the king that he held correspondence his correspondents in with Henry Courtney Marquis of Exeter, grandson of Ed- England are ward IV. ": with Henry Pole "lord Montague: with fir executed. Edward Nevil " and with fir Nicholas Carew, mafter of the Hall. Stow, horfe, and knight of the garter: and that his inftruments Herbert. were a priest and a mariner. Upon this information, these perfons were apprehended, condemned and executed ", but the informer was pardoned, as a reward for his intelligence. No other circumstances of their 'trial are known but their corresponding with Pole, an unpardonable crime, as the king then flood affected to that cardinal.

'r The cardinal's own brother.

s By the princess Catherine, married to the earl of Devonshire.

't Another of the cardinal's brothers. Brother to the loid Abergavenny.

w The marquis of Exeter, and lord, Montague were arraigned on December 31, and Sir Edward Nevil, January 2. Thomas lord Audley, fitting as high fteward, ' Hall, fol. 233.

During

457 1538.

France,

During the course of this year, Henry established several ffragan bishops. He required also of all the religious a ew oath, whereby they expressly renounced the papal authority, and acknowledged the king's fupremacy. There XIV.p.577, were fome that refused to fwear, but I know not in what. manner their obstinacy was punished.

The pope and the emperor being then employed in their The council preparations against the Turk, his holinels made use of that pretence to put off the meeting of the council to the 1st of May 1540, and at the fame time removed it from Mantua to Vicenza.

> The marriage between the king of Scotland and Mary of Lorrain being concluded this year, the new queen came to. Scotland about the middle of June.

The laft vifitation of the monasteries tended only, as has been observed, to seek apparent reasons to suppress them. Surenders of The king had now refolved it, and the enormities, true or the monafte- falle, of the monks, were only a cover for his revenge and perhaps for his avarice *. The vifitation being over, he fent into the feveral counties commissioners to receive the furren-ders, the abbots and priors were to make to their houses y. There are extant in the collection of the publick acts, many, of these furrenders, which, though very involuntary, contained however the feigned reasons which had moved the monks and their fuperiors to refign of their own accord all p. 603, &c. their lands to the king. In fome, they were made to fay only, they were induced thereto by just and reasonable cau-> fes. But in others of greater length they were made to alledge, " That what they had hitherto observed, confisted " only in dumb ceremonies, and conftitutions of the bifhops " of Rome and other foreign potentates; who had taken no " care of their inftruction, or to reform the many abuses-" which had hitherto prevailed in their houses; but that de-" firing to live for the future according to the rule prefcribed " by Chrift, the evangelifts, and the apoftles, they deemed x Though great faults were difcovered by the vifitors, yet it is certain, that they were themfelves guilty of great acts of violence and injuffice. They embezzled most part of the plate and furniture that was found in the monafleries. Doctor London, one of the vifitors, corrupted feveral of the nuns belonging to Chepftow; and generally it was cried out, that underhand and ill practices were ufed. Therefore to quiet these reports, and to give fome colour to what was done, all the foul stories that could be invented, were published to defame the visited monasteries. Burnet, T. I. p. 241.

y During the year 1538, there were twenty one monasteries Juppressed, and in 1539, a hundred and one. See the names of them in Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 590, &c. and Burnet, T. I. Collect. p. 144, 145.

Sleidan: The new

bishops.

år.

AA. Pub.

554, Sec.

is removed to Vicenza.

queen arrives in Scotland. 1539.

Lon rics to the king. Burnet.

Supposed motives thereof. Act. Pub. tom. XIV.

Ib. p. 610, &c. Burnet. T. I. Coll. P. 150.

" it expedient for them to be governed by the king, their 1539. " fupreme head on earth : that therefore they fubmitted -" themfelves to his mercy, and furrendered to him their " houses, with all things belonging thereto : that they be-" fought him to grant to each of them a penfion for their " fublistence, and an express licence to take a fecular habit, " and be admitted into livings like other ecclefiafticks." Others faid, " They had. confidered that chriftianity con-" fifted not in the practice of ceremonies, in wearing black, " grey, or white habits, and in nodding with the head, " wearing cords, with great knots about their middle, and " the like, wherein they had been inftructed and feduced. . " But that the true way of ferving God was taught in the " gospel. And therefore, defiring for the future to walk by " that good rule, they fubmitted themfelves to the fupreme " head of the church of England, and renouncing all fu-" perfitions and foreign traditions, they refigned their houfes " to the king, with all things thereunto belonging." Others furrendered their houles by way of agreement between them and the king, for the caufes specified in the deed itself z. But there are not in the collection of the publick acts, any deeds of this kind at full length, where any of these causes may be feen. It can only be gathered from what fome au-Burnet. thors fay, that these causes were, either the houses were T. I. p. 236. overwhelmed with debts, or the revenues had been ill managed ², or there had been committed crimes deferving a fevere punifhment, from which they were exempted on account of the furrender. Be this as it will, the king having refolved at any rate to suppress all the monasteries, the opposition of the abbots, priors and monks would have been ineffectual. Accordingly, perceiving plainly, that by fair means or force they fhould be compelled to fubmit to his will, the greateft part thought it most prudent to do it with a good grace, and make the beft bargain they could for themfelves. The abbot or prior, with the chief monks of each houfe, being gained beforehand either by promifes or threats, the

z The general form in which most of the furrenders begin, is, " That " the abbot and brethren, upon full " deliberation, certain knowledge, of " their own proper motion, for cer-" tain just and reasonable causes, ef-" pecially moving them in their fouls " and confciences, did freely, and of " their own accord, give and grant a The vifitors found fuch depredations committed in the rich abbey of , St. Albans, that an abbot could not fubfift any longer, the rents being fo . low. Burnet, T. I. p. 236, &c.

" their houses to the king." See Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 604. Burnet, tom. I. p. 238.

reft

459

reft had hardly courage enough to make a fruitless refift-1539. Jance b.

The first suppression of the lesser monasteries was done by act of parliament. But the king was pleafed this fhould appear to be entirely voluntary, as if the abbots, priors and monks had been induced of themfelves to furrender their houses. A thing however so notoriously falle, that not a man could be ignorant how forced these furrenders were. It must be confessed, that herein Henry strangely abused the absolute power he had acquired over his subjects, of whom not one dared publickly to find fault with his conduct, and ftill lefs, openly to oppose his will. However he used artifice to make the suppression of the monasteries to be received with lefs concern. Whilft the commiffioners were receiving artifice to get the furrenders, he called a parliament for the 28th of April. At the fame time, he caufed a report to be fpread that the kingdom was going to be invaded . He confirmed the report by going in perfon to vifit the coafts, by commanding forts and redoubts to be built in feveral places d, and by giving preffing orders to fit out a fleet, and keep the troops in a readiness to march upon the first notice. The intent of all these proceedings was, to let the people see that the parliament would be obliged to lay heavy taxes to refift the pretended invation, but that the king acquiring a large revenue by the suppression of the monasteries, would have no occa-Revenues of fron for a fublidy. The yearly value of the religious houses the suppression amounted to one hundred fixty one thousand one hundred ed monaste-

The king's the suppres-Lons re. ceived. Hall. fal. 234,235 Stow. Hollingfh. Burnet. Herbert.

rics, pounds sterling, according to the rate they had been last farmed at °. But it must be observed, the abbots and priors forefeeing b Befides promifes and threats, the king had another way of gaining the abbots to his will. Upon a vacancy, an abbot was put in only to refign up the houfe. For after the king's fupremacy was eftablished, the abbots formerly confirmed by the pope, were placed in this manner. The king granted a congé d' elire to the prior and convent, with a miffive letter, declaring the name of the perfon whom they should chuse; then they returned an election to the king, who, upon that, gave his affent to it by a warrant under the great feal, which was certified to the vicegerent; who thereupon confirmed the election, and returned him back to the king to take the oaths; upon which the temporalities were refored. Thus all the abbots were now placed by the king, and were generally pickt out to ferve this turn. Burnet, tom. I. p. 236.

c By feveral princes, who were ftirred up by the pope and cardinal Pole. Stow, p. 576.

d Many of which we have at this day. He built particularly Dover-pier. Strype's Mem. tom. I. p. 306. Herbert, p. 217. e They were given in at one hundred and fifty two thouland five hundred and seventeen pounds, eighteen shillings and ten pence. Stevens's Hist. of taxes, p. 215. The number of monasteries suppressed first and last in England and Wales, according to Camden, were fix hundred forty three, together forefeeing the impending ftorm, had fet the yearly rents very 1539. low, and raifed the fines very high, that they might have wherewithal to subfift when they should be turned out of Speed. their houfes f. The king pretended not to mind it, being Burnet. on the contrary very glad, the people were not acquainted Herbert. with the whole profit which accrued to him from these fup- P. 213. preffions.' Befides the rents of the lands belonging to the monasteries, the king had moreover a very confiderable fum arifing from the church ornaments, plate, goods, lead, bells, materials, which he thought not proper to have valued, but it may be judged of by this fingle article, namely, that in the abbey of St. Edmundsbury alone there was found five thousand marks of gold and filver in bullion g.

460

The ruin of the monks was a great occasion of joy and Henry thews triumph to those who had already embraced the reformation, he intends or who wished it could be embraced without danger. But religion." they had not caufe long to rejoice. Henry refolving to fhow, Burnet. that in abolishing the papal authority, and destroying the Herbert. monasteries, he had not changed his religion, gave very foon an unquestionable proof of it. The pailiament meeting the The parlia-28th of April, immmediately made, by the direction of the ment. court, a law, entitled, " An act for abolifhing diversity of Hall. " opinions in certain articles concerning chriftian religion." This is the law that is more commonly known by the name The bloody of the bloody statute. The penalty of burning or hanging statute. was enacted against those,

I. Who by word or writing denied transubstantiation.

II. Who maintained that communion in both kinds was neceffary.

gether with ninety colleges, two thoufand three hundred and feventy four chantries, and free chapels, and one hundred and ten hospitals. Herbert, p. 218.

f This had been the practice all along, as well as just before the diffolution of the abbies. The abbots were wont to hold the leafes low, and raife great fines; by that means they were not obliged to entertain a greater number in their houfe, and fo enriched themselves and their brethren by the faid fines. This turned greatly to the king's advantage. Burnet, g As this was the last parliament the abbots were fummoned to, it will not be amifs to infert the names and number of the mitred or parliamentary abbots, who in the journals of parliament in this reign had their writs, being twenty eight; Abington, St. Albans, St. Auftin's Canterbury, Battel, St. Bennet's in the Holm, Berdeney, Cirencefter, Colchefter, Coventry, Croyland, St. Edmundsbury, Evesham, Glasfenbury, Gloucester, Hide, Malmsbury, St. Mary's in York, Peterborough, Ramfey, Reading, Selby, Shrewfbury, Taveftock, Tewkfbury, Thorney, Wal-tham, Weftminfter, Winchelcomb ; to whom the prior of St. John may be added, Burnet, tore, I. p. 268.

III. Or

461

462

III. Or that it was lawful for priefts to marry.IV. Or that vows of chaftity may be broken.V. Or that private maffes are unprofitable.VI. Or laftly, That auricular confection is not necessary.

to falvation h.

The laws concerning religion ferve to increafe the king's authority.

Gardiner author of the fix articles. By this and fome former laws, which fettled what was to be believed in matter of religion, all the fubjects were almoft equally liable to the pains enacted therein. Indeed, this laft law with those that were made before against the pope's authority, contained the king's belies, but not the nation's. There was hardly a perfon in the kingdom but what believed either more or lefs, and yet no one dared openly to fwerve from it either to the right or left. The reformed however were the greateft fufferers by it, and indeed it was levelled against them. Gardiner bifhop of Winchesser was the real author of it. He had intimated to the king, that it was the only means to hinder a league from being formed against him. That what he had abolished not being effential to religion, nor confidered as such by the generality of chri-

h There was first a committee appointed for examining the different opinions, and drawing up articles for an agreement, confifting of Cromwell, the two archbishops, the bishops of Dur-ham, Bath and Wells, Ely, Bangor, Carlifle and Worcefter, But having fpent eleven days in debates, the duke of Norfolk on the fixteenth of May told the lords, that the committee had made no progrefs, not being of one mind. Therefore he offered fome articles to their confideration, that they might be examined by the whole houfe, and a perpetual law made for the obfervation of them. Thefe were the fix articles above. Cranmer argued against them three days together, though his arguments are loft, there being nothing 'remaining of what paffed in the houfe, out what is conveyed to us in the journal, which is fhort and defective. On the twenty fourth of May, the parliament, for what reafon is not known, was prorogued to the thirtieth. When being met, the chancellor moved in the king's name, that a bill might be brought in for punishing fuch as offended against these articles. Whereupon a bill drawn up by the archbishop of York, was after long contest brought to the house the feventh of June; it was read a fecond time on the ninth, and on the tenth it was engroffed, and read the third time. When it paffed, the king defired Cranmer to go out of the houfe, fince he could not give his confent to it; but he humbly excused himself, for he thought he was bound in confcience to ftay and vote against it. On the twenty eighth, after passing in the house of commons, it had the royal affent. Befides the fix articles, " All the mar-" riages of pricits arc declared void, " and if a prieft lived with a woman " as his wife, he was to be judged a " felon ; and if as his concubine, upon " the first conviction to forfeit all his " benefices, &c. and upon fecond con-" viction to fuffer as a fclon. The " women fo offending were to be " punished in the fame manner. For " the execution of this act, commif-" fions were to be iffued out to all " archbishops, bishops, their chancel-" lors and commiffaries, and fuch o-" thers as the king shall name, to " hold their fessions quarterly or oft-" ner, and to proceed upon prefent-" ments by a jury." Burnet, tom. I. p. 257, &cc.

flians,

ftians, no man of found judgment could deem him heretical, fo long as he maintained thefe fix articles, which entirely u diftinguished true catholicks from sectaries and innovators. This was really taking the king by his weak fide. But, befides this motive, the king had another which was no lefs powerful, namely, by adding this law to those already made against the pope, he rendered his subjects so dependent upon him, that there was fcarce a man but what was obnoxious to be called to an account. So the pope's friends and the reformed were equally in his power. Confequently they were equally concerned not to difplease him in any thing, but rather blindly to fubmit to his will. Cranmer alone ventured pub- Cranmer lickly and for three days together, to argue against the bill argues abefore it passed. But as foon as it had received the feal of the gainft them publick authority, he fent away his wife into Germany till better times 1.

By another act the parliament granted to the king the The parlialands of the religious houses, which were supposed to have ment grants been freely furrendered to him. So, this flatute was ra- the lands of the monaftether a confirmation of what had been done, than an or- res to the dinance for the suppression of the monasteries k. As the king. king had intimated that he intended to employ the reve-nues, he had acquired, in ufeful foundations, the parli- erect new ament passed a bill for giving him power to erect new bi- fees. thopricks.

i He married a kinfwoman of Ofiander's the divine of Noremberg during his embafly with the emperor, about the year 1532. Herbert, p. 219.

k This act paffed in the houfe of peers without any protestation made by any of the abbots, though it appears by the journal, that at the first reading of it, there were eighteen abbots prefent, at the fecond twenty, and feventeen at the third. It was foon difpatched by the commons, and offered to the royal affent. By it no religious houfes were fuppreffed, as is generally taken for granted, but only the furrenders that either had been, or were to be made, were confirmed. The laft proviso in it for annulling all exemptions of churches and chapels, had been a great happiness to the church, if it had not been for the clause, " That the king might appoint others " to visit them." For many of those who purchased these lands with the impropriated tithes, got this likewife in their grants, that they should be the vifitors of the churches formerly exempted, from whence great diforders have fince followed; for the incumbents being under no reftraints, have often been fcandalous to the church. This abufe, which first forung from the ancient exemptions granted by the fee of Rome, has not yet met with an effectual remedy. It was questioned, whether the lands belonging to the abbies ought to have returned to the founders and donors by way of reverter, or to have fallen to the lords of whom the lands were holden by way of escheat, or to have come to the crown. The endowments of the heathenish temples were, in Theodofius's time, after a mature debate, adjudged to the emperor's exchequer, upon this reason, that by the will of the donors they were totally alienated from them and their heirs. But in England it 3 WCAL

Burnet.

Never

dinary act for increafal power.

1539.

464

Never was parliament more devoted to the king's will. They were not fatisfied with approving whatever the king An extraor- had done, but also whatever he might do for the future. It was enacted this feffion, that the fame obedience should be ing the roy - paid to the king's proclamations, or to the orders of the council during a minority, as to the acts of parliament. It was pretended, that cafes might happen where the king had not time to call a parliament, and yet it was neceffary for the good of the realm that his orders fhould be executed, otherwife there might be danger of falling into great inconveniencies. Thus to avoid a poffible but withal an uncommon inconvenience, another much more confiderable was run into, by giving the fovereign a defpotick power. For if his orders were to be obeyed without the concurrence of the parliament, he had no occasion to call one if he did not think it proper. It is true, there were fome limitations in the act, as that no perfon fhould be deprived of life or effate by virtue of the king's proclamation, nor any laws or cuftoms broken or fubverted thereby. But these restrictions were so ambiguoully worded, that it was easy for the king to evade them. Upon this act were grounded the great changes of religion in the nonage of Edward VI.

Another dency. Statut.c. 10.

In this fame feffion the parliament paffed an act to regulate about prece- the precedency of the officers of ftate, by which Cromwell, the king's vicegerent in ecclefiaftical affairs, though a lockfmith's fon, had the precedence of all perfons next the royal family ¹.

Laftly,

went otherwife, for when the order of the knights templers was diffolved, it was then judged in favour of the lord by escheat. And this must have held good, if those alienations and endowments had been absolute without any condition. But the endowments being generally made in confideration of fo many maffes to be faid for their fouls, then it was most just, that upon a non-performance of the condition, and when the cheat which the monks had put upon the world was discovered, the lands should have returned to the founders, and their heirs and fucceffors. Now was there any grounds for the lords to pretend to them by efcheat, especially where their ancestors had confented and confirmed those endowments ? therefore there was no need of excluding them by any fpecial provi-

2 4 18

fo. But for the founders and donors, certainly if there had not been a particular provifo made against them, they might have recovered the lands their anceftors had fuperstitiously given away, and the furrenders to the crown could not have cut off their title. But this act did that effectually. It is true, many of them were of royal foundation, and thefe would have returned to the crown without difpute. See Burnet, vol. I. p. 262.

1 By this act, it was ordered, r. That no perfon of what ftate, degree, or condition foever, except only the king's children, shall thenceforward fit at any fide of the cloth of effate in the parliament chamber (as the two archbishops used to do. See Fiddes's life of Wolfey, p. 302.) 2. That the bishops shall fit in this order, on the Laftly, The parliament confirmed the fentence of death 1539. paffed upon the marquifs of Exeter and the reft who had upon been executed for holding a correspondence with cardinal Sentence Pole. Moreover for the fame rafon, they attainted the against the marquis of countefs of Salifbury the cardinal's mother, and the mar-Exeter, &c. chionefs of Exeter, without bringing them to a trial. This is confirmed. last act met with great opposition in the parliament, many Sarum and objecting that to condemn perfons unheard was a breach of marchionefs the most facred and unalterable rules of justice. But Crom- of Exeter well having fent for the judges to his house, asked them, attainted. Herbert. whether the parliament had power to condemn perfons ac- Burnet. cufed without a hearing ? The judges replied, it was a nice T. I. p. 264. and dangerous queftion ; that equity, juffice, and all forts of laws required that the accufed fhould be heard ; that however, the parliament being the fupreme court of the realm; from which there could be no appeal, the validity of their fentences, of what nature foever they were, could not be queffioned. This was faying in other words, that the parhament would therein commit an injuffice, for which they could not be called to an account. Cromwell having reported to the parliament the opinion of the judges, the two ladies of the blood royal were condemned to die, by a fentence which established a precedent the most pernicious that had ever been feen in England, and which proved fatal to its author, as will appear. Mean while the king granted a Act. Pub. full pardon to the marchioness of Exeter, and a reprieve to XIV.p.652. Decem. 21. the counters of Salifbury, who was not executed till two Herbert. years after. Thus the king daily acquired fome fresh degree of authority. It might be faid, he usurped it not, fince it was given him by the parliament, if the circumstances of the times had not rendered the very parliament flaves to his will.

Cranmer had ftrenuoufly opposed the law of the fix arti- The king cles, and fuch an oppofition would have infallibly ruined any takes care to encourage other perfon but that prelate. But the king had an efteem Cranmer, for him which could not be eafily changed, because he was Burnet.

the right hand fide of the parliament house; first, the two archbishops of Canterbury and York, then the bishops of London, Durham, and Winchefter, and the reft according to the time of their creation. 3. That the lord chancellor, treasurer, prefident of the council, and lord privy feal, being barons, shall fit, on the left fide of the parliament houfe, above all dukes, except VOL. VI.

the royal family. 4. That the lord chamberlain, marshal, high admiral, lord fleward and chamberlain, shall be placed above all perfons of the fame effates and degrees they fhall happen to be of. 5. And the king's fecretary, being a baron, shall fit above all barons. See Statut. 31. Hen. VIII. C. 10.

465

Gg

perfuaded

perfuaded the archbishop acted according to the dictates of his confcience, whereas he had a quite contrary notion of the reft of his ministers and courtiers. Their blind compliance ferved only to make him defpife them, though he liked to reap the advantage of their bafenefs. So having a real efteem and funcere affection for Cranmer, and imagining, he must have been extremely mortified that the act had passed contrary to his opinion, and even apprehenfive of having difpleafed him by his opposition, he fent the duke of Norfolk to encourage him, and affure him of his conftant kindnefs. Cranmer ^m very thankfully received this testimony of the king's efteem and goodnefs.' Shortly after, the king talked with him himfelf concerning the law of the fix articles, and was pleafed that he explained to him the reafons which led him to oppose it. Nay, he ordered him to put all his arhim to give guments in writing, though by the statute itself, it was a him reasons for opposing crime worthy of burning. But Cranmer, truffing to the king's equity, drew up a memorial which he intended to give him. This writing being accidentally loft, was found by one who was going to carry it to the king, if Cromwell T. I. p. 265. had not prevented him ". Doctor Burnet reprefents this to be > m Burnet fays, the king fent for him firft, on June 28, and next day ordered the dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, and Cromwell, to dine with him. When they were at table with him at Lambeth, they ran out much in his commendation, and acknowledged he had opposed the act with fo much learning, gravity, and eloquence, that even those that differed from him were much taken with what he faid, and that he needed to fear nothing from the king. Cromwell faid, when complaints were brought against any of his counfellors, the king received them, but would not fo much as hearken to any complaint of the archbishop. From that he went on to make a parallel between him and cardinal Wolfey: that the one loft his friends by his haughtinefs and pride, but the other gained on his enemies by his mildnefs and gentlenefs. Upon which the duke of Norfolk faid, he might best speak of the cardinal, for he knew him well, having been his man. This nettled Cromwell, who answered, that though he had ferved him, he never liked his manner, and that though the cardinal had defigned (if his attempt for the popedom had fucceeded) to have made him his admiral, yet he refolved not to accept it. To which the duke of Norfolk replied with a deep oath, " That he lied," with other reproachful language. Collier fays, Cromwell told the duke, that he (the duke) offered to ferve the cardinal as his admiral, upon which the duke faid that it was a lie. This troubled Cranmer extremely, who did all he could to reconcile them. But they were never afterwards hearty friends. Burnet, tonn. I. p. 265. " Craumer's fecretary having writ out the book in a fair hand, and returning with it from Croydon, where the archbishop was then, to Lambeth, found the key of his chamber carried away by Cranmer's almoner ; fo being obliged to go over to London, and not daring to trust the book with any one, carried it with him. Some that were in the wherry with him, would needs go to Southwark fide to fee a bear-baiting, where the king was in perfon. The bear broke loofe into the river, and the dogs after her. They that were 466 1539.

He orders

the fix articles.

Burnet.

Herbert.

be an unexpected and happy escape for Cranmer. But fince 1539. the king himfelf ordered him to compole the writing, the danger does not feem to be fo great, unlefs it be fuppofed the king would have condemned him unheard. But this suppofition deftroys itself by the particular effeem the king had for him.

Shaxton bifhop of Salifbury, and Latimer of Worcefter, Shaxton and were not treated to favourably. As they could not refolve to Latimer reapprove of the law of the fix articles, they believed that in fees, and refigning their bifhopricks, they fhould be lefs expoled to the are fent to attacks of their enemies. But they did not come off fo the Tower. eafily. They had no fooner put the inftruments of refigna- Aft. Pub. tion into the king's hands, but they were accufed as having 642. fpoken againft the fix articles, and committed to the Tower. Burnet. When the parliament broke up, the king fent commiffion-Inquiry of ers into the feveral counties to make enquiry of those who those who were against the fix articles, being determined rigorously to rejected the execute the flatute. As Cromwell and Cranmer could not fix articles, but be fuspected in this affair, the enemies of the reformation eafily made the king fenfible, that to leave to them the nomination of the commissioners would be labouring in vain. And indeed, perfons who ftrongly oppofed the act were very unfit to fee it executed as the king defired. Some of the contrary party therefore were appointed, who difcharged their commission with such immoderate zeal and passion, that they fruftrated the defigns of those who employed them. In Hall. the city of London alone, there were within few days above Stow, Burnet. five hundred perfons thrown into prifon, and involved in the Hollingfli breach of the statute. Nay, the king was shown that, contrary to his intention, the commissioners had laid fnares for these prifoners, to oblige them to discover opinions which they intended to conceal in obedience to the laws. Befides, were in the boat leaped out, and left the fecretary alone. The bear got into the boat with the dogs about her, and funk it. The fecretary fhifting for himfelf, loft the book in the water. But being brought to land, he faw his book floating upon the water. So he defired the bear-ward to bring it to him; who taking it up, gave it to a prieft that flood there, to fee what it might contain. The prieft finding it to be a confutation of the fix articles, told the bear-ward whoever claimed it would be hanged for his pains. The fecretary thinking to mend the matter, faid it was his lord's book. This made the fellow more untractable, being a spiteful papist, and an enemy to the archbishop. So that he would not give it back. Whereupon the fecre-tary applied to Cromwell, who was then going to court, where he expected the bear-ward would be, in order to deliver the book to fome of Cranmer's enemies. And foit happened, whereupon Cromwell called to him, and took the book out of his hands, threatning him for meddling with a privy counfellor's papers. Burnet, tom. I. p. 265, 266.

Gg2

fince

THE HISTORY

468 1539.

The king pardons them all. Hall. Burnet.

Extreme condescention of both parties for the king. Herbert. Burnet.

Burnet.

fince in fo fhort a space, fuch numbers were imprisoned in London, it was eafy to judge how many there might be in all the reft of the kingdom, and of what ill confequence it would be to execute the law upon numberlefs perfons of all ages and fexes. This the chancellor, who was no energy to the reformation, reprefented to the king, and prevailed with him to pardon all the prifoners. From this time to Cromwell's death, the proceedings upon the act were fuspended, though it still subfisted, and might have been executed if the king had pleafed. Thus every thing was regulated by the king's will, who haftened or retarded the execution of the laws according to the times and perfons. This gained him a blind condefcention from both parties, every one having to fear his own ruin according to the king's humour and dilpofition. It is certain, those that defired a reformation were confirmined to feign an approbation of many things which in their hearts they detefted, and that Cromwell and Craumer who had most access to the king, dared to press him only indirectly to advance the work already begun. Hence they preferved their credit, and were enabled to do their party fervice. Their adverfaries took the fame courfe, and went ftill greater lengths in their compliance, well knowing it was the only way to gain the king's confidence. Bonner bifhop T. I. p. 267. of London, though a favourer of the pope, and perfuaded that the king had no fpiritual authority, took a commission from him, which adjudged to him both the fpiritual and temporal power of his bifhoprick, during his good pleafure °. After this, the exceffive power which the king daily acquired must not be thought strange, fince every one strove to fubmit to his will. Gardiner bifhop of Winchefter was one of the principal favourers of the old religion, to which he was very ferviceable by a profound diffimulation. He expreffed great zeal to execute as well the act of the fix articles, as those made against the pope. He thereby maintained his credit, though the king had but little effeem for him.

> • The fubftance of the commission was: that fince all jurifdiction, both ecclefiaftical and civil, flowed from the king as fupreme head, it became those who exercifed any power only by the king's courtefy, gratefully to acknowledge, that they had it only of his bounty; and to declare they would deliver it.up again when it fhould pleafe him to call for it. And fince his vicegerent could not look into all matters, therefore the king did empower Bonner in his own flead to exercise all the parts of episcopal authority, for which he was duly commiffioned; and this to laft during the king's pleafure only. See the original in Burnet, tom. I. Colieft. p. 184.

The actual suppression of the monasteries was begun and 1539. ended in the courfe of this year P. The commiffioners ap-pointed for that purpole fettled every thing relating thereto. What the They awarded penfions to the abbots, priors, monks, and fupprefion nuns, for their livelihood. They valued the plate, goods, of the moornaments of the priest, of the altars, of the churches, and nafteries ordered what buildings fhould be demolifhed, and what left Herbert. standing. I have already observed that the rents of all the Burnet. suppressed monasteries amounted to one hundred fixty thou- T. I. Col-fand one hundred pounds sterling. But if it be true that left. p. 151, this valuation was made only upon the foot of the laft leafes, Speed. and that these were not above the tenth part of the real value, as fome affirm, it follows that thefe rents were worth above fixteen hundred thousand pounds 9, befides the ready money which accrued to the king by the fale of the effects r. Here was wherewithal to make useful foundations to the church and ftate, had all thefe riches been employed that way. The king feemed at first to have formed fuch a de- Strype. fign. Nay, this was what had ferved for the principal ground of the suppression of the monasteries. But the greediness of the courtiers and favourites allowed but a very finall part to be expended on things useful and neceffary. Henry had at first refolved to erect eighteen new bishopricks', The king but as the money was lavished away, he found reasons to re- money in duce them to a much fmaller number. In fhort, he con-needlefs tented himfelf with founding fix, and eftablishing canons in things. fome cathedrals which the monks had poffeffed. In all this Burnet, he employed but a revenue of eight thousand pounds. He laid out likewife part of the money in fortifying fome ports, and all the reft was fquandered away in prefents and other p There are fifty-feven furrenders upon record this year; and the originals of about thirty of thefe are yet to be feen. Thirty feven of them were abbies or priories, and twenty nunneries: among the reft, Godftow, Westminster, St. Albans, Waltham, Glastenbury, St. Peter's in Gloucester, &c. The method used in the suppresfion of these houses, may be feen in Burnet, tom. I. Collect. p. 151, &c. The hofpital of St. Thomas in Southwark was also iuppreffed this year. See Burnet, tom. I. p. 267, 268.

9 Some compute, that the lands taken from the monasteries, at twenty years purchase, would amount, at this prefent time, to thirty millions, five hundred and three thousand, four hundred pounds. Those formerly belonging to the abbey of St. Albans, being worth at this day, about two hundred thousand pounds a year; and those belonging to Glastenbury abbey, above three hundred thousand pounds yearly. See Stevens hift. of taxes, p. 188-216.

The treasure found in the monafteries was valued at one hundred thoufand pounds. Ibid. p. 217. As for an account of the other Jaluable effects found there, fee Monasticon Anglic.

s On which he intended to befrow eighteen thousand pounds a year. Burnet, tom. I. p. 269.

469

needlefs

THE HISTORY

410 1539.

Remarks upon the conduct of the p rilament.

Burnet. T. I. p. 269.

tants avoid ror's fnares,

the empe-

Sleidan.

needlefs expences. For this caufe he could not avoid the - blame of having plundered the church; whereas had he employed the beft part of these lands in things useful to the church and ftate, he would have gained the bleffings of his fubjects and their posterity. As to the parliament, they are inexcufable for having put into the king's hands fuch immense riches defigned for pious uses, without taking care how they were to be employed. This is no flender evidence of what has been already observed, that the parliaments met in this reign only to be inftrumental in gratifying the king's paffions, without ever examining either the motives or confequences of what he required. Henry had also formed the project of founding a college for young fludents, that they might be qualified for the fervice of the ftate, either in embaffies or other affairs of the government^t. But this project mifcarried with many others, becaufe the king having fold the lands of the suppressed abbies, was very loth to put to fuch uses the ready money raifed by the fale. He chose rather to lavish it upon his pleasures, or his courtiers, who ufed all forts of artifices, condescentions, and base flatteries, to procure fome part of these vast treasures.

Whilft Henry was employed in his domeftick affairs, he The protefhad an eye however to what paffed abroad. The emperor feigned the last year a firm intention to adjust the religious differences which occafioned troubles in Germany. But this

> t As this was the nobleft defign that ever was projected in England, it will not be amifs to give fome fhort account of it. Sir Nicolas Bacon (who was afterwards one of the wifest minifters that ever this nation bred,) together with Thomas Denton and Robert Carey, were ordered to make a full project of the nature and orders of fuch a houfe, which they brought to the king in writing, the criginal whereof is fill extant. The defign of it was, that there fhould be frequent pleadings, and other exercises in the Latin and French tongues ; and when the king's fludents were brought to fome ripenels, they should be fent with his ambaffadors to foreign parts, and trained up in the knowledge of foreign affairs; and fo the house should be the nursery for ambaffadors. Some were alfo appointed to write the hiftory of all embafies, treaties, and foreign transactions; as alfo of arraignments and publick trials at home. But before any of them might write on these fubjects, the lord chancellor was to give them an oath, that they fhould do it truly without respect of persons, or any other corrupt affection. This noble defign mifcarried, but if it had been well regulated, it is easy to gather what great and publick advantages might have flowed from it. Among which it is not inconfiderable, that we fhould have been delivered from a rabble of ill writers of history, who have without due care and inquiry delivered to us the transactions of that time fo imperfectly, that there is still need of inquiring into registers and papers for these matters : which in fuch a houfe had been more clearly conveyed to posterity, than can now be expected after fuch razure of records, and other confusions, in which many of these papers have been loft. Burnet, tom. I. 269.

was only to draw money from the protestants to be expended 1539. in his war with the Turk. He expected that upon the bare hopes, he was pleafed to give them, of redreffing their grievances, they would drain themfelves of men and money, and fo become lefs formidable. But the protestants would not fuffer themselves to be deceived to such a degree. They plainly answered to his demand, that they could do nothing for him, without fufficient fecurity of being left in peace.

Henry finding that a rupture between the emperor and the and Henry'st protestants was not very remote, sent fresh ambassadors to Germany to firengthen the refolutions of the Smalcaldick league, by hopes of his coming into it, and being declared protector. But the Germans had now difcovered his defign, which was to amufe them, and keep the emperor in conti- . nual fear of his uniting with them. They returned therefore the fame anfwer as before, that the fole intent of their league was to maintain the Augfburg confession, and if the king refused to admit that confession, it was in vain to treat of other points: that moreover, they heard with extreme grief that he perfecuted in his realm fuch as held the fame opinions with them on fundry articles of religion, and therefore, fo long as the act of the fix articles fubfifted, there was no likelihood that he really intended to join with them. Melancthon even writ him a letter in very ftrong, though respectful terms, to show him the unreasonableness of that statute.

Henry, to whom all was obedient in England, and whofe Gardiner will was a law, was offended at the firmnels of the German diverts the princes. On the other hand, Gardiner, who dreaded of all his defigns to things the king's union with the Smalcaldick league, failed join with th not to use this occasion to divert him from it, by flattering protestants. his vanity. He reprefented to him, that it was very ftrange, Herbert, petty princes fhould pretend to be a pattern to a great monarch, and dictate to the most learned prince in Europe, in matters of religion. He added, that whatever the proteflants might pretend, they would never approve of his fupremacy in England, because it would be a tacit engagement to own that the emperor had the fame right in Germany, This was falle reafoning, fince there was a wide difference between the authority which the king had over his subjects, and that which the emperor could claim over the fovereigns and free cities of Germany. However, he attained his ends, that is, he begot a great coldness between the king and the protestants.

475

Gg4

Gardiner's

up in the churches.

1539.

472

Burnet.

People alin their houfes. Idem.

Gardiner oppofes it. Idem.

Proclamation about the bible. Act. Pub. XIV.p.649, 650. Novem. 4. Strype.

Gardiner's artifices might have been more prejudicial to the reformation, if, on the other fide, the reformers had not Bibles are fet raised a counter battery, of which they made wonderful The king was fo jealous of his fupremacy, that he ule. neglected nothing to fupport it. Indeed, the abfolute power acquired over his subjects placed him above all opposition, but he wifhed of all things, the nation was convinced of the justice of that prerogative. Hence the reformers took occafion to remonfirate to him, that nothing but the reading of the holy fcriptures could undeceive the people of their falfe notion of the papal authority. By this means they had already obtained, that there fhould be a bible fastened with a chain in every church, to be freely perused by all perfons. But as many fcrupled publickly to read the fcriptures for fear of being fufpected of herefy, Cranmer, meeting with a lowed bibles favourable opportunity, reprefented to the king that it was neceffary to give his subjects leave to have a bible in their houses. He infinuated to him, that every one having liberty to read it, would eafily be convinced that the pope's pretended authority had no foundation in the fcriptures. This was an innocent firatagem, to procure the people an opportunity to inftruct themfelves in many other articles, though the king had only one in view. Gardiner readily perceived the confequence of the archbishop's request, and feeing the king inclined to grant it, did all he could to divert it. He difputed upon this fubject with Cranmer in the king's prefence, who heard them very attentively. At laft, perceiving folid learning in what Cranmer faid, and nothing but vanity in the reafonings of his adverfary, he fuddenly rofe up, faying to Gardiner, that fuch a novice as he was not fit to contend with an old experienced general ". Shortly after, he isfued out a proclamation, declaring he was defirous to have his fubjects attain the knowledge of true religion in God's word; and therefore he would take care they fhould have an exact translation of the bible. He forbid however, in order to prevent the inconveniencies which might arife from the difference of the verfions, the felling of any bible but what fhould be approved by the vicegerent w.

> 4 Gardiner challenged Cranmer to fhew any difference between the authority of the fcriptures, and of the apoftolical canons, which he pretended were equal to the other writings of the apofiles. Upon which they disputed some time. Burnet, tom. I. p. 270.

w And about the fame time iffued out a proclamation for uniformity in religion, which the reader may fee in Strype's Mem. tom. I. p. 354. Coll. P. 295.

About

About the end of this year was seen a fresh effect of the 1539. mutual confidence which appeared between Charles V. and Francis I. A mutiny arifing in Gaunt by reafon of a tax Theemperor laid upon wine by the governor of the Low Countries, the France to go mutineers applied to the king of France to implore his pro- to Gaunt. tection, and even offered to fubmit to him. But he did not Haræus. think proper to accept of their offers. On the contrary, he Hall. informed the emperor of what was plotting against him. Herbert. This feens very firange, confidering that hitherto he had never profeffed much generofity to that monarch. But the reafon of this proceeding was, the emperor ftill allured him with the hopes of the duchy of Milan, and fo diverted him from the thoughts of recovering it by arms. However, the emperors's prefence in Flanders being alone capable of appeafing the fedition of Gaunt, he was at fome lofs which way to get thither in time. It was dangerous going by fea, as well on account of the feafon, as becaufe he had no fleet to convoy him. The way through Italy was no fafer, by reason he could not afterwards cross Germany without paffing through the territories of the protestant princes. There remained no other way but by France, which he refolved upon, though he had as much reafon to fuspect that kingdom as Germany. But he hoped to amufe the king by means of the duchy of Milan, as he did in effect. He fet out therefore and entered France with a fmall train, upon the bare fecurity of a fafe conduct. Nay, he refused to take in hoftage the dauphin and his brother the duke of Orleans, who came and received him at Bayonne, offering to flay in Spain fo long as he fhould be in the king's dominions. Wherever he came, the fame refpect was paid him as to the Hall. king himfelf, and he arrived at Paris the first of January 1540.

Henry's marriage with Anne of Cleves being at length The king's concluded by Cromwell's diligence, who had been charged with Anne with the negotiation, the princess arrived in England about of Cleves is the end of the year 1539 x, at the time the emperor was concluded. travelling through France in his way to the Low Countries. Hall. Henry receiving advice of her arrival at Rochefter, went She arrives down incognito, being very impatient to fee whether he had in England. Stow. Hollingfh.

x On December 27, fhe landed at Deal. William Fitzwilliams earl of Southampton, being fent with a fleet of fifty fail to bring her over. Hall, fol. 238. This fame month, king Henry renewed his guard of fifty gentlemen penfioners, with a falary of fifty pounds a year; they had been difcontinued fince the first year of his reign. Hall, fol. 237. Hollingschead, p. 948.

473

been

I 539. The king diflikes her.

474

Stow. p. 579. Burnet. T. I. Coll. p. 197.

- ferent from what her picture, drawn by Hans Holbin, had caufed him to expect. This first fight gave him such an averfion for her, that he would have immediately broke off the marriage, if he had not been prevented by ftrong reafons y. The fame confiderations which had made him conclude it fubfifted, and there were others which obliged him to confummate it. The duke of Cleves was the emperor's neighbour in Flanders, and had also a pretension as well as he to the duchy of Guelders, after the death of the duke of that name. Confequently, in cafe of a war between the emperor and England, that prince could give the emperor a very troublesome diversion in Flanders. On the other hand, his fifter was married to the duke of Saxony, head of the Smalcaldick league, with whom it was of great moment to the king to live in a good understanding. But this was not all. The emperor, then in France, was labouring with all his power to difingage Francis I: from the interefts of England. Nay, Henry had private intelligence, that the emperor offered to give the duchy of Milan to the duke of Orleans upon that confideration. If therefore, in fuch a juncture, he had fent back the princess of Cleves without marrying her, he ran the hazard of an entire rupture with the princes of Smalcald, at a time when he faw himfelf upon the point of being forfaken by the king of France, who by degrees forgot the affiftance he had received from him in his most urgent occasions. So, lamenting his misfortune to be forced to marry a princess for whom he had conceived an aversion, he resolved to make this facrifice the 6th of January 1540. Bút he was still less pleased after his marriage than before, and from that very moment was determined to be divorced from her. He concealed his fentiments however as much as poffible, though it was eafy for all to fec his vexation and trouble. Cromwell, who had drawn him into this marriage, quickly felt the effects of his refentment, though the king was very careful to hide it from him 2. The 1540.

He marries her however, Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

and bears Cromwell an ill-will. Stow. Burnet.

> y He fwore, when he firft faw her, they had brought over a Flanders mare to him. Nicholas Wotton, doctor of Jaw, employed in this bufinefs, gives her this character : fhe could both write and read in her own language, and few very well; but for mufick (in which the king delighted) it was not the manner of the country to learn it, Her bert, p. 221.

² Comwell afked him next day how he liked her; the king told him, he liked her worfe than he did. For he fofpected fhe was no maid, and had fuch ill fmells about her, that he loathed her more than ever, and did not believe he fhould ever confurmate the marriage. This was fad news to Cromwell,

The parliament meeting the 12th of April, Cromwell made 1539. a speech to both houses, informing them that the king seeing with extreme concern fo great division among his fub- Parliament, Hall. jects in matters of religion, had appointed commissioners to Herbert. examine the points in difpute, that the articles of faith Theking might be fixed without respect of parties, by the word of appoints God: that he was very defirous his people should have the commissionknowledge of the truth; but then he was refolved to punifh mine the without mercy, fuch as fhould prefume to prefer their pri- doctrines of vate, before the established, opinions. The commissions religion. named by the king were approved of, and had orders to Strype. begin this examination without delay a. Two days after Cromwell the king created Croniwell, earl of Effex b.

During this feffion, the parliament fuppreffed the order Knights of of the knights of St. John of Jerufalem, who are now cal- St. John led knights of Malta. Their dependence on the pope fuppreffed, and the emperor was the caufe or pretence of their ruin. Herbert. There is no doubt, the defire of enjoying their fpoils induced Stow. alfo the king to procure their fuppreffion. And indeed, the Hollingfh. parliament gave him all their lands as they had given him those of the abbies. Though they had laige revenues both in Ireland and England, the king allowed however but three thousand pounds for their maintenance after their suppresfion c. The affair being ended, the parliament was prorogued to the 25th of May.

well, who knew how nice the king was in thefe matters, and that fo great a misfortune must needs fall heavy upon him, who was the chief promoter of it. Burnet, tom. I. p. 273. Stow,

p. 578. a The king appointed the two archbishops, with the bishops of London, Durham, Winchefter, Rochefter, Hereford, St. Davids, and eleven doctors, to draw up an exposition of those things that were neceffary for the inflitution of a christian man. He also appointed the bifhops of Bath and Wells, Ely, Sarum, Chichefter, Worcefter, and Landaff, to examine what ceremonies fhould be retained, and what was the true use of them. These committees were to fit conftantly Mondays, Wednefdays, and Fridays, and on other days in the afternoon only. Burnet, tom. I. p. 275. ^b April 17. One would think by this that the king was not angry with him about his marriage, fince he conferred fo great a ticle on him. Henry Bourchier, earl of Effex, the laft of his. family, venturing to ride a young horfe, had the misfortune to be thrown, and by the fall to break his neck. Dugdale, vol. II. p. 130, 137.—On November 29, 1538. Sir Thomas Audley, lord chancellor, was created lord Audley of Walden : and on March 9, 1539, fir William Poulet was advanced to the title of lord St. John ; on the 29th, fir John Ruffel, to that of lord Ruffel; and William Parr, to that of lord Parr. Idem. p. 376, 378, 381.

c He allowed a thousand pounds pension to the prior of St. John's near London, and five hundred marks a year to the prior in Iscland, (for there was but one houfe in each kingdom) with very confiderable allowances for the knights, amounting in all to three thousand pounds a year. The House in Ireland was at Kilmainan. Eurnet, tom. I. p. 276. Stow, p. 579.

created earl of Effex.

A few

1539. C:cmwell's difgrace. Eurnet.

A few days after, there fell upon Cromwell a florm, which probably had been gathering fome time before. This minister had many enemies, and enviers. He was fon of a farrier or lock-fmith; and though his birth was to mean, he was raifed to great honour, even to the having the precedence of all the lords in the kingdom, except the royal family. All the nobility envied him. The whole popifh party also hated him mortally, deeming him the first advifer of the fuppression of the abbies, and one of the principal encouragers of the king to all the innovations he had made in religion. Among these, who were very numerous, the duke of Norfolk and Gardiner were the perfons that could do him most hurt, because they had free access to the king These two courtiers perceiving the king's coldness for the new queen, doubted not of his ill-will to Cromwell, for engaging him in that marriage, and refolved to make use of this occafion to ruin him." They hoped when he was removed, it would not be impossible to procure an agreement between the emperor and the king, and then, a reconciliation with the pope, which Cromwell had always oppofed to the utmost of his power. Two other things greatly contributed to the downfal of this minister. The king had always employed him, in his correspondence with the Smalcaldick league, and fo long as he thought he wanted that league, he could not be without his affistance. But growing cold at length to the German princes, as I before obferved, and knowing, the dreaded union between Charles V. and Francis I. was only a chimera, and confequently he should have no need of Germany, Cromwell became less neceflary. The fecond thing which helped to ruin Cromwell was, the king fell in love with Catherine Howard, the duke of Norfolk's niece. Norfolk finding his credit confiderably increased, made use of it to procure the minister's The duke of destruction. As foon as he had a fair opportunity, he reprefented to the king. " That there were many male-" contents in the kingdom, and good men could not be " perfuaded that a prince like him, would willingly give " any occafion of difcontent to his people : that they infer-" red from thence, he must have been ill ferved by his "minister, who doubtless had abused his confidence: that " as the people feemed diffatisfied only with regard to re-" ligion, it was natural to think, this happened through " the vicegerent's fault, whofe conduct perhaps it would " be proper to examine : that he was accused by the pub-" lick of many things, which, if true, rendered him the " moff

Burnet.

Norfolk ftirs up the king againft Cromwell.

OF ENGLAND.

" most guilty of all others, confidering the favours heaped on 1540. " him by the king : that befides, though no particular fact -" could be proved upon him, it was however a very great " crime to rob the king of the hearts of good part of his " fubjects : that he took the freedom therefore to tell him, " in order to quiet their minds, there was no better way " than to facrifice to them fo odious a minister." These infinuations, which were doubtlefs feconded by Gardiner and other enemies of Cromwell, produced at length the defired effect. The king, prejudiced against him, refolved to Cromwell's dispatch him out of the way, without knowing yet of what death is he was guilty. But he found in his death a double adrantage. First, he discovered his resentment against him on account of the marriage, he had drawn him into. Secondly, he believed to make his people a facrifice capable of filencing all their murmurs d. This refolution being taken, He is accufed and the parliament meeting the 13th of June, the duke of high trea-of Norfolk accufed Cromwell of high-treason at the count fent to the cil board, and received orders to arreft him e and fend Tower. him to the Tower. This illustrious prifoner had the com-Hall. Hollingth. mon fate of all difgraced ministers. In a moment, he was Cranmer forfaken by all but his friend Cranmer, who alone ventured writes in his to write to the king in his favour, though to no purpofe: behalf.

Cromwell being in the Tower, the articles of his im- Herbert, peachment were drawn, confifting in generals, of which He is connot fo much as the least proof was offered to be given. The demned king knew, if his process was made according to the usual without beforms, he might produce warrants which would fully clear Burnet, him, and which could not be difclaimed. For this reason Hall. it was thought proper to bring his affair before the parlia- Stow. Hollingfh. ment, and caufe a bill of attainder to be paffed against him, Burnet, without allowing him to make his defence f. In this man T.I.p. 278. ner had he himfelf proceeded in the affair of the marchionefs of Exeter and the countefs of Salifbury, and therefore could not think it ftrange the fame thing fhould be practifed in his cafe. The parliament, ever flaves to the king, deemed the impeachment just, though destitute of proof. So by an act, declaring him attainted and convicted of here-

d See above, p. 339. Note b.

e He was arrefted July 9. Hall, fol. 242.

f The bill was brought into the house of lords, Cranmer being then absent, on the 17th of July, and read the first time; and on the 19th was read the fecond and third time, and fent down to the commons, where it fluck ten days. And then a new bill, conceived by the commons, was brought up with a provifo annexed to it. They alfo fent back the lords bill. It feens they rejected the lords bill, and yet fent it up with their own, either in respect to the lords, or that they left it to their choice, which of the two they would offer to the royal affent. Which was an unparliamentary proceeding. Burnet, tom. I. p. 277.

477

fav

fy and treafon, he was condemned as a traitor and heretick, the parliament leaving it to the king's choice to make him fuffer the punifhment of either of thofe crimes. This, joined to fome other foregoing, as well as following inflances, fhow to what height the king had carried his authority, fince to difcover his will was fufficient to be immediately obeyed, even by thofe whofe bufinefs and intereft it chiefly was to reduce his power within due bounds. The execution of the fentence was deferred till after the feffion of the parliament.

The king is determined to null his marriage. Stow. Burnet. Herbert.

Pretence of the divorce. Burnet. Herbert,

Henry was fo tired of his queen, that he could not bear the vexation to fee himfelf engaged for the reft of his life in fo difagreeable a marriage. He refolved therefore to divorce her, let what would be the confequence, efpecially as the reafons which induced him to marry her no longer fubfifted. He had loft all hopes of making a league with the protestants of Germany, and his fears of the emperor were vanished, fince he faw every thing tending to a rupture between him and France. He only wanted a pretence to demand a divorce, and give fome colour to the proceedings of the clergy and parliament, of whofe concurrence he was fure, however flight the pretence might be. He found one in a precontract between the queen and the duke of Lorrain's fon. But this contract was fo flight, that the confequences were to be much preffed, to make it ferve for the foundation of diffolving Anne's marriage with the king. The duke of Cleves and the duke of Lorrain, had formerly, it feems, in a treaty, agreed upon a marriage between Anne of Cleves and the prince of Lorrain both minors. This agreement had never been confirmed by the parties when of age. On the contrary, the ambafiador of the duke of Gueldres, who acted as mediator in that treaty, declared afterwards by an authentick inftrument, that this article was deemed null. However, when Henry's marriage with Anne was concluded, this preengagement railed a difficulty. But the ambafladors of Saxony and Cleves politively promifed to clear that point and put it out of all doubt, as foon as the prince's fhould arrive in England. Anne being come to Greenwich, the king, who liked her not, infifted upon this article, in order to fend her back. For that purpose, he called a council, and fending for the ambaffadors, the explanation, they had promifed, was demanded. But they had brought nothing with them, looking upon this difficulty as little material. Mean while, the council telling them that good proofs were expected and not not bare words. they offered to produce within three months 1540. an authentick abstract from the chancery of Cleves, to prove what they had alledged. This alone would not have been capable of inducing the king to proceed, if, as has been faid, there had not been ftrong reasons to cause him to accomplifh his marriage. So, the council was of opinion, that if there were no other objection, the marriage might be lawfully folemnized. The abstract from the chancery of Cleves being come, great exceptions were found to it, upon the ambiguity of the word espoufals, because it was not expressed whether they were espoulals by the words of the present or of the future tense. But as the king would not vet commence the affair of his divorce, he caufed the abftract to be kept, in order to make use of it when there should be occasion. Upon this therefore he refolved to found his divorce.

The parliament, after a prorogation of fome days, meet- The parliaing again, Henry fent the queen to Richmond. A few ment pray days after, a motion was made in the house of lords, to examine the prefent an addrefs to the king, to defire him to fuffer his validity of marriage to be tried. After what has been seen, it can't his marriage. be imagined any lord would be fo hardy as to dare to Stow. make fuch a motion, unless he was fure of the king's Burner. approbation. So, the motion being affented to, the lords Herbert. defired the concurrence of the commons g; after which, they went in a body h to prefent their address to the king. Henry protefted to them, that he fought only the glory of God, the good of his people, and the declaration of truth. Then he agreed that the affair should be referred to the The matter clergy, who immediately appointed commiffioners to exa-is-brought mine the witneffes ⁱ. All that could be gathered from the convocation, king's own deposition, and those of the witnesses, was, that Extraordithere had been a precontract between the queen and the nary reafons prince of Lorrain, which was not fufficiently cleared: that the divorce. the king having efpoufed the queen against his will, had not Burnet. given an inward confent to his marriage, without which, Strype's it was affirmed, his promifes could not be obligatory, a Mem.

g The lord chancellor, the archbithop of Canterbury, the dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the earl of South-ampton, and the bishop of Durham, were fent to defire their concurrence. Burnet, tom. I. p. 28c.

h The whole house of peers, with twenty commoners, on July 6. Burnet, tom. I. p. 280.

i On the 7th of July it was brought before the convocation, and the cafe was opened by the bifhop of Winchefter, and a committee appointed to confider of it; and they deputed the bifhops of Durham and Winchefter, with Thirleby, and Leighton, dean of York, to examine witneffes that day. Burnet, ibid.

THE HISTORY

man's act being only what is inward: that the king had 1540. never confummated his marriage : that the whole nation T. I. Coll. had a great intercft in the king's having more iffue, which p. 306, 307, they faw he could never have by the queen. Sec.

Burnet.

480

The king must have had a very ill opinion of the convocation, the parliament, and the publick, to alledge fuch extraordinary caules of his divorce. The first had been discuffed before the celebration of the marriage, and the council was of opinion, it could be no just impediment. As to the fecond, if that maxim took place, contracts would be of no ufe, fince one of the parties might fay, he had not given an inward confent. This would be eftablishing, without remedy, infincerity, fraud and perfidiousness in the higheft degree. As for the third, the king had doubtlefs forgot what he had alledged in the process of his divorce with Catherine. He then maintained, purfuant to his clergy's opinion, that the confummation of Arthur's marriage with Catherine was not neceffary to render it valid, but that the bare confent of the parties made it compleat. The fourth was of no greater weight, fince there was no necessity of nulling the marriage, under colour that the king was not pleafed to lie with the queen. Befides, he had now an heir. In fhort, his word must be taken, when he faid, he had not confummated his marriage, his word, who fued for the divorce, and who used this argument to obtain it. Mean while, the clergy thought these reasons solid, and passed a fentence of divorce upon them, and the parliament were fo abject, as to profitute themfelves to the king's paffion, and confirm the fentence k. There is no diffinction to be made here, fince neither in the convocation, nor in the parliament, was there one fingle vote against the divorce; so much did every one dread to incur the king's difpleafure. This is a remarkable evidence of what I have often intimated, that in every thing transacted in England during the latter part of Henry VIII's reign, the parliament and clergy ought to be confidered only as the king's inftruments to gratify his paffions. To him is due the praise of whatever was good and ufeful, and he it is that ought to be blamed for what-

k Sentence was given the 9th of July, which was figned by both houfes of convocation ; and had the two arch-" bishops feals put to it, of which whole trial the record does yet remain, having escaped the fate of the other books of convocation. The original deposi-tions are also extant. Burnet observes, this only can be faid for their excuse, that the king's reafons were as just and weighty as used to be admitted by the court of Rome for a divorce ; and most of them being canonitts, and knowing how many precedents there were to be found for luch divorces, they thought they might do it as well as the popes had formerly done. Burnet, tom. 1. p. 281.

ever

ever was amifs. Mean while, the parliament and clergy 1540. are inexculable for not having endeavoured to support the caufe of Juffice and truth, when they believed them to be oppreffed.

The queen was not much troubled at what had been Anne condone in her absence, and even without her being examined. fents to the divorce. Probably, the had entertained no great affection for a fpoule, Hall, who had never given her any token of his love. However, Stow. though the king had thought it needless to ask her appro-Burnet, bation, when he was meditating the divorce, because then the clergy and parliament only were concerned, whom he knew to be at his devotion, he demanded her confent to what had been done, thinking no doubt the better to juftify himfelf to the world. At the fame time he offered by A&. Pub. letters patents to declare her his adopted fifter, with a pen-XIV.p.710, fion of four thousand pounds a year i, and her choice either Burnet. to live in England. or return home. She agreed to all without follicitation, and chofe to live in England, where fhe hoped to pass her time more agreeably than at Cleves, in her brother's court. Befides it is likely fhe believed her pension would be more fecure if she remained in England, than if fhe lived abroad. Every thing being thus fettled, fhe writ to the duke her brother, that fhe approved of the divorce, and defired him to live in a good understanding with the king m.

This grand affair being finished, the parliament passed Act to moan act to moderate one of the fix articles in the bloody derate the flatute. This article, as the other five, made it death of the fix for the priests to break their vow of chastity; but by articles. this last act, the pains of death were turned to forfeiture of Burnet. goods.

All the reft of this reign will be only a continued feries of Proofs of the fenfible proofs of the flavish subjection the English nati-flavish aton was reduced to. But, in this very fession of parlia- tachment of the parlia-

1 There is in Rymer, a lift of the feveral manors and effates, granted her by the king for life; but it is no where faid, that they were four thousand pounds a year. See tom. XIV. p. 710, &c. Bishop Burnet fays, it was only three thousand pounds a year. See tom. I. p. 282.

m The 10th of July, Cranmer re-ported to the houfe of lords, the convocation's fentence, who fent him down to the commons to report the fame. On the itth, the king fent the lord chancellor, the duke of Norfolk, the earl of Southampton, and the bifhop of Winchefter to the queen, to let her know what was done, and to make her the offers above mentioned. Next day, being the 12th of July, the bill was brought into the house for annulling the marriage, which eafily went through both houses. Burnet, tom. I. p. 282.

VOL. VI.

H h

ment,

ment.

The commissioners appointed by the king, pursuant to an 482

ment, there are three, which ought not to be passed over in 1540. filence. L----

The parliament confirms whatever the king fhall pleafe matters of religion.

Law about marriage in favour of the king.

act of parliament, to examine the doctrines of religion, having drawn a long memorial, and fet down certain articles as undeniable and abfolutely neceffary, it was moved in the to enjoin in house of lords, to pass into a law what the commissioners had already done, and whatever they fhould do for the future by order of the king. This motion being received, a bill was brought in immediately, and when paffed fent down to the commons, who agreeing to it, fent it up again the next day. By this statute it was enacted, that not only the memorial drawn by the commissioners, provided it were approved by the king, but likewife whatever the king fhould enjoin for the future in matters of religion, should be believed and obeyed by all his fubjects. This was invefting the king with the infallibility taken from the pope. Greater figns of flavery can hardly be feen, fince the parliament gave the king power over confcience, after having in a manner rendered him mafter of life and fortune. Moreover a claufe was inferted in this act, which under colour of limiting the king's authority fenfibly enlarged it, namely, " That nothing " fhould be done or determined by virtue of this act, which " was contrary to the laws of the realm." These contradictory claufes in the fame ftatute rendered the king arbiter of the lives of his fubjects, fince on the one hand, they were enjoined to fubmit to the king's will in matters of religion, without knowing however what he would pleafe to prefcribe, and on the other, were forbid to do any thing contrary to the laws. Confequently, in cafe the king commanded any thing contrary to the law, they were liable to be profecuted by virtue of this ftatute, whether against law they obeyed the king, or in obedience to the law refused to comply with his will. The acts paffed in this reign are full of fuch contradictions, which were not inferted without defign.

The parliament paffed another bill which carried no lefs marks of fervitude. It was enacted, that a marriage already confummated fhould not be annulled, on pretence of precontract or any other impediment not mentioned in the law of God. Without doubt the parliament had, or perhaps feigned to have, forgot that the king's marriage with Anne Bullen was annulled by reafon of a pre-contract, and upon the fame foundation, during this very feffion, they had approved the diffolution of his marriage with Anne of Cleves. It

It is true, the king declared, it was not confummated. But 1540. Catherine of Arragon protefted the fame thing with respect to her marriage with prince Arthur, and yet it was decided, that a party concerned fhould not be believed even upon oath, when they were prefumptions to the contrary. These were Intent of the real contradictions but not minded by the king. His aim act. was to legitimate the princess Elizabeth by virtue of the former branch of the act, and to remove, by the latter, the impediments in the canon law, to his intended marriage with Catherine Howard, who was coulin-german to Anne Bullenⁿ.

Before the parliament broke up, the clergy of the pro- Money vince of Canterbury, allembled in convocation, offered the granted to king a fublidy of four fhillings in the pound, of all eccle- the clergy, fiastical preferments to be paid in two years, in acknowledg- Burnet. ment (as they faid in their address) of his care to free the Strype. church of England from the tyranny of the pope. The king gladly accepted their prefent, which was readily confirmed by the parliament. But this was not fufficient for the king's occasions. In a few days, he demanded also an aid of money of the commons. Though for fome time the parliament had been wont to fubmit without examination to the king's pleafure, this demand met with fome fort of oppolition in the lower house. And indeed, it could not but feem strange, confidering the king was in peace with all the world, and befides, he could not be imagined to have already confumed the money procured by the suppression of the abbies. Some of the commons reprefented, that if in time of peace, and within the fpace of one year, the king had fpent fuch immenfe fums, there was nothing more to do but to give him all the lands in the kingdom, which too would not fuffice for the expence of few years. But these speeches had no great effect. It was answered by the king's party, Eurnet. that he had laid out vaft fums in fecuring the coafts o, and that the keeping his fubjects in peace and plenty coft him

" By other statutes it was enached, 1. That physicians in London shall be difcharged from watch and ward, and not ferve the office of conftable, or any other. That the prefident, and four fellows of the college, fhall fea ch and examine the wares and drugs of apothecaries; and that they may pract fe furgery. 2. By another, the bar-bers and Surgeons were made one company. 3. And by another it was ordered, That a court of first fruits and tentils, (confifting of a chancellor, treafurer, two auditors, two clerks, a melfenger, and an ufher,) flipuld be erected. c. As allo a court of wards. This last was abolifhed 12 Car. II. See Statut. 32. Hen. VIII.

• In building havens, bulwarks, and other forts for the defence of the coafts. Barnet, tom, I. p. 284.

483

the king by

Hh2

more

484

1540. more than the most burthenfome war. These reasons, though - very weak, paffed for incontestable, and the commons granted the king a fubfidy, as large as if he had been actually engaged in a dangerous war P. This is a third proof of the parliament's flavery. Mean while, the people could not conceive what was become of all the money the king had lately received, and which should have supplied his necessities for many years.

The parliament is diffolved. A general exceptions. Burnet.

Cromwell's execution. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh. Burnet.

Burnet.

Hall. tol. 242. Stow. p. 580. Hollingfh.

This parliament, which had given the king fo great teftimonies of a boundless compliance, was diffolved the 24th of July. But the king was pleafed first to requite his subjects pardon, with with a free and general pardon, as it was called, though the abundance of exceptions limited the benefit to few perfons. All thole were excluded who had been condemned for denying the king's fupremacy, or for transgreffing some one of the fix articles of the bloody statute, and even those who were only accused of thefe crimes which were then unpardonable. The countefs of Salifbury, cardinal Fole's mother, and Thomas Cromwell were excepted by name.

> As Cromwell's execution had been deferred, he was in fome hopes of obtaining his pardon, and the more, as having writ to the king a very fubmiffive letter, he was fo moved with it that he caufed it to be thrice read. But the follicitations of the duke of Norfolk and Gardiner, feconded by those of Catherine Howard, who acted in their favour, rendered the endeavours of the prifoner fruitlefs. The king figned a warrant to cut off his head the 28th of July 9, about fix weeks after his condemnation. As Cromwell left a fon of whom he was very fond, he would fay nothing on the fcaffold that might do him a prejudice. He contented himfelf with flowing, that he willingly fubmitted to the fentence the law had passed on him. He prayed for the king's profperity, and declared he died in the profession of the catholick religion . These last words were variously interpreted, according to the paffions and prejudices of the two parties in matters of religion. Though it was certain, Cromwell had lived in the opinions of the Lutherans, the contrary party maintained, he recanted at his death, and that by the catholick religion was to be underftood the old religion, prop A tenth, being two shillings in the pound of lands, and twelve pence of goods; and four fifteenths. Hall, fol. 241. Stow, p. 579.

9 Which it feems was done very barbaroufly. Hall, fol. 242.

r His words were, " I pray you " that be here to bear me record, I " die in the catholick faith, not doubt-" ing in any article of my faith, no " nor doubting in any facrament of " the church." Hall, fol. 242.

fefled

felled in the kingdom before all the innovations. The others 1540. pretended, these words ought to be taken in a more gene- ral fenfe, and at most to fignify only the religion which was then established. However, the care Cromwell took when he came to die, to fay nothing that might offend the king, turned to his fon Gregory's advantage, who was this year AA. Pub. created a peer of the realm, by the title of lord Cromwell, XIV.p.708. The office of vicegerent enjoyed by the father died with him. Dec. 18. no one defiring a post to obnoxious to envy, and to fatal to the first possession. Besides, the duke of Norfolk and the bifhop of Winchefter, who were then in great credit, took care not to follicit the king to fill a place, which would engage the perfon who held it, to use all his interest to hinder a reconciliation with Rome *.

Some days after Cromwell's death t, was feen at London Several a fight, which very much perplexed both parties. This was perfons of both relia company of people condemned and executed all together, gions exefome for denying the king's fupremacy, others for maintain- cuted. ing the Lutheran doctrines. Among thefe laft were Robert Hall. Barnes doctor of divinity, Thomas Gerard parfon of Hony- Hollingth lane, and William Jerom vicar of Stepney. These three being impeached before the parliament, were condemned to s Thomas Cromwell from being but a blackfmith's fon at Putney, found means to travel into foreign countries, to learn their languages, and to fee the wars, being a foldier in the duke of Bourbon's army at the facking of Rome. Whence returning, he was re-ceived into cardinal Wolfey's fervice; and after his fall, the king voluntarily, (for his fidelity to his old mafter) took him for his fervant. He obtained fucceflively the offices and dignities of privy counfellor, mafter of the jewel houfe, clerk of the hanaper, principal fecretary of state, justice of the forefts, master of the rolls, lord privy feal, baron, the king's vicegerent in spirituals, knight of the garter, earl of Effex, great chamberlain of England, &c. Herbert, p. 225. Dugdale's Ba-ron, vol. II. p. 370. Strype's Mem. tom. I. p. 363. As his extraction was mean, his education was low; all the learning he had, was, that he had got the New Teflament in Latin by heart. His ministry was in a constant courfe of flattery and fubmiffion, but by that he did great things that amaze one, who has confidered them well. The fetting up the king's fupremacy, and the rooting out the monaftick flate in England, confidering the wealth, numbers and zeal of the monks, were bold undertakings, and executed with great method. But in the end, an un-fortunate marriage, to which he advifed the king, not proving acceptable, and he being unwilling to deftroy what himfeif had brought about, was, no doubt, backward in the defign of breaking it when the king had told him of it. And then, upon no other visible ground, but because Anne of Cleves grew more obliging to the king than the was formerly, the king fufpected that Cromwell had betrayed his fecret, and engaged her to a fofter deportment, on defign to prevent the divorce, and did upon that difgrace and destroy him. He carried his greatness with wonderful temper and moderation, and was thankful to mean periors of his old acqua ntance. Burnet, tom I. p. 284. Stow, p. 580. Hollingfh. p. 952.

t July 30. Hall, fol. 243.

Hh 3

1540. be burned upon a general acculation of fowing herefy, perverting the fcriptures, and maintaining errors deftructive of religion, without the act's mentioning any particulars, and in all appearance, without the parliament's examining the proofs. By the fame act were condemned to fuffer the fame punishment four men, one of whom was accused of maintaining the papal authority, another for holding correspondence with cardinal Pole, a third for defigning to furprize Calais, a fourth for harbouring a rebel^u, and laftly, three more convicted of denying the king's fupremacy ". All thefe were burned or hanged at the fame time and place. It is to be prefumed, they were not admitted to fpeak for themfelves, fince Bariles, after a declaration of his faith to the people, afked the fheriff whether he knew why he was to fuffer. The fneriff answering, he did not, he turned to the stake and faid, the punishment he was going to fuffer plainly taught him the crime of which he was supposed to be guilty. He prayed however for the king, and even for Gardiner whom he fuspected to be the author of his death. The bishop endeavoured to clear himfelf by a printed apology, but had the misfortune not to be believed x.

On the 8th of August, Catherine Howard the duke of Howard de- Norfolk's niece y was declared queen, the king having privately married her fome time before. She was fo devoted to the duke her uncle, and the bifhop of Winchefter, that fhe was entirely guided by their counfels. As fhe had a great afcendent over the king, very likely fhe would have induced. him to give himfelf over to the guidance of these two minifters, who were preparing to procure by her means great alterations in religion, had not her fall, which will be prefently related, confounded their projects. However, they improved as much as poffible fo favourable a juncture, to ftrike at the reformation and the reformed. Certainly Cranmer was then in a very dangerous fituation. He could not > u Thefe four were, Gregory But-tolph, Alam Damplip, Edmund Brin-Bolme, and Clement Philpot, who were attainted for affifting Reginald Pole, adhering to the bifhop of Rome, cenying the king's fupremacy, and defigning to furprize the town of Calais. Derby Gunnings, was also attainted for affifting Fitzgerald a traitor in Ireland. Burnet, tom. I. p. 297.

w Thomas Abell, Richard Fetherfion, and Edward Powell. Hall, fol. 243. Stow, p. 581.

xAt the fame time was attainted and executed the lord Hungerford. His crimes were, herping a heretical chaplain, applying to a conjurer to know how long the king was to live, and the practifing beafliality. Herbert, p. 225. Hall, fol. 247.

y She was daughter of Edmund Howard (third fon of Thomas duke of Norfolk, fon of John first duke of Norfolk) by Joyce daughter of Sir Richard Culpeper of Hollingburn in Kent. Dugdale's Baron, vol. Il. p. 272.

doubt

Hall.

Catherine clared queen, Hall. Stow. Herbert. The friends of the old religion triumph at it.

Defigns againft Cranmer. Burnet.

OF ENGLAND.

doubt that the authors of Cromwell's ruin, defired his de- 1540. ftruction with the fame ardour, nay, were privately working it. Complaints of him were already heard in feveral places, and even a member of parliament z faid openly in the house, he was the protector and head of the innovators. These things would have doubtless taken effect, had his enemies had a little more time to prepare all their plots. But as they knew the king had a real effeem for him, they intended to proceed by degrees, plainly perceiving, they could not without danger to themfelves, prefs his ruin fo directly as Cromwell's. Befides, there was but one article which gave them any advantage upon Cranmer, namely, religion, in which too he had been very cautious, well knowing that the way to advance the reformation under fuch a prince as Henry, was not directly to oppose his will.

The change produced at court by Cromwell's difgrace and Exposition the new queen's advancement was quickly perceived. The of the chrif-tian doccommissioners appointed to draw up a declaration of the trine, which chriftian doctrine, having prefented their work to the king, every one he ordered it to be immediately published a. Though the was obliged declaration corrected fundry abuses, the popsifh party had so It is very prevailed, that inflead of promoting, it fenfibly obstructed difadvantathe reformation, as it is easy to see by the abstract doctor geous to the Burnet gives of it in his hiftory of the reformation of Eng- reformation. land. However, as feveral principles were laid down which T. I. p. 286, might be of great use in a more favourable juncture, the re- &c.

z Sir John Geftwick knight of the fhire for Bedfordshire. Burnet, tom. I. p. 285.

a It was published with a preface written by those who had been employed in it. First, the true nature of faith is flated. After this, there followed an explanation of the apoffles creed, with practical inferences. From that they proceeded to examine the fe-ven facraments. Then followed an explanation of the ten commandments, which contains many good rules of morality. After that, an explanation of the lord's prayer was added. Then followed an exposition of the angel's falutation of the bleffed virgin, and the ave-maria explained. The next article is about free will, which they fay must be in man. After this they handled juftification. Next good works are explained, which are faid to be abfelutely seceffury to falvation. The method they fellowed was this, (as appears in fome authentick writings,) first, the whole business they were to confider was divided into fo many heads or queries, and these were given to fo many bifhops and divines, and at a prefixed time every one brought in his opinion in writing upon all the queries. When their answers were given in, two were appointed to compase them, and draw an extract of the particulars, in which they agreed or difagreed ; which the one did in Latin, the other in English. As this was the way that was used conterming the feven facroments, (as may be feen Collect. N. 21, vol. I, of Burnet's Reformation,) fo 'tis reafonable to believe they proceeded with the fame maturity in the reft of their deliberations, though the papers are loft. Burnet, tom. I. p. 285, &c.

. Hh 4

formers

Burnet,

formers were glad, in hopes these principles would serve one - day to deftroy the errors advanced in the declaration. On the other hand, the popifh party thought they had gained much, becaufe they faw doctrines laid down, to which probably the reformers would never confent, and hoped this oppolition would draw the king's indignation upon their whole party. As for themfelves, having always had an abfolute compliance for the king, they intended to purfue the fame courfe, in order to put him entirely into the disposition they Reformation defired. Other commissioners, who were ordered to reform of the mif-the miffals, made fo flight alterations, that excepting a few confiderable, razures of those collects, in which the pope was prayed for b, there was nothing changed, nor was it neceflary to reprint the mass books. Thus by the credit of the duke of Norfolk and Gardiner, fupported by the new queen, archbifhop Cranmer, and those of his party faw a ftorm approaching, which probably would overwhelm them all. Perhaps it was very fortunate for them, that the king was diverted fome time by other affairs, from his attention to what concerned religion.

Theemperor breaks his word' with Francis. Bellai. Mezerai.

The emperor's paffage through France feemed at first to create a fincere reconciliation between him and Francis. During his flay at Paris, he politively promifed to give the duchy of Milan to the duke of Orleans. But when Francis preffed him to fign an inftrument of inveftiture, he answered fuch an act would be looked upon as extorted, if dated in France, and that it was more honourable for him and the king too, that it fhould be figned in fome town of Flanders. Afterwards, when he was out of France, he found fome fresh excuse not to perform his promise. Mean while, he subdued the Gantois, and punished them feverely for the trouble they had given him of a journey to Flanders. After that, when Francis claimed his promife, he clogged it with fuch reftrictions, that it was eafy to perceive he had no mind to part with a country, by which Spain had a communication with his other dominions in Italy and Germany. Francis vexed to be thus deceived turned out of favour chancellor Poyet, and conftable Montmorency, who had advifed him to take the emperor's word.

b And of Thomas Becket's office, and the offices of other faints, whole days were by the king's injunctions no more to be observed. So the old books ferved still. But in queen Mary's time, care was taken that pofferity fhould not know how much was dashed out or changed. For as all the parifhes were required to furnish themselves with new complete books of the offices, fo the dashed books were every where brought in and deftroyed. Burnet, tom. I. p. 294.

About

About the end of the year 1540, there were fome beginnings of a quarrel between Francis and Henry, which end- ed at length in a war. Francis ordered a fortress to be Beginning of built at Ardres, and a bridge to be made over to the Eng- a quarrel lifh pale. But the governor of Calais not fuffering this in-Francis and croachment, fent a detachment of his garrifon and beat down Henry. the bridge. The French rebuilt it, and the English demo-Hall. lifhed it a fecond time. Whereupon the king of France ordering marshal de Biez to raife troops in Picardy, Henry reinforced the garrifon of Calais c, and repaired the fortifications. Mean while the two kings willing to avoid a rupture upon fo flight an occafion, agreed to fend commiffioners d upon the fpot, with powers to adjust the difference. But the conference producing no good effect, each provided for his defence in case of an attack.

It was this year that the famous jefuitical order was The order of founded by a bull of Paul III. dated the twenty feventh of the jefuits. September ^c.

The uneafiness the emperor had given Henry for some 1541. time was now almost vanished, fince Francis had been difappointed in the affair of Milan. Henry knew fufficiently Henry fears that prince's temper and character, to forefee without much the emperor difficulty that he would foon break with the emperor. A and pope, war between these two monarchs could not but be advantageous to Henry. It would of courfe procure him quiet, and ~ 3 × 3.1

c He fent fifteen hundred workmen, to wall and fortify Guifnes, and five hundred foldiers to defend them. And also Henry Howard, earl of Surrey, William Fitzwilliams, earl of Southampton, and John lord Ruffel, were fent over with two hundred horfe. Hall, fol. 243.

d The English commissioners were Edward Seymour, earl of Hertford, and Sir Edward Karne. Herbert, p. 226.

e The founder of this order was Inigo (or Ignatius) de Levola of Guipuscoa in Spain. He was born 1492, the very year the Indies were difcovered, and Granada taken by Ferdinand. He lived obscurely till he came to twenty nine years of age, and then turned foldier in the wars of Navarre 1521, where being hurt in the knee, the pain thereof feems to have wakened devotion in him to a religious life; for as foon as he recovered, he went to pur lady of Montferrat, and offered his fword and dagger; then giving his cloaths to a poor man, took upon him a fhirt and miferable habit, which he girt about him with a rope of rushes; and in these arms (as Sandoval terms them) he watched one whole night before our lady, and fo went to an hospital three leagues off, and there attended fick perfons, whence he travelled to the Holy Land; being returned, and in his thirty third year, he hegan to learn grammar at Barcelona, which in two years he attained. Then he went to the university of Alcala, and fo to Salamanca, where be-ing oppofed and perfecuted, he left all and came to Paris, and there studied till he had found divers others, with whom he agreed to return in pilgrimage to Jerusalem. Thus about 1536 going to Venice, he flay'd till his companions overtook him, and went from thence to Rome, where he obtained of Paul III. the foundation of the jefuits order 1540. Herbert, p. 226.

489 1540.

enable

THE HISTORY

enable him to preferve an equality of power between them, which was the firmest foundation of his own and his kingdom's fecurity. So fearing nothing from the pope or the emperor, or the king of France, or his own fubjects, whofe attempts must be in vain without a foreign aid, he confined himfelf wholly to his domeftick affairs. He had chiefly two things in view. The first was, to preferve and even enlarge the authority he had acquired; the fecond, to take care that no alterations should be made in religion, but such as he himfelf judged reafonable. These were the two affairs which wholly employed him. As he was politively bent upon these two points, and the parliament durft not oppose his will, it may be eafily judged that none of his ministers had the courage to contradict him in any thing. So, it was himfelf alone that ordered every thing according to his fancy, his council only approving his motions. However, there were in the council, as well as in the kingdom, two oppofite parties with respect to religion. But every one had always his eyes upon the king, to try to difcover his thoughts for fear of combating his opinion.

Archbishop Cranmer was at the head of the party who wifhed for a greater reformation. He was still very much effeemed by the king, especially on account of his integrity. But fincerity, which he profeffed, rendered him unfit for political affairs, in a court where inftead of hearkening to reafon, justice, and equity, the king's inclination only was to be confidered.

" Chancellor Audley was a perfon of good fenfe. He ferved the reformers when he could without danger. But he was too much a courtier to infift upon what he judged reafonable, Audley's.

Norfelk's.

if the king was againft it. The duke of The duke of Norfolk was as eminent for his merit as for his birth. He was reckoned a good general, but was still a better courtier. Ever fubmiffive to the king's will, he outwardly approved whatever he was pleafed to command him. But in private, he grieved at all the late innovations in réligion, and could not endure either the reformation or the reformed. He would have been glad to fee the king reconciled to the pope, but the finall hopes of their reconciliation made him very cautious how he offended fo unforgiving a mafter. Neverthelefs, as the king was not always in the fame disposition, the duke found frequent occasion to ferve his party, efpecially in the punifhment of those who difliked the fix articles, and were fo hardy as publickly to fhow it. In a word, he was as head of the favourers of the pope, and 4 490 1541.

He is abfolute in his kingdom. .

Cranmer's character.

Burnet.

and the old religion. But he carefully concealed from the 1541. king his inclination for the former; and as for the latter, he fhowed his zeal only in fupporting what the king had retained.

Gardiner bishop of Winchester was in the fame fenti-Gardiner's. ments, and behaved in the fame manner. But he was very far from being fo much efteemed by the king, who made ufe of him however becaufe he was pliant and dexterous, and had an extensive knowledge of foreign affairs. As this knowledge rendered him of greater infight than the reft of the ministers, he fometimes engaged the king in proceedings, the confequences whereof might be advantageous to his party, and of which the king himfelf did not always know the motive. By a blind fubmiffion to the king's will, he kept himfelf in fome degree of fayour, being convinced himfelf, and having alfo convinced his friends, that compliance was the only means to procure a revocation of what had been done against the pope.

Bonner bifhop of London was also one of the heads of the Bonner's. fame party, but however always ready to facrifice every thing to his fortune. He was naturally bold, paffionate, and exceffively cruel, as he plainly flowed upon many occafions. As he was of very little merit, he supported himself by courting those who were in favour, and by making the king's will the rule of his actions.

Queen Catherine blindly followed the directions of the Thequeen's. duke of Norfolk her uncle, and ufed what power fhe had over the king, to support the credit of the enemies of the reformation.

Such was the fituation of the court, when the king, freed from his foreign affairs, was wholly employed in his domeftick concerns. The kingdom however was in profound tranquillity, because the terror with which people were seized filenced all contradiction. In December the last year, he began the foundation of the new bifhopricks, by converting the abbey of Weslminster into a bishop's fee f. In this Foundation year 1541 he founded three more, Chefter 8, Gloucester h, of fix new bishopricks.

f With a deanery and twelve prebends, with the officers for a cathedral and a choir. Of which Thomas 'Thirleby was the only bishop. Rymer's Feed, tom. XIV. p. 705. 3 August the fourth, out of the monastery of St. Werburgh at Chef-ter, with a deanery and fix prebends. Rymer, ibid. p. 71S.

h September the third, out of the monastery of St. Peler's at Gloucester, with a deanery and fix prebends. Ibid. P. 724.

1541. Low Act. Pub. XIV.p.731, 748, 754. Burnet.

and Peterborough i, and the next year Oxford * and Briftol 1. These foundations, and some others of little confequence, were the only charitable uses to which he applied the immenfe riches acquired by the suppression of the abbies m. His courtiers magnified thefe pious acts, whilft others took notice of the little proportion between feven or eight thousand pounds a year, employed in these uses, and what was acquired by the ruin of near feven hundred religious houses.

Mean while, Henry had a mind to fhow his zeal for religion, as if his fole aim was to procure the eternal falvation of his people. The book of the exposition of christian faith being printed, he prefixed an ordinance, declaring all exposition of those to be hereticks, who believed more or less than was contained in that book n. However, as it was not poffible that all should conform to it, and it does not appear, any perfon fuffered upon that account in the courfe of this year, it is likely the king had intimated that he defired not his ordinance to be rigoroufly executed.

Whilft Henry was congratulating himfelf upon triumphing over the pope, and enjoying a tranquillity which the court of Rome had in vain attempted to difturb, the eyes of all Europe were fixed upon what passed between the emperor and the king of France, and upon the preparations in Turkey. The war between the emperor and Francis was going to be renewed, 'but very unfeafonably for the emperor, when Soliman was preparing to invade Hungary, on occa-fion of the death of John de Zapol, competitor of the king of the Romans. These two princes, after long contending for the crown of Hungary being at last tired of war, agreed that Zapol fhould hold, during his life, what he pofieffed

i The fourth of the fame month, out of Peterborough abbey, with a deanery and fix prebends. Ibid. p.

731. k September the first, out of the abbey of Ofney at Oxford, with a deanery and fix prebends. Ibid. p.

754. I June the fourth, out of St. Auflin's at Briftol, with a deanery and fix prebends. Ibid. p. 748.

m The priories at most cathedrals, as Canterbury, Winchefter, Durham, Worcefter, Carlifle, Rochefter, and Ely, were also converted into deaneries, . and colleges of prebends-As all this came far fhort of what the king had once intended, fo Cranmer's defign was quite difappointed. For he had projected, that in every cathedral there fhould be provision made for readers of divinity, and of Greek and Hebrew, and a great number of fludents to be both exercifed in the daily worship of God, and trained up in fludy and devotion; whom the bishop might tranfplant out of this nurfery, into all the parts of his dioccfe. Burnet, tom. I. p. 300, 301.

A He added a fort of a preface about two years after the book was first publifhed. Idem. p. 293.

faith. Herbert. Burnet.

The king declares he-reticks all those who reject the

Francis prepares to make war upon the emperor. P. Daniel.

with the title of king, but after his death the crown fhould descend to Ferdinand. Zapol dying, and leaving a fon called Stephen, under the guardianship of his mother, Ferdinand expected that the treaty fhould be executed, and would have taken poffeffion of all Hungary. But young Zapol's mother implored Soliman's protection, which he readily granted, intending to improve this diffention, to become mafter of Hungary, and penetrate afterwards into the imperial territories.

The emperor feeing Hungary threatened with a powerful The empeinvafion, which might be of fatal confequence to Germany, ror's artifice used all his art to pacify the protestants, without giving them liman from however any fatisfaction, endeavouring only to amufe them, invading and obtain fome affiftance against the Turk. On the other Hungary. hand, he laboured to perfuade Soliman, that he was in perfect union with the kings of France and England, that the dread of a general league of the christian princes might di-vert him from his design. Wherefore, he tried to amuse Francis with putting him in hopes, he would give the Low Countries to his fecond fon, and erect them into a kingdom. At the fame time he gave the Ottoman port to understand, Francis to this affair was in a manner concluded. Francis fell not into break the the fnare. But hearing from all parts that the emperor's mi- meafures, nifters every where gave out, the negotiation was upon the lendsambafpoint of conclusion, he refolved to fend an ambasilador to fadors to Venice, and another to Conftantinople, to undeceive the Venice. emperor of the Turks, and the fenate of Venice. He Mezerai. chofe for these embassies Rincon and Fregola, who set out in Bellai. order to pass through Italy. But the marquis of Guasto, The ambaf-governor of Milan, receiving advice that they were to em-murdered on bark at Turin, and go down the Po, caufed them to be fo the Po. narrowly watched, that they were murdered in the boat. Francis made great noise about the affaffination, but the emperor gave him no fatisfaction . This was a fresh occasion of the rupture between the two monarchs.

About the fame time, the emperor called a diet at Ratif- The interim bon for the fifth of April. As it was then no proper junc- granted in Germany to ture to diffurb the protestants, the diet resolved at last to the protest grant them a fecond delay, which was called the interim, tants. that they might continue quiet and more readily engage to Sleidan. furnish supplies against the Turks.

In the mean time, the king of the Romans ordered Buda, Battle of capital of Hungary, to be invested, in hopes of taking it Buda gained before the Turks should arrive. But the fiege proving more Turks, difficult than was expected, the Turks had time to relieve

it,

493 1541. 494

1541.

it, and give the Germans battle, over whom they obtained a fignal victory. Shortly after, Soliman coming to Hungary made his entry into Buda, and under colour of taking young Zapol under his protection, became mafter of the city, and great part of the kingdom.

Mean while, the emperor having ended the diet, inftead of marching into Hungary to affift the king his brother, took the rout of Italy, and embarking at Portovenere with an ar-Hig d'Esp. my of twenty thousand men, failed for Africa to make war upon Barbaroffa, who had made himfelf king of Algiers. This proceeding gave occasion for many speculations. It was ridiculed at the French court, as if, inftead of fighting the Turks, he had fought a pretence to fly from them. But as the African expedition was projected the beginning of the year, and the troops were now on the coaft of Italy, it is certain he would not have had time to relieve the king of the Romans, if he had attempted to march his army into It miscarries. Hungary. However, he landed his army near Algiers the twenty second of October. But, two days after a sudden and violent ftorm destroyed part of his fleet. This accident obliged him to reimbark the beginning of November, after having loft good part of his troops and fhips. It is pretended, Francis out of mere generofity would not proclaim war against him, whilst employed in this expedition. It is however difficult to believe that Francis, who actually held intelligence with Soliman, and afterwards forupled not to make use of the affiftance of the Turks, should scruple to interrupt the emperor's defigns against the infidels of Africa.

> Henry faw with pleafure that the king of France and the Turks were going to find the emperor employment, which would hinder him from thinking of England. But though he was easy in that respect, he was however in some pain with regard to the king of Scotland, who, though his nephew, had no reason to love him, and could easily affist the English malecontents, who were very numerous in the northern counties. Henry was afraid also, that a religious zeal would carry that prince to undertake fomething against him, because he began to fuffer himself to be governed by the churchmen, who under colour of perfuading him to deftroy herefy, ftrongly attached him to the pope's interest. The reformed had now been burned many years in Scotland. But these punishments caused there the same effects as elsewhere, that is, they increased instead of lesiening the number, and yet the clergy were still obstinately bent to root them out with fire and fword. James V. was a prince much

The emperor's expedit on isto Africa. Mezerai.

Mezerai.

Affairs of Scotland, Buchanan.

Burnet,

much addicted to his pleafures, and very greedy of money. Befides, he had feveral natural fons whom he could u not enrich as he wished, because he had exhausted his treafure in needless expences. There were two parties in his court, whereof the one favoured the king of England and the reformed, and the other, chiefly confifting of churchmen, was entirely against Henry, and continually strove to induce the king to extirpate all who fwerved from the old religion. The former endeavoured to perfuade him to imitate the king of England his uncle, and fecure a large revenue by the suppression of the abbies. The latter represented to him, that by firicily executing the laws against hereticks, he would raife by forfeited eftates above a hundred thousand crowns a year. After some consideration, James closed with the last advice, and fuffering the clergy to take their own courfe, there followed in Scotland a violent perfecution °.

Henry perceiving the king his nephew to be thus governed Henry reby perfons wholly addicted to the court of Rome, feared, he fumes his would at laft be led to unite against him with the pope and giaing the emperor. This apprehension feemed to him the more just, king of as he could hardly rely any longer on the affiftance of the Scotland. king of France, who was wont to direct the court of Scot-Buchanan. land, because that ancient ally was grown extremely cold to him. Whereupon, he refolved to use all his art to gain the king his nephew, and perfuade him to break, like him, with the pope. To this end he fent ambaffadors to defire an interview at York, not questioning that in an amicable conference he should have eloquence enough to perfuade him to what he pleased. James accepted the overture, and pto- James agrees mifed to come to York, where Henry went and expected to it. him. But the Scotch ecclefiafticks and their whole party fo Herbert, bestirred themselves to prevent this interview, the confequence whereof they perceived, that they fucceeded at laft, and prevailed with the king to find fome pretence to be excufed.

· George Buchanan, the famous Scotch historian, was in danger at this time, and would have died with the reft, had not he escaped out of prifon. See his hiftory of Scotland, 1. 14. The fharpness of his poems against the clergy was the caule of his confinement. He went beyond fea, and lived twenty years in exile, and was forced to teach fchool most part of the time.

In his writings there appears not only all the beauty and graces of the Latin tongue, but a great vigour of mind and quickness of thought. His file is fo natural and nervous, and his reflections on things are fo folid, (befides his immortal peems) that he is juily filed the best of our modern authors. Burnet, tom. I. p. 211.

Mean

Henry goes and ftays for him at York. Proclamation in favour of all the people. Hall. Stow. Burnet. T. I. p. 311. Herbert.

496

1541.

Mean while, Henry who knew nothing of this change, impatiently waited at York for the day appointed for the interview. In the interval, he iffued out a proclamation, that all who had been aggrieved for want of juffice by any of his former minifters, thould come to him and his council for redrefs. His aim was to throw all paft mifcarriages on Cromwell, and put his fubjects, particularly the northern people, in hopes of better times P. But whilf the was preparing for the king of Scotland's reception, he received letters of excufe that he could not have the honour of waiting upon him. He was extremely provoked, and this refufal, which he deemed an affront, foon after caufed a breach between the two kingdoms. But his vexation at this affair was not comparable to the unexpected affliction he met with upon his return to London.

The queen's lewdnefs is difcovered. Hall. Hollingfh. Burnet.

Herbert. p. 228.

Since his last marriage, he daily blessed God for the happinefs he enjoyed with his queen, and upon all occafions publickly teltified his extreme fatisfaction : nay, during his journey to York, defiring to give God thanks in a manner fuitable to the fentiments of his heart, he ordered his confeffor 9 to draw up a particular thankfgiving, and prayed him to join with him in the fame. All this fhewed his efteem and tender affection for the queen, who feemed to have the fame fondness for him. But when he came to London, he heard things which it would have been well for him never to have known. Whilft he was at York, one John Lassels came to the archbishop of Canterbury, who remained at London, and told him that his fifter, an old fervant of the duchefs dowager of Norfolk, under whofe care the queen was brought up, faid to him, that the queen had been very lewd before and fince her marriage, and that two men, among others, namely, Dirham and Mannock F had often enjoyed her. Cranmer communicating the fecret to the lord chancellor, and other privy counfellors, it was agreed that the archbishop should inform the king of it, as foon as he returned to London, though they were not igno-

P In April this year, there broke out a new infurrection in Yorkfhire, which was foon fuppreffed. During this progrefs, the places the king paffed through made their fubmiffion to him, thanking him for his pardon, and made him the following prefents: Stamford 201. Lincoln 401. Bofton 501. Lindfey 3001. Kefteven, and the church of Lincoln 501. The chief perfons of Yorkfhire 9001. The archbifhop of York, with three hundred priefts, 6001. The mayors of York, Newcaftle, Hull, 1001. a-piece. Hall, fol. 244.

9 The bishop of Lincoln, on November 1. Herbert, p. 228.

r Two of the duchels of Norfolk's domesticks. Herbert, p. 228. rant of the danger they exposed themfelves to, if the accu- 1541. fation could not be proved. But on this occasion it was no less dangerous to be filent.

Cranmer not knowing how to execute his commiffion, Cranmer chofe to fet it down in writing, and put it in the king's hands *, king of it. defiring him to read it in private. Henry took it at first for Burnet, a calumny, refolving in himself to punish the authors severely. Herbert. Nay, it was with this view only that he was pleafed thoroughly to examine the matter, though with all possible fecrecy, for fear of vexing the queen. He ordered therefore Depositions the lord privy-feal to examine Laffels in private. Laffels are taken in private. boldly flood to what he had faid upon his fifter's report, who also confirmed what she had told her brother. Upon these depositions, some pretence was used to arrest Dirham and Mannock, who difcovered in their examination more circumstances than were defired. They confessed not only that they had lain with the queen, but also that three court ladies, her confidents, were commonly eye-witneffes to her lewd practices. One of the three was the lady Rochford, Several witwho accufed the lord Rochford her hufband of a criminal neffesagainft commerce with queen Anne Bullen his fifter t. They far-Hall. ther deposed, that the king being at Lincoln, one Cul-Burnet. peper, by the lady Rochford's means, was brought into the Hollingfa. queen's chamber at eleven a clock in the night, and ftaid there till four in the morning, and that when he went away the queen gave him a gold chain and a rich cap. Moreover, the queen had taken Dirham into her fervice, which shewed she intended to continue the fame course of life. The queen at first denied all. But in a fecond exami- The queen's nation the confessed ", that before marriage the had pro- confession. Herbert. ftituted herfelf to feveral men. This confession shook the Herbert, king's resolution, who lamenting his missortune, could notforbear burfting out into tears. In fhort, after Dirham, Mannock, and Culpeper were condemned to die ", he was pleased the queen's impeachment should be brought before s November 2. Herbert, p. 228.

t In an original letter fent from divers of the council to William Paget our ambaffador then in France, wherein all the circumstances of the affair are fet forth at large, it appears that there were three fundry women one after another, that had lain in the fame bed with them when Dirham lay with the queen. One of thefe women the queen had taken into her fervice as well as Dirham. See the VOL. VI.

letter in lord Herbert, p. 228. Compl. Hift.

" To the archbishop of Canterbury, who took the confession of the fame in writing fubfcribed with her hand. Herbert, p. 229. This confession is extant in Burnet's Hist. Ref. tom. III, Collect. p. 171. whereby it appears that the confested more than enough.

w Dirham and Culpeper were executed at Tyburn, December 10. Hall, fol. 245. Ii

497

the

498

the parliament, which met the 16th of January the next 1541. year 1542.

A& Pub. 1542.

-Act of attainder against the queen and her accomplices. Burnet. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

The commissioners * named by the parliament to exa-XIV.p.737, mine the queen, reported, that the facts the was accufed of, were fufficiently proved. Whereupon both houses declared her guilty, and petitioned y the king that the might be punished with death, together with the lady Rochford, accomplice of her lewd practices, the duchefs dowager of Norfolk, the lord William Howard and his lady z, the countels of Bridgewater, five other women, and four men, for milprifon of treafon, in concealing what they knew of the queen's vicious life. Here again may be observed, the fervileness of the parliament, who did not dare to condemn the queen and her accomplices, without knowing whether the king would be pleafed to fuffer them to be punished. They did not proceed in this manner with regard to Anne Bullen and the lord Rochford, becaufe the king's authority was not arrived to that height, as at the time I am speaking of. The king confenting they fhould be punished, they were condemned to die by an act of attainder. There was alfo a very extraordinary claufe in the act, declaring : " That > * Cranmer, the duke of Suffolk, the earl of Southampton, and the bi-shop of Westminster examined the queen, January 28. How much she confessed 'to them is not very clear, neither by the journal nor the act of parliament, which only fays, " fhe " confeffed," without mentioning the particulars. Burnet, vol. I. p. 312. Journals of parliament.

y The bill for her attainder. was read January 21, for the first time; and for the fecond and third times, Feb. 6. and 8. Journals of Parl .----The act, paffed in both houfes, began with petitioning the king: I. Not to be troubled, fince it might fhorten his life. 2. To pardon every thing spoken against the queen. - 3. That the queen and her accomplices might, &c. Burnet, tom. I. p. 313.

z Rapin, by mistake, supposes these to be her father and mother, whereas they were her uncle and aunt. Her father was the lord Edmund Howard. As the family of the Howards spread themfelves into feveral branches, in order to prevent confusion, it will be proper to infert here a fhort genealogical account of that family, which shall be carried on in due time. Sir Robert Howard (temp. Hen. VI.) married Margaret daughter and coheir to Thomas 'de Mowbray duke of Norfolk ; by whom he had John, created duke of Norfolk, June 28, 1 Ric. III. and flain afterwards at Bofworth fight, who married, 1. Catherine, daughter of William lord Molins, by whom he had Thomas created earl of Surrey, 1 Rich. III. and reftored to the fame title 4 Hen. VII. and to that of duke of Norfolk 5 Hen. VIII. 2. Margaret daughter of fir John Chedworth. The faid Thomas married, firft, Elizabeth daughter and fole heir to fir Frederick Tilney, by whom he had Thomas the third duke of Norfolk, fir Edward knight of the garter and high admiral, and Edmund father of Catherine, fifth wife of Henry VIII. His fecond wife was Agnes, fifter and heir of fir Philip Tilney, by whom he had William created baron of Effingham, March II: (I Mary) and Thomas who died in the Tower in 1537, where he was confined about Margaret Douglass daughter of the queen of Scotland. Dugdale's Baron. vol. II. p. 265-278.

" whoever

" whoever knew any thing of the incontinence of a queen, 1542. " should reveal it under the pains of treason : that if the ⁶⁶ king or his fucceffors fhould intend to marry a woman as " a virgin, if the not being fo, did not declare the fame " to the king, it fhould be high treafon; and all who knew " it, and did not reveal it, were guilty of misprision of trea-" fon: that if the queen or the princefs of Wales should " procure any by meffages or words, to know her car-" nally; or any other by meffages or words fhould follicit " them; they, their counfellors and abbettors, are to be " adjudged high traitors."

Henry giving his affent to the act by his letters patents * The queen the queen and the lady Rochford were beheaded on Tower- is beheaded. hill the 12th of February. 1 The queen flood to what the Burnet. had confessed, concerning the miscarriages of her former Herbert, life before she was married; but denied upon her falvation, Stow. that fhe had ever defiled the king's bed. As for the lady Rochford, fhe died unlamented by all. But her death and infamy ferved at least to raife again the reputation of the lord Rochford her hufband, and of queen Anne Bullen, whofe death fhe procured by her evidence, which her own condemnation caused to be universally suspected.

The extreme feverity of the parliament to the queen's The act of relations was much centured by the publick. It was thought parliament is centured, unnatural to punish a grandmother for not discovering her Burnet. grand daughter's incontinence b. Accordingly the king moderated the feverity, by pardoning her and most of those who were condemned, some of whom however remained long in prifon. As for the laft claufe, which made it treafon for a woman, courted by the king, not to reveal the lofs of her virginity, it was turned into ridicule. People jeftingly faid, the kings of England for the future could only marry widows, there being no reputed maid. who would run the hazard of being attainted of treafon, in cafe the king happened not to like her c.

² Which he was empowered to do by this act. He did it Feb. 11.

b It was not her parents (as Rapin repeats here again by mistake) but her grandmother, the old duchefs of Norfolk (under whom the had been bred) that people thought was cruelly dealt by, for not telling the king her granddaughter was a whore, which would have been inconfistent with the rules of justice or decency. Her parents feem to have been dead before now, feeing there is nothing faid of her father fince 12 Henry VIII. Dugdale, vol. II. p. 272.

c This part of the act was afterwards repealed in the first parliament of Edward VI,

112

This

This affair being ended, the parliament confirmed ^d an 1542. act paffed in Ireland, whereby that island was erected into Ireland is a kingdom. From thenceforward the kings of England erected into inferted among their titles, that of king of Ireland, whereas a kingdom. before they were ftiled only lords e. Herbert.

Before the parliament broke up, the king began in fome measure to shew his intention to feize the colleges and hofpitals as he had done the abbies. But the execution of this defign was very difficult. By the local statutes of most of them, the governors, prefidents, or any of the fellows, had no power to furrender the lands belonging to their houfes, without the confent of the whole fociety. So it was not eafy to gain whole bodies of men, who were fo much concerned to keep the revenues on which they fubfifted. It is true, the king had prevailed with fome, who were not bound by fuch express flatutes, to refign their houses to him. But, as he had his eye upon all, an expedient was to be found, for the reft to follow this example without breaking their oath. To that end, all the local statutes of colleges and hospitals were annulled by act of parliament, and the governors, prefidents and fellows were no more to be fworn to the obfervance thereof. This obstacle being removed, a few more were furrendered to the king. But this affair was not entirely finished till 1545, by a much shorter method.

Whilft the king's affairs were thus transacting in the parliament, the convocation, which fat at the fame time, were much divided about the new translation of the bible, that was going to be published. Many affirmed, it was full of faults, and to fuffer it to be read before it was revifed, would be very injurious to the people. Gardiner moved this difpute, in hopes the revifal would take up fome time, and the king in the mean while alter his mind f. His party was fo numerous, that he would have carried his point, if Cranmer, who perceived his defign, had not moved the king to refer d January 23, as appears by the journals.

e Among other acts, these that follow were alfo then made: 1. That perfons, who by privy tokens and counterfeit letters, deceitfully obtain any money, goods, or chattels, shall fuffer fuch punishment (except death) as shall be appointed by those before whom they are convicted. 2. That no perfon, except what has lands, tenements, fees, annuities, or offices, to the yearly value of one hundred pounds, fhall. keep or shoot with any gun. 3. That no man shall be justice of affize in the county where he was born, or dwelleth. 4. By another, the court of furveyors of the king's lands is fettled. And 5. the punifhment of those that are guilty of murder, or bloodshed, within the verge of the king's court. Statut. 33 Henry VIII.

f Gardiner had a fingular conceit. He fancied there were many words in the New Testament of fuch majefty, that they were not to be translated, but

500

Hall.

Stow.

The king

defigns to fuppiels the colleges and hospitals.

Burnet.

An act to pave the way.

Difpute con. cerning the verfion of the bible. Burnet, refer the perufing of the translation to the two universities, 1542. where he had much more interest than in the convocation. Several bishops strenuously opposed it, and some even en-tered a protestation against it s. But all signified nothing, fince the king declared it to be his pleasure : nay, he granted, A.R. Pub. the 12th of March, a privilege to a London bookfeller h to XIV.p.745. print the bible in English. This gives occasion to prefume, the univerfities revifed not the translation, fince it was impoffible they fhould have examined it in fo fhort a space.

OF ENGLAND.

The king wanted money for the war with Scotland, on The king which he was entirely bent, but durst not ask'the commons. wants the Not that he doubted of success, but was afraid of alienating offer him a the hearts of his fubjects, who were much more tender of fubfidy; matters of intereft than of all others. He wished the commons would voluntarily offer him money, without being afked. It was in order to gain their affection, that he com- Stow. manded a sheriff to be imprisoned for arresting a member Hollingsh. of parliament¹, and offered to leave it to them to punish him as they thought fit. On the other hand, he every where borrowed money to let them fee his neceffity k. But but they do for once the commons feigned not to understand this lan- not. guage, being unwilling to introduce the pernicious cuftom of granting the king subfidies unafked. Befides, as they were yet ignorant of the defign of a war with Scotland, they faw no occasion to offer him money. So, the parliament broke up without granting the king any thing, except the act concerning the colleges and hospitals, which was a feed, the fruit whereof he was to gather in due feafon.

The war with Scotland being refolved, Henry fent fir Heendea-William Paget to France, to found Francis I. and try to voursto hinhinder him by fome treaty from affifting the king of Scotland. der the king The ambaffador's inftructions were, to demand of the from affiftking of France, that the treaty of perpetual peace between ingScotland. France and England should be renewed. Francis eafily Herbert, Burnet, perceived there was fome hidden mystery in the overture. T. III. 155. As he knew Henry was difpleafed with the king of Scotland, but must stand in the English bible as they were in the Latin. A hundred of these he put into a writing which was read in convocation. His defign was visibly to make the translation unintelligible to the people. Some of these words were, ecclesia, penitentia, contritus, justitia, justificatio, idiota, elementa, baptizare, martyr, sacramentum, fimulachrum, gloria, &c. Burnet, tom. I. p. 314.

Ii3

g All the bishops of the province of Canterbury, except Ely and St. David's, protested against it. Burnet, p.

315. h Antony Marlar. Rymer, tom.

XIV. p. 745. i George Ferrers, member for Plymouth. Hollingfh. p. 955.

k Stow fays, he took in May a loan of money of all fuch as were valued at fifty pounds or upwards in the book of feblidy, p. 583.

501

he

he did not doubt that he defired the peace to be renewed, on purpose to infert in the new treaty some article to tie up his hands, and prevent him from aiding his ally. He answered therefore, that it was needless to renew a treaty, the conditions whereof the king of England had not performed. The ambaffador replied, there was no fort of terms in the treaty of peace, and confequently his mafter could not be accufed of breaking them. But this dispute was entirely founded on a mistake. The ambassador understood by the treaty of peace, a private treaty of one fingle article, namely, that there fhould be a perpetual peace between France and England. But Francis meant fome other treaties figned the fame day, and which belonged to the first, though this was written apart. It was this feparate treaty which Henry wanted to renew, imagining he fhould thereby hinder Francis from affifting the king of Scotland. But Francis did not defign that, under this pretence, Henry should be suffered to crush an antient ally of France, and France not be able to oppose it. On the contrary, he deemed it a manifest breach of the peace, to attack his allies without any just caufe. Mean while, as neither would mention the king of Scotland, though both had him in their thoughts, Francis, to embarrass Henry demanded pursuant to the former treaties, his affiftance to recover the Milanefe. Henry required on his part, that Francis, according to his promife, should abolish the papal authority in France. These reciprocal demands were more apt to produce a breach than a renewal of the treaties. Befides, the English had already begun hoftilities, by feizing fome French ships which were fupposed to be pyrates, and the French had detained some English veffels by way of reprisal. So, the ambassador having taken his leave without effecting any thing, reported to his mafter, that the king of France was ill inclined to him; that is, he would not, without opposing it, fuffer the king of Scotland to be oppreffed. This was the meaning of Francis's being ill affected to England, he being at that time very far from withing a war with the English, fince he was just going to begin another which he much more defired.

Embaffy of France to the diet of no effect. Sleidan. Francis was fo provoked at all the emperor's artifices, that, to proclaim war againft him, he only fraid to fee him fo embroiled with the Smalcaldick league, that there thould be no more hopes of agreement. To foment the differition, he had fent ambafladors to the diet affembled at Spire, in February, under colour of clearing himfelf from the pretended

502 1542.

ed calumnies he was afperfed with, and particularly from 1542. the imputation of making an alliance with the Turks. His ambaffadors complained to the diet, in very ftrong terms, of the murder of Rincon and Fregofa, pretending that Rincon was fent to Conftantinople, only to diffuade Soliman from his defign of carrying war into Germany. However, in the fequel of their difcourse, they would have perfuaded the German princes, that it was their interest to fortify their frontier towns and abandon Hungary to the Turks. So their prefence at the diet having produced no great effect, they returned very diffatisfied.

Shortly after their departure, the pope's nuncio offered to The pope the diet, in his mafter's name, a council at Trent, The offers a council at catholicks gladly accepted the offer, and thanked the nuncio. Trent. But the protestants rejected it, because they would not have Herbert. a council called by their adverfary, and in a fufpicious place, fince the city of Trent belonged to the king of the Romans. The diet however ended to the emperor's and Ferdinand's fatisfaction, after having unanimoufly refolved to give them a powerful affiftance, under the conduct of the elector of Brandenburg.

Though the protestants refused the pope's offer, Paul III. The calling called a council at Trent for November following, by a of the coun-cil of Trent, bull of the 22d of May. But this was only to amufe the world. He knew that when a war between the emperor and France was going to commence, there would be obftacles enough to hinder the council from allembling.

And indeed at this very time Francis I. was bringing five Francis inarmies into the field, to attack the emperor in five places vades the at once; namely, in Roufillon, Luxemburg, Piedmont, five places, Flanders and Brabant. But the fuccels answered not his Bellai, expectations. The great effort he made this year to invade Mezerai. his enemy, ferved only to difable him to do the like again when he came himfelf to be attacked. The dauphin befieged Perpignan in vain. The duke of Orleans his brother took Luxemburg and Montmedy: but these places were retaken before the end of the campain. As for the other three armies, they performed nothing confiderable.

Whilft Francis was vainly endeavouring to be revenged Henry reof the emperor, Henry came to a final resolution to make folves upon war upon Scotland. He had been in hopes, that in the ex- Scotland. pected conference with the king his nephew, he fhould Buchanan perfuade him to renounce the papal authority, and was ex- Herbert. tremely concerned to see himself disappointed. This affair Burnet. feemed to him of the utmost importance, because not having much to fear from abroad, where the naval forces were 1542. not comparable to his, Scotland was the only country which could give him any uneafinefs. From thence alone could the English malecontents receive any succours, and he remembered with terror, the danger he should have run when the rebels were in arms in the north, had they been fupported by a Scotch army. In this war therefore upon Scotland, his aim was not to make conquests, but to bend the king of Scotland to his will by force, fince he could not do it by fair means. This he deemed abfolutely neceffary, in order to procure a fettled peace. At the time of the northern rebellion, the junctures were very favourable to him; for, being then in ftrict union with France, king James could not engage to fupport the English malecontents without Francis's confent, who inftead of approving fuch a defign, would have rather diverted him from it. But affairs were now upon another foot, fince Henry could no longer rely upon the king of France's friendship. It is true, that prince was not to be much feared, whilft at war with the emperor; but he confidered that the equality of these two monarch's forces would probably oblige them to make peace very foon, and this peace, in which no doubt the pope would interpofe, neceffarily be to his prejudice; nay, it was a queftion whether it would not occasion a league against him, and the king of Scotland join in it. In that cafe, England could be invaded in the north with the more eafe, as the northern counties were most inclined to rebel. It was therefore of very great confequence to Henry to gain the king of Scotland to his interest, fince, being secured from that fide, an invafion was not to be much feared, which he looked upon as impoffible, confidering the fuperiority of his naval forces.

Herbert.

ing

504

He had intended to make use of two ways to gain the king of Scotland in the proposed conference. The first way was, to show him that it was in his power to secure to him the fuccession of the crown of England, after his fon Edward, or remove him from it, fince by the act of parliament made for that purpose, he could call to the fuccession his daughters Mary and Elizabeth, or exclude them for ever. In the former case, king James could not pretend to the crown, till after the posterity of these two princessis was extinct; but in the latter case, he came immediately after prince Edward. As therefore to gain two degrees, was a considerable advantage for the king of Scotland, Henry hoped he would not be so unwise as to flight it. The second way he designed to make use of to win that prince, was to lay before him the advantages which would accrue to him 1542. in cafe he renounced the pope, as well by reafon of the facility this would give him, to fucceed to the crown of England, if there fhould be occafion, as by the riches he would acquire in suppressing the monasteries of Scotland. As James was very greedy of money, Henry did not queftion fucceeding by this fecond means, though the first should prove ineffectual. He was therefore extremely vexed to fee himfelf difappointed of his hopes, by the king his nephew's refufal to meet him at York. He found, the new queen had too great an influence over him, and even fufpected it to be the effect of the intrigues of the pope, the emperor, and perhaps the king of France. So, defpairing to fucceed in his project, by fair means he refolved to try to accomplish it by force.

lay

Scotland was little able to refift England without the af- The defign fistance of France. But Francis was so employed, that there of this war. was no likelihood of his interpoling in the quarrel. Henry hoped therefore, if he could gain at first fome advantage, he should render the Scots less intractable, and more eafily difpofe the king his nephew to hearken to his propofals. Thus the war he intended to wage with Scotland was properly defigned to oblige the Scots to a compliance with his defires, and not founded upon caprice only, or to be revenged of the affront he received, as the hiftorians pretend. However, Hollingth. as he could not difcover the real motives without doing himfelf a prejudice, he pretended a violation of the truce. Tames's denial of fome lands of fmall value lying on the frontiers, and his reception of fome English rebels. But as all He revives this was not very capable of deceiving the world, he be- the pretenthought himfelf of reviving the old pretentions of the kings fovereignty of England to the fovereignty of Scotland. To that pur- of Scotland. pose, he fet out a long declaration, in which was inferted the Declaration memorial largely fpoken of in the reigns of Edward I. and head. Henry VII. containing the pretended proofs of the homage, Hall, Scotland had formerly paid to England. The declarations fol. 247. Burnet. was however fo ambiguoufly expressed, that it plainly appeared, Henry was willing to have it in his power to quit his pretenfions without injuring his honour. It is entirely needlefs to repeat the contents of the memorial. It will fuffice to obferve, that the English writers speak of it, as if the fovereignty of the kings of England over Scotland was there demonftrated, and the bare citation of it fufficient to carry the caufe. Doctor Burnet, though a Scotchman, feems to give into this opinion univerfally fpread in England, fince he fpeaks of 506 1542.

War with Scotland.

Hollingfh.

Buchanan.

Herbert,

of this memorial in his hiftory of the reformation without making any remarks. Perhaps he did not think proper to combat the fentiments of the English without any necessity, in respect to his history.

Henry published not his declaration till his army was just entering Scotland. His defign was to furprize the Scots, which he believed the more easy, as there appeared to be no just cause of breach between the two kingdoms. However, king James hearing that foldiers were raifing in England, put himfelf in a posture of defence, in case he should be attacked. In the mean while, he fent two ambaffadors 1 to the king his uncle, to fee to content him if poffible, or at leaft to gain time till the king of France could affift him. The ambaffadors were long detained at the court of England upon frivolous pretences, and whilft Henry was making his. preparations, he gave them no answer. Nay, they were not fuffered to return but with the army which was to enter their country, under the command of the duke of Norfolk m, and where they were as prifoners. Two other ambaffadors of Scotland who were going to London, meeting the English upon their march were also detained till the army arrived at Berwick.

Mean while, king James hearing the duke of Norfolk was marching towards the north at the head of twenty thoufand men, fent a body of ten thousand to the frontiers, under the command of George Gordon, expecting the reft of the troops who were marching from feveral parts to join him. But Gordon could not hinder the duke of Norfolk from entering Scotland about the end of October n, and ravaging the country north of the Tweed. After this fhort expedition, the Énglish army retired to Berwick, the seafon which. was now very bad preventing them from advancing any farther. In the mean time, king James ordered the lord Maxwell to march with fifteen thousand men, whilft the English were retiring to Berwick. The Scots pretend, upon the news of Maxwell's march, the English retreated in such confusion that they might have been eafily defeated, if Gordon had ventured to attack them, and that the king was extremely The king of angry with him for this difappointment. However, James heading his army in perfon held a council of war, and ap-

> 1 The bishop of Orkney, and James Leirmouth, master of his houshold. Hall, fol. 254.

> m The duke was accompanied with the earls of Shrewfbury, Derby, Cum berland, Surrey, Hertford, Angus, Rutland; and fir Anthony Brown, mafter of the horfe to the king, fir John Gage, comptroller of the houshold, &c. Ibid. n October 21. Ibid.

peared

Hall. Buchanan. Stow. Burnet.

Hall. Buchanan. Lefley.

Scotland is refelved to fight.

. .

peared fully refolved to give battle, let what would be the 1542. confequence. But he was alone of that opinion. On the contrary, the danger to which the kingdom would be expo-

fed in cafe of a defeat was strongly represented to him, In The nobles fhort, as he would not alter his refolution, the generals and refuse to follow him. nobles told him, they would not obey him, if without any Buchanan. neceffity he obstinately exposed the kingdom to fo manifest a hazard. This opposition threw him into a fury. He fwore he would punish their disobedience, and called them all traitors, fince they hindered him from obtaining, as he thought, a certain victory. Cardinal Beaton inspired him with this notion, by telling him, it was impoffible for fuch hereticks as the English to conquer him. The truth is, James was a little diffurbed in his mind, ever fince he had unjuffly put to death a nephew of the duke of Albany, whole apparition was ever prefent to his imagination. So being extremely troubled to be thus difobeyed, he left the command of the army to the lord Maxwell, with orders to march towards the enemy, and remained himfelf within diffance to join him, in case there was occasion to fight. But a few days after He gives the as he was extremely incenfed with his generals, and greatly command of mistrusted them, he gave a commission in form to Oliver Sinclair, Sinclair his minion, to command the army, The new ge-Buchanan, neral, very unfit for fuch a poft, repairing to the camp, Burnet. caufed his patent to be publickly read at which all were offended. This bred fuch difcontent among the troops, that they began to difband, when a body of five hundred Englifh horfe appeared on a hill, where they were posted to watch the motions of the enemy. This fight increased the confufion among the Scotch troops, who imagined the whole Englifh army was approaching to give battle. In this condition, Rout of the being without a general. fince Maxwell's commission was Scotcharmy. revoked and none would obey Sinclair, they chose to retire Buchanan. in a fright, which permitted them not to look back and obferve the small number of their enemies. The English horse Hall. feeing them fly with fuch precipitation, closely purfued them, Stow. Hollingfh. and without meeting any refiftance flew great numbers, took Burnet. prisoners feven lords, two hundred gentlemen, eight hundred foldiers, with four and twenty pieces of ordnance °. Never was victory fo eafily won. Among the chief prifoners were the earls of Glencairn and Caffilis, the lords Maxwell, Somerville, Oliphant, Gray, and Oliver Sinclair the king's favourite.

• The battle or rencounter happened on November 25. Idem, fol. 255.

The

king of Scotland. Buchanan. Hall.

1542.

508

princefs Mary. Buchanan.

Hall. Stow. Hollingfh. Herbert.

Hollingfh. F. 959. Burnet.

He projects tween his fon and the new queen-He fends away the prifoners. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

The news of this rout threw king James into a difinal melancholy, to which he was already too much inclined. Death of the He fancied, his generals and nobles had betrayed him, and in that belief, refolved to put most of them to death. His vexation was still increased, upon hearing that a herald, sent by the duke of Norfolk, was murdered by an English refugee. He immediately feared the ill confequences of fuch an accident, after his late misfortune. So imagining it would be impossible to free himself from his present embarrassiment, he could not withftand his immoderate grief, which brought Birth of the him to his grave the 14th of December 1542. His death happened feven days after the birth of a princefs called Mary, of whom his queen was delivered and who was his only heir. A little before he loft two fons in one day.

Henryorders . Henry not knowing what paffed in Scotland, had ordered the prifoners the Scotch prifoners to be brought to London, where they tobebrought arrived the nineteenth of December P. The next day 9 they were conducted through the city from the Tower, (where they had been confined) to Westminster, where the king was pleafed to fee and talk with them. He expostulated with them, for having by their pernicious counfels perfuaded their king to quarrel with him, and told them they justly bore the punifhment of a war raifed by themfelves. Neverthelefs, as he intended to make use of them to procure such a peace as he defired, he ended his difcourfe with fome obliging expressions, and granted them more liberty, by putting them in the cuftody of feveral noblemen. The earl of Caffilis had the good fortune to fall into the hands of the archbishop of Canterbury, and to receive from him during his fhort flay at London, fuch inftructions as induced him to embrace the reformation when he returned to his own country.

A few days after ', the news of the birth of Mary prina match be- cefs of Scotland, and of the king her father's death arriving together, Henry thought it a favourable juncture to unite Scotland to England by marrying his fon Edward to the new of Scotland. queen of Scotland. He caufed the captive lords to be founded, and finding them inclined to fecond the overture, fet them at liberty, on condition they would give hoftages for their return, in cafe the project of the marriage did not This condition being accepted, they were confucceed.

> p Being conducted by fir Henry Savil, and fir Thomas Wentworth, Herbert, p. 234.

first. Hall, foll. 255. Stow, p. 583. r December 22. Hollingshead, p. 959.

9 Two days after, viz. the twenty ducted

ducted to Newcastle, from whence they returned into their 1542. country. We shall see presently what was the event of this project.

The parliament of England meeting the twenty fecond of 1543. January granted the king a fubfidy s, as well for his charges in the war with Scotland, as for his other occasions. By The parlia-that was meant a war with France, of which there was no the king a longer room to doubt, fince the king was upon the point of fublidy. concluding a league with the emperor. The union which Herbert. was going to be formed between these two monarchs, was Burnet. like to be fo favourable to the adherents of Rome and the old religion, that they questioned not but the destruction of the reformation in England was approaching. However, at this very time they had the mortification to fee an act of parliament paffed, which much checked their hopes. The act An act almoved and at length obtained by Cranmer ran, that lords, lowing the gentlemen, merchants, might have in their houfes an Eng-private lifh bible, with fome other religious books, mentioned in the houses, act, for the inftruction of their families. But it was expresly Burnet. forbid to print, fell, buy, or keep any other religious books, and to preach or fpeak against the ordinance of the year 1540. There was also a very confiderable claufe in the ftatute, Advantagethat the offenders, if ecclefiafticks, fhould not be condemned ous claufe to perform ac-to be burnt till the third offence; and the punifhment of the cufed of laity, not extend beyond forfeiture of goods and chattels herefy. [and perpetual imprisonment.] Moreover, the act allowed the party accused to bring witneffes for his own purgation, which had never been practifed before in the cafe of herefy. Laftly, It was enacted, that the accused should be tried within a year at farthest after the indictment. But on the other power hand, the law of the fix articles was confirmed, and the granted the parliament left it in the king's power to annul or alter king to rethe act at his pleafure. By this last clause the king still peal this act. continued to be mafter of the lives of the reformed, fince by

* This fubfidy was as follows : every perfon worth in goods 201. and upwards, paid two fhillings; from 201. to 101. fixteen-pence; from 101. to 5 l. eight-pence; from 5 l. to 20 s. four-pence. And for lands, fees, and annuities, they paid according to this rate : they that were worth 201, and upwards, paid three shillings in the pound ; from 201. to 101. two fhillings; from 101, to 51, fixteen-pence; and they that were worth from 5 l. to 20 s. paid eight-pence in the pound ; All thefe were doubled on ftrangers. The clergy alfo granted a fubfidy of fix fhillings in the pound ; and every prieft having but an annual ftipend, was to pay fix shillings and eight-pence. These feveral fublidies were to be paid in three years. Stow, p. 585.

repealing

510

1543. -----

Henry concludes a league with Act. Pub. XIV.p.768. February 11. Hall. Herbert. Burnet.

Reasons of Henry's being dif-Francis. Herbert. p. 236.

repealing this act, he could profecute them upon the former statutes t.

A fortnight after the parliament broke up, Henry concluded with the emperor a league, which however was not the emperor, published till June. It was not the interest of England, that the king fhould join with the emperor to render him more powerful. He was already but too potent. On the contrary, it would have been much more proper, in order to keep the balance even, to have affisted France. At least, it is undeniable that a neutrality would have been advantageous to the English. But the king's passion ran counter to the nation's intereft. He was extremely diffatisfied with Francis upon feveral accounts. In the first place, he observed in him a great indifference for his concerns, ever fince he had pleafed with not wanted his affiftance. Secondly, He perceived at length, that all his promifes to renounce, like him, the papal authority tended only to amufe him. He knew, Francis on feveral occafions had blamed his conduct with respect to religion, and ridiculed his marriages. In the next place, he paid neither the yearly penfion of a hundred thousand crowns, nor that of ten thousand for the falt of Brouage, though bound by divers treaties. As for the debt of two millions, Francis indeed could produce acquittances for good part of that fum, but then Henry had received no money, the acquittances being in lieu of the fuccours he had voluntarily promifed to lend him in his former wars. However, there was a round fum ftill left unpaid, and the debtor never endeavoured to fatisfy him. Moreover, Henry had prefented the king of France with what was due to him from the emperor, folely on condition he would perform the treaties, and complained, Francis had not been punctual. But what most offended Henry was, the obstacles Francis had raised him in Scotland by means of a faction, which openly oppofed his defigns. Here was fufficient caule for a breach, if the nation's intereft had been the fame with the king's. But in fuch an oppolition, feldom does it happen that the people's advantage prevails over the fovereign's. Henry refolved therefore to make the king of France fenfible, that it was worth his while to have shown a greater regard for him, and to that end, > t In this parliament, an act was made for authorizing the county and city of Chefter to fend, each, two reprefentatives in parliament; which they used not to do before. And an other for empowering perfons that are not common furgeons to minister medicines, notwithstanding the Statute 1 Henry VIII,

chofe

chofe to be reconciled with the emperor, and join in a league 1543. with him.

Charles V. defired nothing more earneftly. He plainly The advanfaw that with the affiftance of England, he fhould foon bring tages of this the king of France to reafon and deftroy all his hopes of the emperecovering Milan by arms. His conftant fear of Henry's uni- ror's fide. ting with France and the German protestants, caused him to confider the alliance with England as what would enable him to accomplifh his ambitious defigns. He found his account much better in hindering Francis from fetting foot again in Italy, and in fubduing the protestants, than in executing or rather in trying to execute the pope's fentence against Henry, an undertaking which, probably would not have ended to his honour. Befides, the death of queen Catherine his aunt had much leffened and it may be entirely stifled his defire to revenge her. So, at the very time he was complaining to all the princes of Europe that Francis held private intelligence with the Infidels, he fcrupled not to court the alliance of an excommunicated king, who, according to the principles of the Romish church, ought not to have been looked upon with lefs horror than the Turk. One fingle difficulty retarded the Difficulty conclusion of this alliance. The emperor would have Mary upon the queen Catherine's daughter acknowledged for legitimate, the league, which Henry obstinately refused. Nay, he could not grant Burnet. it without condemning his divorce with Catherine, and all his proceedings upon that occasion. He promised however, that purfuant to the power granted him by parliament, he would give Mary a place in the fucceffion, but would never confent, this article fhould be inferted in the treaty. The emperor's friends in England advifed him to be fatisfied with It is rethis verbal promife, apprehenfive as they were that the league, moved. from whence they expected great advantages, would be delayed by this obstacle. Bonner bishop of London, who had been fent into Spain for the negotiation, willingly and ardently endeavoured to accomplifh it, in hopes that an union between the emperor and the king, would re-eftablifh religion in England upon the fame foot as before the divorce.

The treaty was therefore concluded at London the eleventh Treaty of of February 1543. It contained a league for England only league bewith what Henry held in Picardy; and on the emperor's part, emperor and for the provinces of the Low Countries under his dominion ", Henry. without

" The places and dominions mentioned on king Henry's part, are, the kingdoms of England and Ireland, the islands of Wight, Jersey, Guernsey, and without any mention of Spain or Germany. The league was 1543. to this effect :

512

Act. Pub. XIV.p.768. Herbert. p. 236.

That the emperor and the king of England should fend ambaffadors to the king of France to declare to him, that by his follicitations only the Turks had invaded Christendom. That therefore the two confederate monarchs exhorted him to break his alliance with the Infidels, to hold them for enemies, and renounce his correspondence with them. That they demanded moreover, he fhould fatisfy the damages done to Chriftendom, by his calling in those cruel enemies. That he should give over the war he had begun in feveral places, that the emperor might apply himself to the defence of Christendom. That he should cause the town of Maran, taken by the Turks, to be reftored to king Ferdinand, and to the emperor, Caftro-novo, which they had befieged with the aid of twelve French gallies. That he should repair the loss the Germans had fustained by the Turkish invasion. Laftly, that he fhould fatisfy the king of England for whatever he owed him, and give him fecurity for the payment of the hundred thousand crowns.

After these preliminaries, the two confederate monarchs agreed, that they would not make peace or truce but upon these conditions : that Francis should pay the king of England whatever was due to him, and for fecurity of the annual pension, surrender into his hands the earldom of Ponthieu, Boulogne, Montreuil, Ardres, and Terouenne, frce from all homage, for which however Henry should confent that the yearly revenues thence arising should be in lieu of the penfion. Moreover, that Francis should reftore to the emperor the duchy of Burgundy."

That if the king of France should delay but ten days to accept these conditions, the two confederate monarchs should proclaim war against him, with a declaration that they would never make peace till the king of England was in poffeffion of Normandy, Guienne, and the kingdom of France, and the emperor of Abbeville, Amiens, Bray, Corbeil, Peronne, Ham, St. Quinty, and the whole duchy of Burgundy.

and Man; the caftle and earldom of Guyines, and the towns of Calais and Berwick : and on the emperor's part, are named, the kingdom of Spain [regna Hispaniarum,] the provinces of Brabant, Flanders, Holland, Zealand, Hanow, Artcis, Limburg, Luxemburg, Namur, Frieseland, the countries of Dureffel, Utrecht, and Mechlin. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 769, 770.

Laftly,

Laftly, They agreed, that each fhould take the field, and 1543. invade France with twenty five thousand men, of whom five thousand should be cavalry w.

These were vast projects. But these princes were too wife to imagine, that with twenty five thousand men each, they were able to conquer France. It is likely therefore, they agreed in the treaty to bring into the field fo fmall a number of troops, only to engage Francis to make preparations accordingly. And indeed we shall see hereafter, that they invaded France with above a hundred thousand men.

One of the chief reasons why Henry joined in a league Henry's with the emperor was to find the king of France fo much chief aim. employment at home, that it fhould not be in his power to break his measures for the union of Scotland with England, by a marriage between Mary and prince Edward. Henry had this affair extremely at heart and very justly, as it is eafy i to imagine. But unhappily for him, there was a queen dowager in Scotland of the house of Lorrain and a cardinal archbishop of St. Andrews, who being both devoted to. France and the pope laboured with all their power to defeat his projects. As the affairs of Scotland will be very foon intermixt with those of England, it is absolutely necessary to fee what paffed in that country, after the death of James V. without which it would be very difficult to understand what will be faid hereafter.

After the decease of James V. Scotland was in a very ill Affairs of fituation. The late king had not fettled the regency during Scotland, Buchanana his daughter's minority. The next heir to Mary was James Burnet, Hamilton earl of Arran, a perfon of a mean genius, a lover of books and eafe, but little capable of managing the publick affairs, and still lefs those of war *. He had shown fome inclination for the new religion, and thereby rendered himfelf as much fufpected and odious to the clergy, as agreeable to those who had embraced the reformation. The queen dowager, fifter to the cardinal of Lorrain and the duke of Guife, had an extreme averfion to the reformed. This averfion was cherished by cardinal Beaton, archbishop of St. Andrews, a violent and cruel man, who had already given feveral proofs of his barbarous temper towards those who embraced the new religion. Most of the lords who by their counfels could have supported the state in such a

* And also each of them should fit * This is Buchanan's character of out thips, with two or three thousand him. Rapin. armed men. Rymer, p. 775.

,

VOL. VI.

. juncture,

juncture, were either flain in the late rout, or in the hands of the Englifh. But though they had been alive or in Scotland, it would have been very difficult to fucceed. There had long been fuch a division among the nobles, that what one moved was fure to be opposed by another. This was the confequence of the factions raifed by the kings of France and England in the kingdom, and which were continued by different opinions in religion. To all these evils was added that of a war against a powerful neighbour, who had just gained a very confiderable advantage, and could easily improve the confermation, all Scotland was under.

Amidft this confusion, cardinal Beaton feeing none able to withftand him, formed the defign of feizing the regency. To that end, he forged a will for the late king, wherein he was appointed regent or viceroy during Mary's minority with three counfellors or affiftants, of whom the earl of Arran was one, and caufed it to be published till the parliament so one, and caufed it to be published till the parliament fhould meet and confirm it. Mean while, he strove by all forts of ways to gain proper perfous to support him, as well among the people as among the great men. The queen dowager was the first that declared for him.

But whilft the cardinal was labouring to ftrengthen his party, the friends and relations of the earl of Arran were earneftly folliciting him, not to yield the regency to one who had no right to it. They represented to him, that the will on which the cardinal grounded his pretenfions, was a forgery, becaufe the late king never valued him fo as to commit the regency to him in prejudice of the princes of the blood : that it was a contrivance to deftroy the Hamiltons with their whole party, and hinder the progress of the reformation : that the cardinal was known to be a man of ill principles, of little or no confcience, cruel, and superstitious, and if once he had the power in his hands, the flames of percution would quickly be kindled all over the kingdom, not only against the reformed, but against all in general who would not blindly fubmit to his orders; that infallibly the princes of the blood, and the chief of the nobles would be first facrificed to his ambition and jealoufy. The earl of Arran was of a peaceable temper, and without ambition. If he had followed his own inclination; he would have left the cardinal quietly to enjoy the authority he had usurped. But his friends having in a manner forced him by their remonftrances to profecute the right due to his birth, he refolved to demand the regency, and fhew the forgery of the pretended will on which the cardinal refted,

Buchanan. Hall. Hollingfh.

Whilft these things were transacting, the prisoners, who 1543. had been released, came to Scotland, and with them Archibald Douglass earl of Angus, and William Douglass his bro-Hall. ther, who had been fifteen years exiles in England. By Stow, their arrival, the earl of Arran's party was confiderably Heibert, ftrengthened, whereas the cardinal loft many followers, who had joined with him more out of fear than affection. It was publickly faid, that the earl of Arran's right was indifputable, though the king had capricioully disposed of the regency in favour of the cardinal, which however was incredible. The parliament meeting in March, the will was examined, and the forgery being detected, the cardinal was removed, and the earl of Arran declared regent with almost unanimous confent. It was not without reason that most of the lords and nobles were defirous to free themfelves from the dominion of cardinal Beaton. Before the parliament Buchanan, met, a paper was found written with the king's own hand, wherein were fet down the names of three hundred lords and gentlemen, whom he had refolved to difpatch. As most of the proferibed perfons were of the reformed religion, or favoured the reformation, it was not doubted, that the cardinal had greatly contributed to put the king upon this barbarous refolution, by reprefenting to him that those who had refused to fight against the English, were fecret friends of the king of England, and favourers of the new opinions. It is certain, many of the nobility were of the reformed religion, or well withers to the reformation. The earl of Arran was of this number, and upon that account was fo well supported whenhe demanded the regency, becaufe those of the new religion intended to make him their protector. But this was an ill choice, the earl's unactive and timorous temper ren dering him very unfit to fupport the party who put themfelves under his protection.

Whilft the parliament was fitting, Henry fent an ambaffa- Henry prodor y to Scotland to propole the marriage of prince Edward poles to the his fon with the young queen, according to the agreement Scots the mariage of with the captive lords. The ambaffador was furnished with their queen a good fum of money to facilitate the negotiation, Henry with prince knowing by experience how effectual that means was in Scot- Edward. Buchanan. land. The queen and cardinal Beaton used all their credit Hall. and address to cause the overture to be rejected. But as their Herbert. party was too weak to balance the king of England's, the cardinal made it his business to confound all the conferences

y Sir Ralph Sadler, his fecretary. Herbert. p.234.

Kk2

held

His artifices being at last perceived, he was confined to a room till the debates were ended. The moment the cardi-1543. held upon this occasion, by long speeches, affected disputes, invectives against the contrary party, with defign to raife quarrels, which would obstruct the conclusion of the affair.

Buchanan, Herbert, The king's propofal accepted.

516

Burnet,

nal no longer appeared, the king of England's propofal was accepted without much difficulty, and the parliament appointed amballadors to go and treat at London with the king, concerning a peace and the marriage. George Douglafs, the earl of Angus's brother, and fome other lords z were charged with the negotiation, which ended at length in two treaties concluded at London the 1st of July 1543. The first was to settle a good and firm peace between the two kingdoms. The fecond, for the marriage of prince Edward with the young queen of Scotland. Henry did all he could to have Mary put into his hands. But the Scotch ambaffadors not confenting, it was at last agreed, she should not be brought into England till fhe was ten years of age : that in the mean time the parliament of Scotland fhould appoint four lords a to take care of her education, and Henry might add a fifth of his own nation to convey his advices to the governors b: that the parliament of Scotland fhould give the king fix hoftages of diffinction for fecurity that the marriage fhould be confummated.

Buchanan.

1.

This affair being ended, the cardinal had a little more liberty granted him, by being given in cuftody to the lord Seaton. But that lord fuffering himfelf to be corrupted by his prifoner, afforded him means to make his efcape. As foon as he was at liberty, he ufed all his art to break the treaties with England, wherein he was powerfully affifted by the queen dowager. As they were both firmly attached to France and the old religion, they could not fee, without extreme grief, the alliance lately concluded with a prince whom they looked upon as a heretick, and whofe interefts had for fome time been contrary to thofe of Francis I. They plainly perceived, this alliance was capable of producing great alterations as well in church as flate, and would infallibly deftroy the antient union between France

2 William earl of Glencairn, William Hamilton, James Leirmouth, and Henry Balnavis. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 781.

² The number is not fpecified in Rymer, it is only faid certos ejuídem regni [viz, Scotiæ] Barones— Scc p. 793. b The king might fend a nobleman and his wife with other perfons, not exceeding twenty, to wait on her. And for performance of the marriage, fix noblemen were to be fent from Scotland for hoftages. Rymer, ib. p. 754-Burnet, vol. I. p. 323.

and

and Scotland. To prevent this, the cardinal affembled at 1543. his house the heads of the clergy, and represented to them that religion was in danger, he obtained a large contribution Cardinal to affift him to fupport it. This money ferved him to main-breaks thefe tain his creatures, and gain fome of the contrary party. In measures. a word, he fo well caballed, that he quickly put things in extreme confusion. By his follicitations and intrigues he fo managed, that the prifoners who had been releafed refolved not to go and redeem their hoftages. The earl of Caffilis alone could not be prevailed with upon any confideration to break his word. In fhort, the cardinal's party being grown His party is very numerous by his liberalities, ftrongly opposed the fend- ftrongerthan ing of the hoftages promifed to the king of England by the the regent's, treaty. Befides that, the cardinal refolving at any rate to fet the two nations at variance, caufed the English ambasfador to be highly affronted by fome of his party, and his fervants to be infulted. But the ambaffador knowing how defirous the king his mafter was, that the treaties should be executed. bore all with patience for fear of raifing an unfeafonable quarrel, which he faw to be the cardinal's view. Thus the cardinal had brought things to fuch a flate, that the regent, who wanted refolution, tried in vain to ftop these violent proceedings, fince his commands were openly difobeyed.

At laft, the day being come that the three hoftages were to be delivered, the English ambassador demanded them of the regent, complaining withal of the affronts he had received. The regent told him, " he was very forry any dif-" respect had been shown to his person and character, and " would give him at a more convenient feafon what fatif-" faction he defired, but at present it was no proper junc-" ture. That he was himself witness of the troubles raifed " by the cardinal, and how contemptible the authority of the " government was rendered by that prelate's cabals : as for " the hoftages, it was no longer in his power to put them " into his hands, fince the cardinal and his whole party " were against it, who were now grown too flrong to be " compelled." The ambaffador was fufficiently convinced of the truth of what the regent faid; and as hefaw little appearance of a change in favour of the king his mafter, he contented himfelf with fummoning the prifoners to return to England according to their promife. But in that he fucceeded no better. They refused to return, though The prisonthey were released only upon parole. The earl of Caffilis ere refuse to alone c, abhorring the periodioutinefs of his fellow prifoners, cept the earl c Gilbert Kennedy, Kk3 of Caffilis.

1543. fet out for London, and put himfelf into the king's hands. This action met with its due reward. Henry very civilly received the earl. He commended his faithfulnefs, and making him rich prefents, difmiffed him without ranfom. Mean while, finding his party in Scotland was neither very flrong, nor firm enough to his intereft, he refolved to proclaim war with that kingdom. He might eafily have fubdued it fome months before, if he would have taken advantage of the confternation of the Scots, after their defeat and the deathof their fovereign.

The queen's and cardinal's artifices to feize the government. Buchanan. Burnet,

They fend for the earl of Lenox from France to fet him up against the regent,

The queen and the cardinal having accomplished their defign with respect to a rupture with England, confidered of means to procure the government of the kingdom, by fupplanting the earl of Arran, head of the contrary faction. Indeed, they did not much fear the earl, as they had lately shown. But he bore the title of regent, and very possibly, by the counfels of the able men of his party, and the king of England's affistance, he might find means in the end to make himfelf formidable. The war Henry had proclaimed against Scotland afforded them an opportunity to execute their project. They reprefented to the king of France, " That it-was almost impossible for Scotland to maintain a " war against England without a powerful aid from him : 45 that the earl of Arran, regent of the kingdom, favoured the . English, and, instead of opposing them, would certainly " make use of them to establish his authority, and compleat " the queen's projected marriage : that probably, this mar-" riage would break the old alliance between France and "Scotland, and produce a strict union between Scotland " and England: that he might plainly fee how much he " was himfelf concerned in a war, which, as it would in-" fallibly be unfuccefsful, would caufe him to lofe Scotland : " that indeed they perceived how difficult it was for him to " affift them, when he wanted all his forces againft the em-" peror : but they had devifed an expedient to gain time, in " breaking the measures of the contrary party. The expe-" dient was, that he should fend over Matthew Stuart early " of Lenox who was in France, that they might oppofe " him to the Hamiltons, whole fworn enemy he was, be-" caufe they had killed his father: that this lord being in " Scotland, would be immediately acknowledged for head " of the party against the regent, and by the allistance they " were ready to lend him, would become fo fuperior, that " it would not be poffible for the regent to execute his de-" figns in favour of England." The better to perfuade the earl earl of Lenox to come to Scotland, they put him in hopes' 1543. of marrying the queen dowager, and of being placed on the throne in cafe the young queen died before the was married. They told him, this would be fo much the eafier, as before the birth of Mary the late king had defigned him for his fucceffor, though farther removed than the earl of Arran, becaufe he looked upon Arran as a baftard, by reafon of the unlawfulnefs of his father's marriage. Thefe remonstrances . had the defired effect. Francis I. glad to ftrengthen his party in Scotland, without being forced to fend great fupplies, fent away the earl of Lenox with all fpeed, promifing him his protection.

Mean while, the regent having fome notice of this pro- The cardinal ject, refolved to support himself by becoming master of the hinders the regent from queen's person, then in the castle of Linlithgoe 4. But as having the he was not fecret enough, the cardinal, who was informed queen's perof it, came to Linlithgoe well attended, in order to hinder fon in his the queen's removal. Shortly after, the earl of Lenox The earl of arrived from France, and after faluting the regent, withdrew Lenox atto his own house, where he affembled his friends, to confult fives, and with them what was to be done. He accuminted them with opposes the with them what was to be done. He acquainted them with regent's the motives of his return, and the hopes given him of being defigns. put in polleflion of the regency, the queen mother, and the Buchanan, throne, if the young queen happened to die. The friends he confulted being all enemies to the regent, unanimously advifed him to improve the prefent opportunity, and each made him an offer of his perfon, his eftate, his vafials, and his friends. So the earl being determined to purfue his point, drew together four thousand men, and putting himself at their head, came to the queen, under colour of guarding her against the attempts of the regent, for fear she should be delivered to the enemies of the kingdom. Indeed, the earl, of Arran had refolved to fecure her, and was preparing to execute his defigns. But when he found himself prevented, and confidered, the queen could not be got out of the hands of the earl of Lenox, without coming to an open war, he fent to treat of an agreement. Lenox confented, on condition the queen should for the future be educated in Sterling caftle, and four neutral lords, whom both parties could equally truft, appointed to guard her and take care of her education. The four lords e being chosen and approved of, d Under her mother's care. Bu-John Lindfey, and William Levingchanan. fton, Buchanan, l. 15.

e William Graham, John Erfkin,

Kk4

520.

1543.

The regent fides with the queen and the cardinal. Buchanan.

He abjures at Sterling.

The queen and the cardinal try to fend back the earl of Lenox to France. Buchanan,

They prejudice the king of. France against him.

the queen was removed to Sterling caftle, where, a few days after ^f, fhe was crowned.

. The regent feeing the party of his enemies daily gathered ftrength, believed himfelf unable to withftand the ftorm which was forming against him. So his courage and refolution failing him when most wanted, he chose to give way to the torrent, rather than ftrive in vain, as he thought, to refift it. Perfuaded as he was, that he should be too weak to oppose the queen mother and the cardinal, he believed he ought to alter his measures, and strictly unite with them. But even here he met with difficulties, which he could not furmount, without acting against his confcience. He had hitherto almost openly professed the new religion. But the queen and the cardinal, as they could not refolve to be reconciled to him, fo long as he was engaged in the party of the reformed, managed him fo well, that at last they perfuaded him to abjure in the church of the Franciscans at Sterling. By this action he loft all his old friends, and was reduced to depend upon the opposite party, with whom the cardinal had more power than himfelf. From thenceforward he was wholly guided by the counfels of that prelate, who was the true regent, whilft the earl, that bore the name, was only the fhadow.

When the queen and the cardinal were poffeffed of the government, they were at a lofs about the earl of Lenox, to whom they were no longer willing to perform their promife. So, their chief care was to be rid of that lord, who greatly embarraffed them. They agreed therefore, to defire the king of France to recall him, and whilst an answer was expected, the queen fhould continue to cherifh his hopes, but withal should use fundry artifices to delay her marriage, concerning which he began to be very urgent with her. This project was executed as it had been refolved. The queen for fome time amufed her lover, who, not fuspecting what was contriving against him, spent his time in procuring her diversions, imagining, that would haften his marriage; but the queen still found fome fresh excuse to defer it. This behaviour at last bred in him fuspicions, which were confirmed by some friend of greater penetration, or better informed than himself. He heard, the queen and the cardinal had writ to the court of France, that nothing could be more prejudicial to the king's interest than his stay in Scotland, fince they had gained the regent to their fide.

f August 21. Buchanan, I. 15.

Lenox

OF ENGLAND.

re

Lenox was fo provoked at being thus mocked, that he 1543. fwore to be revenged, and without taking leave of the queen and the cardinal, retired to Dunbarton. In the mean while, He takes up Francis, who was not yet informed of the alterations in arms. Scotland, fent thirty thousand crowns to the earl of Lenox, to be diffributed among those of the party, or to gain fome of their adverfaries. By these means the court of France had long maintained a faction in Scotland, whilft the court of England opposed her by the fame methods. The money arriving when Lenox was at Dunbarton, he fent part to the lords who had the care of the young queen, and gave fome to his own friends. But the cardinal had none, though he had flattered himfelf with having the best share; and expected it with impatience. He was fo very angry, that he perfuaded the regent to raife an army and furprize Glafcow, where Lenox was retired with his money. The preparations which were making at court, though under other pretences, giving the earl of Lenox fufpicion they were defigned against him, he refolved to put himself in a posture of defence. It was not difficult for him to draw forces to-* R . FT gether. The cardinal had many enemies, and the regent had loft his friends, fince they had been forfaken by, him. So, the regent's levies were made very flowly, whilft the earl's vifibly increased. Within a few days, he raised ten thousand men, and sent the cardinal word 8, he would save him the trouble of coming to Glascow. The cardinal received the defiance with a feeming contempt, and pretended to purfue his enterprize. But it was not his intention to A peace is come to a battle. He did not fufficiently rely on the re- made to his gent's experience, who was no warrior. Befides, he fore- tage, faw, that by prolonging the time, he fhould oblige his enemy to difinifs his troops, becaufe he wanted wherewithal to keep them long on foot.

What the cardinal had forefeen came to pass. The earl The cardiof Lenox finding himfelf deftitute of money, and feeing the nal has all the power defertion was great in his army, was forced at last to ac- under the cept a peace that was offered him. He came to Edinburgh, regent's where he was outwardly reconciled with the regent and the name. cardinal; after which they went together to Sterling. But a few days after, having notice that the court had ill defigns against him, he privately withdrew, and returning to Glafcow, furnished the bishop's palace with a garrison and ammunition, and thut himfelf up in Dunbarton. There he

5 From Leith where he was. Buchanan,

I

difadvan-

V. as

522

was informed, that the king of France had been fo prejudiced againft him, that there was no hope of obtaining his affiftance for the future. Such was the fituation of the affairs of Scotland, when Henry refolved to renew the war againft that kingdom. We must now fee what paffed in England.

In July, Henry married his fixth wife, the lady Cathe-

The king's fixth marriage. Herbert. Hollingfh. Burnet.

Protefiants burnt at Windfor. Hall. Stow. Burnet. Fox.

Plot difcovered and punifhed. Burnet. Herbert. rine Parr, h, widow of John Nevil, lord Latimer, verifying what was only faid in raillery upon the act passed in 1541, that the king must marry a widow. The new queen was a favourer of the reformed. But the was to proceed with great caution, not to offend a hufband, whole abfolute will it was, that none should believe, but what was believed by himfelf. For that reason the durft not, just after her marriage, intercede for three protestants who were burnt at Windfor 1, at the infligation of Gardiner bifhop of Winchefter. This prelate never milled an opportunity to exalperate the king against those who refused to submit to the act of the fix articles. But he showed not the fame zeal against those who were still attached to the pope. This affair however went farther than he defired, fince it occafioned the difcovery of a plot, formed to ruin feveral families at Windfor, upon false accusations. The king was so offended at these diabolical practices, that he would have the affair thoroughly examined. The event was, that the contrivers of the plot k were carried on horfeback, with their faces to the horfetails, and then fet in the pillory. 'Tis faid, Gardiner had a great fhare in the project. But he was a very crafty man, who knew how to conceal the hand that gave the blow, when he thought it dangerous to fhow it.

Plot against Cranmer. Burnet. It was eafy for the enemies of the reformation to perceive, that Cranmer most obstructed the execution of their defigns, and they should never succeed to long as he was in favour with the king. Whereupon they refolved to apply themfelves before all things to his destruction, after which, they imagined, the ruin of his whole party would follow of course. There were in this undertaking two contrary things; whereof one feemed to promise fucces, and the other ren-

h Daughter of fir Thomas Parr of Kendal, on July 12. Stow. p. 584. i July 28. Their names were, Anthony Perfone a prieft, Robert Teftwood a finging man, and Henry Filmer a taylor. John Marbeck another finging man was alfo condemned, but pardoned afterwards. He was the first that compiled an English Concordance. Hall, fol. 256. Burnet, tom. I. p. 326.

k Dr. London prebend of Windfor, and William Symonds. Ibid.

dered

dered the execution very difficult. The first was, the king 1543. feemed fully bent not to fpare .those who were called here- ticks, that is, those who did not entirely conform themfelves to the declaration of faith lately published. Now every one knew the archbishop was of this number, though he used great caution not to give his enemies any advantage either by word or deed. The fecond was, the king's fingular effeem for the archbishop, against whom feveral unfuccefsful attempts had been made. Notwithstanding this, his enemies thought, if they could convince the king, that Craumer's opinions were very different from his, it would in some measure incense him. After that they hoped the king would require of him, as of the reft of his fubjects, a blind fubmission, and that Cranmer's opposition, would deftroy the king's affection for him. The bufiness therefore was to infpire the king with .fufpicions, which fhould induce him to examine what were the archbishop's opinions upon religion. To that end, no occasion was lost to hint He is acto the king, that it was in vain to punish hereticks whilf cufed to the their chief supporters were suffered to live unmolested. Henry king. perceiving Cranmer was aimed at, made no anfwer: He hoped, his filence would demonstrate, it was in vain to try to incense him against that prelate. But at last these infin- Henry feigns uations were fo often repeated, that he feemed to give ear to liften to to them, in order to know their intent. He hearkened there- the accufafore to whatever was faid against Cranmer, and defired to have the intended articles of accufation, with the names of his accufers. The duke of Norfolk, the bishop of Winchefter, and their party, believed the archbifhop ruined, fince the king was pleafed to examine his conduct. But they took care not to make themfelves parties, their defign being to appear unconcerned, to firike the furer. They caufed therefore the accufation to be drawn by fome prebendaries of Canterbury, and certain Kentifh juffices of the peace, whom they perfuaded to be his accufers. The articles being put into the king's hands, he went in his barge to Lambeth, the archbishop's palace on the other fide of the Thames. Cranmer hearing the king was coming, haftened down to his stairs to receive him, and by his order went into the barge. When the king was alone with him, he lamented the growth of herefy in the kingdom, and told him, he was endeavouring to find out the chief encouragers of it, to punifh them according to the utmost rigour of the law, about which he was come to ask his advice. Cranmer answered without any concern, that his zeal was laudable; but in-: treated

He informs him of the whole plot, and orders him to proceed againft his accufers.

524

1543.

 \sim

Cranmer excufes himfelf,

The king gives him another mark of his efteem.

treated him for God's fake to confider well what herefy was, least, instead of punishing hereticks, he fought against God. After fome conversation upon the subject, the king told him at laft, he was the man who was acculed of being the protector and chief encourager of the hereticks, and then gave him the articles of acculation against him. Cranmer perufing them, fell on his knees, and freely owned to the king, he was still of the fame mind as when he opposed the fix articles; but that he had done or faid nothing against them. Then he humbly defired to be tried by the laws, becaufe he was fure he should never be convicted of transgreffing them. Whereupon the king asked him, whether it was true that he was married. Cranmer confessed it, but faid he had fent away his wife to Germany upon the passing of the act of the fix articles. Henry, who had long feen about him only fuch as diffembled their fentiments, was charmed with the archbifhop's candor and fincerity. Inftead of being difpleafed with his confession, he could not forbear admiring his steddinefs, which made him dare the greateft danger he had ever been in, and that he fo wifely allied it with an inviolable regard for the laws. Wherefore he gave him a very fenfible proof of his efteem and affection, in discovering to him the plot his enemies had laid against him, naming his accufers, and ordering him to proceed against them. Cran-mer excufed himself, but the king told him positively he would be obeyed, and that he fhould name his judges himfelf. If Cranmer had been vindictive, he had a fair opportunity of being revenged on those who would have ruined him, and particularly on Gardiner chief contriver of the plot, as appears in letters under his own hand. But he fhowed fo great backwardnefs to pufh the affair, that at length the king was tired with preffing him, fince he did it fo unwillingly. Mean while, he had not the lefs value for him. Shortly after, one of his fecret enemies, known for fuch by the king, though he himfelf had no fufpicion of him, defiring his affistance in a fuit he had at court, he went immediately and spoke to the king in his behalf. The king furprized to fee him speak for that perfon, asked him if he knew him well; and upon his answering, that he took him for his friend; " No, (replied the king) he is your " mortal enemy, and I command you when you fee him " next to call him knave." Cranmer modefuly answered, fuch language did not become a bishop; but the king infifted upon his compliance. Neverthelefs Cranmer found means to be exculed, and the king, content with admiring his goodnels, goodness, would not press him any farther. Thus the plot, contrived for the archbishop's ruin, ferved only to indear c him the more to the king, and demonstrate to his enemies how dangerous it was to attack him.

The 23d of December, the king created the lord Parr, The queen's the queen's brother, earl of Effex 1, and conferred on fir brother is William Parr her uncle, the title of lord Parr, of Horton, of Effex. with the office of chamberlain to the queen m.

Whilft these things passed in England, the war between Continuathe emperor and the king of France was carrying on in fe- tion of the veral places. In the beginning of the campaign, Francis war between had fome advantages in the Low Countries, where he took and France. Landrecy, Emery, Bapanume, Maubeuge and Luxemburg. Bellai. But the emperor arriving about the end of the fummer with Mezerai. a strong supply of Spanish troops, Francis being inferior in Stow. number, was obliged to keep at fome diffance. This gave the emperor an opportunity to invest Landrecy, of which however he was forced to raife the fiege, upon Francis's finding means to throw in fuccours. But he made himfelf amends by taking Cambray.

At the fame time Barbaroffa, admiral of the Turks, com- Siege of ing to Marfeilles the beginning of July with a hundred and Nice by the ten Turkish gallies, found there the earl of Enghien, of the French and house of Bourbon, with twenty two French gallies. After their junction, they went together and attacked Nice the 10th of August, and on the 20th became masters of the town. But the castle made fo brave a defence, that the Turkish admiral finding he lost both time and reputation before the place, retired and wintered in Provence, from whence he returned to Turky the beginning of the fpring. I shall fay nothing of the war in Piedmont, because it produced no remarkable event ⁿ.

During the whole campaign, Henry affifted the emperor only with a finall body of troops, commanded by fir John

1 He had married Anne daughter and heir of Henry Bourchier earl of Effex. Stow, p. 585.

m Alfo, fome of the Irish nobility that came and fubmitted to king Henry, June 3, were, on July 1, ad-vanced to the following honours; namely, William Boruck, or Bourk, alias Macwilliam, was created earl of Clanreckard, and baron Dunkellyn. Mawer Obrien, earl of Tomon, or Thomond, and baron Infykwyne. And Conaught Obrien, baron of Ibrackayn. Sir Conaught O'Neal came alfo and made his fubmiffion to king Henry, and was created earl of Tyrone, Septemb. 1. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XIV. p. 797-8co. tom. XV. p. 7. Hall, fol. 247, 256.

n This year, the first cast pieces of iron (both cannons and mortars) that ever were made in England, were made at Buckstead in Suslex, by Peter Baud, Ralph Hoge, and Peter van Colen.

Stow, p. 584. Hollingfh. p. 960. ^o Six thousand men. Hall, fol. 256.

525 1543.

Herbert.

. 2 .:

Wallop.

But they both formed vaft projects for the next 1544. The emperor's and Henry's Act. Pub. XV. p. 1,2. Hall. Stow. Hollingfh. Parliament. Act to fettle the fucceffion to the crown. Herbert. Burnet.

this act.

year. They intended to enter France, the one by Champagne, the other by Picardy, each at the head of forty thoufand men, and to join about Paris. To execute this provaftprojects. ject it was necessary to act with union and a good understanding. So, Henry could not dispense with performing his promife to the emperor, to give the princels Mary a place in the fuccession. The parliament meeting the 14th of January 1544, immediately passed an act, settling the order of those who could pretend to the crown after the king's death., I have frequently observed, that the parliament was held in fubjection, and did nothing but what the king pleafed. Several inftances have been feen, but none more flagrant than the following. In this act prince Edward was ranked first, with his iffue. In the second place, the heirs male by the king's prefent or future marriage with their iffue. In the third place, the princefs Mary and her line. Laftly, the princefs Elizabeth and her heirs. But there was no mention of the king's divorces with the queens, mothers to these two princesses. So notwithstanding the acts, which approved and confirmed these divorces, and were never repealed, the parliament feemed to confider thefe princeffes as legitimate, though before they had been declared baftards, and, as fuch, excluded from the fucceffion. On the other hand, to convince them, they were indebted to the king their father for this favour, the act made them liable to fuch limitations or conditions, as the king fhould pleafe to declare by his letters patents, on pain of forfeiting the right which was granted them. Moreover, in cafe of difobedience on their part, or if they died without heirs, the parliament gave the king power to fettle the crown on any other by his letters patents, or his laft will Remarks on figned with his own hand. Was not this confidering thefe two princeffes as baftards, fince their right to the fucceffion was made to depend on the king their father's pleafure ? without pretending to queftion the right of the king and reprefentatives of the nation to fettle the fucceffion as they pleafe, I cannot forbear remarking, that this right was carried on that occasion as far as it can be ftretched. Supposing these two princeffes baftards, the parliament impowered the king to call them to the throne, contrary to the laws and cuftoms

> p Sir Thomas Seymour was marshal, and fir Richard Cromwell captain of the horfe. Hall, ibid. They departed from Calais, July 22. Stow, p. 585.

of 526

Wallop P.

of the realm fince the conquest. On the other hand, suppoling them legitimate, they left the king free to exclude them from the succession, contrary to the fame laws and cuftoms, fince it was in his breaft to impose on them conditions impossible to be performed. This was a power no king of England had ever enjoyed, and which shows, this act Aowed not fo much from the parliament as from the king himfelf. To palliate in some measure these contradictions, care was taken not to mention in the act, the king's divorces with Catherine and Anne. Only every one was free to guess the motives of the act, which was not very difficult, fince there was no other than that of complying with the king's will. By a claufe in the ftatute, all perfons were A new oath obliged to take a new oath against the authority of the bishop ordained. of Rome, which whofoever refufed, or fhould break any of Act. Pub. the articles of the act, was to be adjudged a traitor.

By another act passed this fession, the title of king of Eng- The king's land, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, and supreme title settled head of the church of England and Ireland, was united for for ever. ever to the crown of England.

By another it was enacted, that no perfon fhould be in- Act to limit dicted on the flatute of the fix articles, but upon a prefent- the jurifment by the oaths of twelve men, before commissioners ap-pointed by the king: that no perfon should be imprisoned afficialcourts. but upon an indictment; and laftly, the prefentment fhould be made within forty days after the pretended offence was committed, otherwife it should be rejected 9. Hereby the ecclefiaftical courts were tied up in some measure, from oppreffing the fubjects on pretence of herefy, fince the fame privileges were allowed for that crime, as were enjoyed by the English with respect to all other offences.

Laftly, the parliament granted the king a fublidy, in a The parliamanner unheard of before, by enjoining that those who had ment delent him money should be obliged to forgive the debt ". king clear of However unjust this act was with respect to the particular all debts, 9 Here is a mistake. The present. ment was to be made within a year after the offence committed. And if any preacher or reader should speak any thing in his fermon or reading, contrary to any matter contained in the fix articles, he must be complained of within forty days, unlefs a just. caufe were given why it could not be fo foon. See the act. - This' aft had clearly a relation to the confpiracies mentioned in the former year. both against the archbishop, and some of the king's fervants.

r Nay, those who had got payment, cither in whole or in part, of the fums fo lent the king, were to repay what they had received, to the exchequer. There was such an act passed in the 21st year of the king's reign. See above, p. 322, note c. Burnet, tom. I. P. 330:

perfons

528

and revives the authority to appoint commiffioners.

The lord Wriothefly made chancellor. May 3. War in Piedmont. P. Daniel, Battle of Cerifoles. P. Daniel, Herbert.

Francis recalls his troops out of Italy.

.

11

perfons who had lent the money, the parliament was not forry the king defired it, in order to put a ftop to the cuftom of loans, which in time would have rendered parliaments ufelefs.

The power formerly granted the king was also revived during life, of appointing commissioners to examine all canons and conflictutions ecclesiaftical, and to make the neceffary alterations, which the king had hitherto neglected *.

Before the end of the feffion, Thomas Wriothefly great friend of the old religion was made lord chancellor in the room of the lord Audley deceafed ^t.

In the beginning of the year, Francis I. fent into Piedmont the earl of Enghien who was but two and twenty years old, to take the command of the army in the room of Boutiers who had not been very fuccessful. The young prince engaging the marquifs of Guafto at Cerifoles, obtained the 14th of April a fignal victory over him, which coft the imperialists ten thousand men, besides the wounded and prifoners. In the confternation the marguifs of Guafto was under, after the lofs of the battle, he would have found it very difficult to keep Milan for the emperor, if the earl of Enghien had not been ftopped in the midst of his career by express orders. As the king of France was informed, that the emperor and the king of England were to join and invade him in the center of his dominions with an army of eighty thousand Foot and twenty two thousand horse, he deemed it more necessary to provide for the defence of his kingdom than to think of making conquests in Italy. For that reason he ordered the earl of Enghien to send him twelve thousand men of his army. This diminution disabled the young prince to reap any other advantage from his victory than the taking of Carignano, which he reduced to the king's obedience.

* There were thirty two commissioners appointed, fixteen of the clergy, and the fame number of the laity. The bill for examining these laws was read, for the first time, January 18; and for the fecond, third, and fourth times, the 19th, 22d, and 24th of the fame month, and passed March 6. Upon mention of this bill's being read the fourth time, it is observed in the journals of the house of lords, that bills of moment have been usually or often read four times. See Jour. Procer. Burnet, tom. III. p. 161 ; and Statut. 35 Hen. 8.——In this feffion of parliament, there was a very good act made for the prefervation of timber and woods, which ought to be better obferved. See ibid. c. 17.

t The loid Audley died April 30, and fir Thomas Wriothefly was created baron of Tichfield, January 1. this year, Hall, fol. 257. Stow, p. 585. Sir William Petre, Cranmer's great friend, was about this time made fecretary of flate. Burnet, tom. I. p. 331.

Mean

Mean while, the formidable armies which were to invade . 1544. France not being yet ready, Henry refolved to use part of his troops to finish the affair of Scotland, which he had ever at War with heart, Though he had declared war against Scotland, it Scotland. Buchanan. was not to make conquests, but folely to compel the Scots by Herbert. the terror of his arms, to agree to the marriage of their queen with the prince his fon. He could not conceive; that in their present circumstances, they could flatter themselves with the hopes of fuccefs in a war fo unequal and capable of ruining Scotland in one fingle campaign. But cardinal Beaton, an obstinate man if ever there was one, who governed in the regent's name, chofe rather to expose the kingdom to become a prey to the English than confent to a peace, which could not be made without ruining his fortune. So Henry feeing it was neceffary to prefs him more clofely, refolved to fend into Scotland part of the troops defigned against France. The lord Edward Seymour earl of Hertford and fir John Hall. Dudley lord Lifle high admiral were appointed for the expe- Stow. Hollingfh. dition. Seymour led the army to Newcastle, where the ad- Herbert, miral arrived with a fleet and two hundred transport ships, on which the troops were embarked. The earl of Hertford landing near Leith ", took that town without difficulty, and then marched directly to Edinburgh, of which he became master with the fame ease. The regent and cardinal had not provided for their defence, imagining the king's threats would be without effect. The city of Edinburgh was facked and burnt, but the English attacked not the castle, for fear of being engaged in too long a fiege. After that, they returned to Leith and burning the town retired to Berwick. the 18th of May w. If Henry had refolved to improve his advantages, he would have fubdued all Scotland, confidering the great confternation of the Scots upon the invalion. But two reasons prevented him. The first, that he wanted his troops to fend them to France, where he intended alfo to. go in perfon. The fecond, that his aim was only to let the Scots fee what they were to expect, if they did not fpeedily refolve to execute the treaty for their queen's marriage, and he scarce doubted but this method would fucceed. Mean while, . it must have been thought very strange, that he fhould court the young queen of Scotland for the prince his fon in fo extraordinary a manner, and the world was u May 4, Buchanan, l. 15. They fet out from London in March. Hollinfh. p. 961.

w See an account of the villages they plundered and burnt, in Hall, fol. 253; and Hollingfh. p. 963.

of

VOL. VI.

of opinion, either he had done too much, or did not do 1544. - enough.

The earl of Stow.

530

Though Henry had withdrawn his army out of Scotland, Lenox fides he had not however relinquished his project of harraffing the with Henry. Scots till they fhould agree to the marriage. To this end he improved an opportunity that offered, to give the regent and the cardinal fresh disturbances. The earl of Lenox, as I faid, having quitted the court, was retired to Dunbarton, the governor whereof was devoted to him, but found himfelf greatly embaralfed. His friends in France had informed him, that the king was exceedingly incenfed against him, and accused him of having lavished away the money sent him to maintain the war against the English. This was in effect what had been hinted to Francis by the queen dowager, the regent, and the cardinal, who were feconded by the cardinal of Lorrain and the duke of Guife, and in this manner the French hiftorians represent it. The earl, willing to clear himfelf, had fent a man into France to acquaint the king with all that had paffed in Scotland fince his arrival. and with the prefent fituation of affairs. But the king, prepoffeffed by the cardinal of Lorrain, refused to give the meffenger audience, nay, was going to order him to prifon. The earl feeing himfelf thus forfaken, both by the king of France and those who had at first joined him in Scotland, fent to the king of England to know whether he would take him into his fervice, with the earl of Glencarn his intimate friend. Henry received the overture more favourably than Act, Pub. the two lords durft have expected. He promifed them his XV. p. 19. protection on certain conditions, which he would fettle with them, if they would fend fome trufty perfon to England. Whereupon the earl of Glencarn came himfelf to Carlifle with the bifhop of Cathnels, brother of the earl of Lenox, and two others. In a few days after their arrival, they concluded with the king's commissioners x a treaty, wherein the earl of Lenox and Glencarn promifed, Conventions between Henry and the earl of Lenox. Ib. p. 22. May 17.

I. That they would caufe the pure word of God to be preached in their territories.

II. That they should hinder to the utmost of their power. the young queen from being carried out of Scotland, and do their endeavour to deliver her into the hands of the king of England.

* Thomas lord Wharton warden of Bowes mafter of the requests. Rymer's the West Marches, and fir Robert Fad. tom, XV. p. 23.

· III. That

III. That they would affift the king with all their forces, 15 to procure him ^y the direction of the government of Scotland, and the title of protector of the realm.

IV. That the bifhop of Cathnels and Hugh Cunningham fhould be given in hoftage to the king of England.

The king promised on his part :

1. That his army fhould not oppress their lands.

2. That he would conftitute the earl of Lenox regent of the kingdom, provided he would do nothing without his express confent.

3. That he would give him out of the revenues of the crown, what fhould be reasonable to support the dignity of regent.

4. That in cafe the young queen fhould die, he would fupport the earl of Lenox in obtaining the crown against the pretensions of the earl of Arran.

5. That he would give the earl of Glencarn a yearly penfion of a thousand crowns.

6. That he would confent, that Margaret Douglass his niece should espouse the earl of Lenox, provided the were willing.

The treaty was figned at Carlifle the 17th of May, whilft the English army was quitting Scotland and retiring to Berwick.

Some days after, the earl of Lenox came to the court Other conof England, where the foregoing treaty was confirmed the ventions. 26th of June, with the following additional articles:

XV. p. 29. Herbert.

That the earl of Lenox fhould furrender to the king the caftle of Dunbritton and the isle of Bute.

That if he married Margaret Douglas, he should affign her an honourable dower.

That the king engaged on his part, to aid him with five hundred men, to give him a penfion of feventeen hundred marks ² for himfelf, and one of a hundred marks for George Striveling, governour of Dunbritton.

In confequence of this treaty the earl of Lenox came to Dunbritton with thirteen fhips and about fix hundred men.

y The possession of Jedburgh, Kelfo, z Which made fix thousand eight Roxburgh, Hume cattle, the Herminian hundred Scottish marks. Rymer, p. tage, the Mers, and Teviotdale. Ibid. 31.

L12

Upon '

532 1544.

The earl of Lenox cannot furrender Dunbritton to the king. Buchanan. Herbert.

Another Englifh invafion in Scotland. Buchanan.

Diet of Spire favourable to the proteftants. Sleidan.

1. 15.

Upon his arrival, he went to the caffle with a few followers, to try to perfuade the governor ^a to deliver the place to the king of England. But the governor preferring his duty to his affection for the earl, refufed to admit the Englifh. This attempt failing, Lenox ravaged the ifles of Arran and Bute, where he met with no opposition. Then he made a defcent upon Kintyre, and after plundering fome villages failed to Briftol, where he expected the king's return, who was now in France.

In the mean while, the earl of Arran and cardinal Beaton profecuted with the utmost rigour the earl of Lenox's friends, and confiscated their estates. But a fresh invasion of the English, who, though few in number, took Jedborrough, Kelfoe, and Coldingham, caufed them to ceafe thefe proceedings, and raife an army to enable them to repulse their enemies. The Scotch army amounting to eight thoufand men, being ready to march, the queen dowager, the regent, and the cardinal, led them to Coldingham, where the Englifh, when they retired, had left a garrifon. But whilft they were employed in the fiege, the regent having advice that the English were marched from Berwick to relieve the town, was feized with fuch a panick, that fpeedily mounting his horse he fled all alone to Dunbar. This haity flight threw the whole army into fuch a conffernation, that there was no hindering the foldiers from difbanding. The earl of Angus alone refolved to ftay with a few men and carry off the artillery, which was going to be deferted. The Scots being dispersed, the English ravaged without mercy, Teviot, Merch, and Lauderdale, compelling the inhabitants to fwear allegiance to the king of England. Buchanan adds, that the earl of Angus reviving the regent's courage, they affembled fome troops, and caufing the English to fall into an ambush, slew eight hundred b of their men and took a thoufand prifoners. But there is nothing like this in the English histories.

Whilft the king of England was acting againft Scotland, till all was ready to begin the war in France, the emperor was at Spire, where he had called a diet to try to obtain fome affiftance from the princes of Germany. The proteftants at firft forupled very much to affift him, whilft he left them exposed to the infults of their enemies. But the moment they obtained a decree that they fhould not be diffurbed in the exercise of their religion, they granted whatever was 2 His own lieutenant.

b Two hundred, Buchanan, l. 15. required, required. This was all they defired, and it was deemed a 1544. fignal favour to grant it, even with fuch limitations and ambiguous clauses, as would one day render it fruitles. So the diet broke up about the end of May to the mutual fatif-faction of the flates of the empire. The pope alone was of- The openfended at the decree in favour of the protestants, and to hin- ing of the der them from long enjoying the toleration granted till the Trent fixed council should meet, he fixed the opening of the council of to Marchas. Trent to the 25th of March 1545.

Whilft the emperor was at Spire, he ordered Luxemburg The emperor to be invefted, which furrendered about the end of May. takes Lux-emburg. Then, he headed his army in perfon to begin the execution Bellai, of the projects concerted with Henry. Since the conclusion The defigns of the treaty in February last year, whereby they were each of the em-to bring into the field but twenty five thousand men, they Henry. had agreed to increase the number of their troops, to invade France with two armies, which together were to make above a hundred thousand men, and to join them about Paris. The emperor's first exploits, till the king of England's arrival, were the taking of Commercy and Ligny in le Barrois. Af- The emperor ter that he entered Champagne, and belieged St. Didier the st. Didier. 8th of July. This place, though weak, held out above fix weeks, and then was taken by a falle intelligence carried to the governor.

The war with Scotland having prevented Henry from be- The duke of ing ready fo foon as he had promifed, it was about Whit- Norfolk funtide before he embarked part of his arniy for Calais, un- count de der the conduct of the duke of Norfolk c. As for himfelf, Bure. he full remained in England with the refl of his troops till A A. Pub. XV. p. 40. the middle of July^d. When the duke of Norfolk was be-Hall. yond sea, he joined the count de Bure, who commanded ten Stow. thousand men of the emperor's troops, and they jointly befieged the town of Montreuil. This was probably with the Theybefiegeemperor's confent, who at the fame time laid fiege to St. Di- Montreuil. dier. He was in hopes that place would detain him but few days, and then he should march to Paris, whilst Henry was advancing to join him. Had this project been executed according to agreement, Paris and all the country as far as the

c Who was accompanied by John lord Ruffel, captain of the vanguard. Rymer, tom. XV. p. 43; and Henry Howard earl of Surrey marshal, John Vere earl of Oxford, the lord Grey of Wilton, lord Ferrers of Chartley, lord Mountjoy, fir Francis Bryan, &c. Herlert, r. 244.

d Before his departure, he appointed queen Catherine regent of the kingdom ; and named for her affiftants, the. archbishop of Canterbury, lord chancellor Wriothefly, the earl of Hertford, the bifhop of Weitminster, and fir, William Petre. Rymer, tom. XV. p.

L^{39.} L^{39.}

Loire

534

1544. Lon The fiege of St. Didier breaks the measures of federate monarchs. Henry arrives at Calais. Suspects the emperor, and befieges Boulogne. Act. Pub. XV. p. 53, &c. Hall. Stow. Herbert. privately, and Henry openly, offer camp. peace to Francis. Theemperor takes St. to march to Paris. Henry choofes rather to take Boulogne. Act. Pub. XV. p. 50. Herbert. Treaty of Crepy between the emperor and France. Bellai. Herbert, Mezerai. Henry comemperor in vain.

Loire would have been in great danger, fince Francis had not above forty thousand men. But the emperor was preposterously bent upon the siege of St. Didier, which detained him above fix weeks. In the mean time, Henry arriving at Calais ° with the reft of his army, found that the emperor's the two con- defign was to leave him to march alone to Paris and keep the king of France employed, whilft he purfued his affairs in Champagne. So, perceiving that inftead of marching to the rendezvous, the emperor was employed in a fiege, he ordered likewise Boulogne to be invested, and came himself to the fiege the 26th of July. By this means their project was fulpended, whilft they feparately amufed themfelves with the taking of towns. This error proved the fafety of France. From thenceforward these two princes mutually charging one another with non-performance of agreements, had no longer any confidence in each other. And therefore the emperor by indirect means caufed a peace to be offered to Francis, whilft Theemperor Henry more openly granted a fafe conduct for French ambaffadors to come and treat with him at a league from his Mean while the emperor, having at laft taken St. Didier Francis. The emperor takes St. Didier, calls had given the emperor time to take St. Didier, it was but upon Henry to march to Paris. Henry choofes ra-Boulogne, Aft. Pub. XV. p. 50. Herbert. Treaty of Crepy between the emperor and concluded with France a feparate peace, fignetars.

Henry was not much furprized at the emperor's proceed-Herbert, Mezerai. Henry complains of the finefs. It is certain, Charles V. no more than Maximilian emperor

> July 14. Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk was captain of the middleward, and had with him Edward Seymour earl of Hertford lord chamberlain, Henry Fitzalan earl of Arundel she marthal, fir John Gage comptrol ler of his houfhold, and fir Anthony Brown mafter of the horfe, &c. Hall. The fhip wherein the king was conveyed over had fails of cloth of gold. Herbert, p. 245.

and Ferdinand his paternal and maternal grandfathers, never pretended much to fincerity, nor was integrity his principal virtue, Henry complained of his breach of faith. But it was eafy to alledge fundry reafons, little capable however of balancing the oath he had taken to conclude neither peace nor truce without the confent of his ally. But these oaths are generally fo ill kept in most leagues, that they feem to be confidered only as a fort of form, not much to be relied upon. Happily for Henry, Boulogne had capitu- A& Pub. lated the 14th of September before the treaty of Crepy was XV. P. 56. Gound f figned ^f.

The emperor thought himfelf very politick in eafing him- by capitulafelf of the burden of the war, and leaving Francis and Henry tion. embroiled. Indeed, it was a great advantage, had it not been acquired by breach of faith. Immediately after the con- The fiege of clusion of the treaty, he fent orders to the count de Bure Montreuil is to raife the fiege of Montreuil, which obliged Henry alfo Hall, to recall the duke of Norfolk. In the fituation of Henry's Stow. affairs, he had nothing to do but retire for fear the dauphin, Herbert, who was advancing by long marches, fhould oblige him to Thedauphin fight with great difadvantage or retreat with precipitation. marches Befides that the dauphin was at the head of forty thousand against men, he would have found the English army much leffened, Henry, as well by their loffes at two fieges as by the numerous garrifon they were forced to leave at Boulogue. So, having well who retires flored that place and left admiral Dudley governor, Henry to Calais. departed for England the 30th of September, whilft his troops Herbert. were returning to Calais.

The dauphin came a few days after 5, but did not think The dauphin proper to pursue the English, who were too far before him, fails in his and too near Calais for him to expect to overtake them. He furprife contented himfelf therefore with trying to furprize Boulogne, Boulogne. the breaches whereof the English had not time to repair. Bellai. He was very like to have fucceeded in his attempt. The XV. p. 57. French were now masters of the lower town, where all Herbert. the English ordnance lay, when a fally from the upper town Hall. compelled them to retreat in diforder. Marshal Montluc in Comment.of his commentaries speaks of this action, in a different man-Montluc. Herbert, ner from the English historians, though he agrees with them

f The reader may fee a very full account of the fiege of Boulogne, in.a journal of it, extant in Rymer's Fæd. tom. XV. p. 52, &c. and Herbert, p. 245. Compl. Hift. g October 7. Rymer, tom, XV. p. 57.

furrenders

raifed.

Hollingfh.

that

535 1544.

L Conference for a peace fruitlefs. Act. Pub. XV. p. 57. Herbert. Henry fortifies his maritime places. Herbert.

536

· 1544.

Colleges and figned to the king. Act. Pub. XV. p. 65, Sec.

1545. -----Preparations of France againft England. Bellai. Mazerai. Heibert. Hall. Stow. Hall. Burnet. Herbert.

that the French were repulfed. Some days after h, a conference was held at Calais, to try to procure a peace between the two kings. But the aim of the French being to perfuade the English to reftore Boulogne upon the bare hopes of a peace, it is not ftrange, the conference fhould be fruitlefs.

Henry at his return to England took great care to put in a posture of defence the places on the Thames, and on the fouthern coaft i, imagining Francis would not fail to invade him the next year. At the fame time he fent into Scotland the earl of Lenox who took Dumfreys.

This year, most part of the colleges, collegiate churches, hospitals re- and hospitals were surrendered to the king k by acts and deeds, feemingly voluntary, but which were no more fo than those figned by the abbots and priors, when they refigned their monafteries 1.

> In the beginning of the year 1545, the marshal de Biez. encamped near Boulogne, in order to raife a fort at Portet m to command the harbour of Boulogne. But the earl of Hertford who had fucceeded Dudley, fallying out with a body of troops, diflodged the marshal from his post, and forced him to defer his project till another time.

> Mean while Francis was making great preparations against England, in hopes of retaking Boulogne, and even Guifnes and Calais, in order to expel the English entirely out of France, to that end he equipped in the feveral ports of France one hundred and fifty great fhips, and fixty fmaller ones ", with ten hired of the Genoefe. Moreover, he had ordered five and twenty gallies to be brought from the Le-h October 12. The English commisfioners were the earl of Hertford, and fir William Paget. Rymer's Fæd. tom. XV. p. 57.

i Gravesend, Tilbury, Dover, Portsmouth, &c. Herbert, p. 249.

k There were in the kingdom feveral colleges, chapels, chantries, hofpitals, and fraternities, confisting of fecular priefts, who enjoyed penfions for faying mais for the Souls of those who endowed them. Now the belief of purgatory being left indifferent by the doctrine fet out by the bishops, and the trace of . redeeming fouls being condemned, it was thought needlefs to keep up fo many endowments to no purpofe. Those priests were generally ill affected to the king's proceedings, fince their trade was fo much leffened by them. Therefore many were dealt with to make refignation; and twenty four of them did furrender this year. Burnet, tom, I. p. 338.

1 Alfo this year, king Henry reformed the publick offices, and put out a form of procession, with a litany in English. Burnet, tom. III. p. 164.

m A little creek of the fea, half a mile from Boulogne. The marshal encamped there January 26, with fourteen thousand men. The carl of Hertford diflodged him, though he had only four thousand seven hundred men. Herbert, P. 2.19.

n Our king set out about a hundred. Thefe fhips on both fides were only merchantmen hired for this war, Burnet, tom. I. p. 332.

OFENGLAND.

vant, in imitation of Lewis XII. who, on the like occasion, had fent for four from thence. At the fame time, he prepared to raife an army of forty thousand men, with whom he intended to join twelve thousand landsquenets levied in Germany. His defign was to attack Boulogne by land, and fo block it up by fea, that it fhould be impossible for the English to relieve it. To execute this project, he fent a re inforcement to the marshal de Biez, ordering him to build at Portet the fort he had been forced to leave unfinished, being unwilling to approach Boulogne before the fort was in a state of defence. The marshal putting him in hopes, the work would be finished by the middle of August, he came about the end of June to Havre de Grace, to give orders for an expedition by fea. His gallies and fhips arriving fhortly after, he commanded the fleet to fail towards England. But in feeing it depart, he had the vexation to behold one of the largest, called the Grand Carracon, burnt before his face, fhe having taken fire whilft the anchor was weighing.

Admiral Annehaut who commanded the fleet, arrived the Expedition 18th of July, at the Isle of Wight, in fight of Portfmouth, of the where lay the English fleet of fixty ships only. Notwith-Bellai. ftanding the difproportion between the two fleets, the Eng-Hall. lish approached the French; but after a flight skirmish re-Stow. tired behind the fands, with defign to draw the enemies after them. The French admiral confulting how they might be attacked, was told it was impoffible, becaufe the channel' which led to the place where they lay was fo narrow, that hardly could four fhips fail abreaft. That befides, there was no venturing among the fands without pilots. These difficulties obliged the admiral to content himfelf with provoking the English to fight by means of the ga lies, in order to draw them from their post. At first the gallies, favoured by a great calm, annoyed the English ships. But a land-breeze arising, deprived them of their advantage, and caufed them to row off, for fear of being run down by the large Ships. The Englifh did not pursue them very far, their defign being to draw the enemies among the fands, with which they were unacquainted.

At last, the French seeing the English would not lose the Descent of advantage of their post, landed in three places in the Isle of the French Wight. But all this ended only in burning fome villages. Wight, It was moved in a council of war, to fortify and keep the Hall. ifland. But it was judged impracticable, chiefly by reafon of Herbert. the time which fuch a project would neceffarily require. The and in Engadmiral therefore was fatisfied with ordering a defcent on land. the the coaft of Suffex ° imagining the king, who was at Portf-1545. mouth, would fend out his fleet to affift the country. But he was mistaken. The English fleet still lay behind the fands, and the descents which the French made in three feveral places, gained them no confiderable advantage, because the coafts were well guarded. In the mean while, the English fleet daily increating, confifted now of a hundred fail. So, The French Annebaut feeing little hopes of making great progrefs, refeet retires. tired towards France, after having watered at the Isle of Wight, not without losing fome foldiers and officers.

1545-

Some days after, a fouth wind blew the French back towards the coast of England, and put their fleet in confufion, which the English resolved to improve, if the wind continued favourable. And indeed, the two fleets engaged for two hours. But as the wind was very changeable, each endeavoured to gain it, without engaging however too far. At last, they parted without much loss on either fide; and thus ended the greatest effort France had ever made at sea.

The attempt to fight the English fleet, or to ravage the coaft, was not however the principal motive of this powerful armament. The taking of Boulogne was the king of France's mifcarrie by chief end, and the fleet was properly intended only to block up that place by fea. But as the landfquenets were not vet arrived, and the fort marshal de Biez was building not finished, Francis was vexed to fee the time proper for executing his defigns infenfibly flide away. At length, hearing the landfquenets were on the borders, he fent to view the fort, which, contrary to his expectation, and marshal de Biez's promile, was yet very far from being finished. Befides, it was built in a different place from what was appointed, and did not command the harbour. The marshal alledged, if it had been built at Portet, the garrifon would have wanted water. But he affirmed, the fort he was raifing at Outreau would be finished in eight days. Whereupon the king fent him his whole army, of which he gave him the command, and remained himfelf at Chateau-Montier about ten leagues from Boulogne.

> The marshal de Biez lay encamped near the fort till it was finished, his defign being to throw in ten thousand men to awe the garrifon of Boulogne, whilft he befieged Guifnes. But the engineer had fo ill contrived his work, that after much time spent in it, he was forced almost to begin again. This occasioned a delay, which broke all the measures that were

> > " Near Brightelmfton, and New Hayen. Stow, p. 589.

It is driven upon the coaft of England. A fhort engagement.

The defign of befieging Boulogne and Guifnes de Biez's fault. Herbert, were taken. Mean while, the king haftened the work the 1545. more, as he knew that ten thousand landsquenets, and four thousand horse, raised for the service of England were Herbert. marching for Picardy. In fhort the marshal perceiving the P. 250. feafon would be too far advanced before his fort could be put in a ftate of defence, pretended to have certain advice that the king of England defigned to land a ftrong army at Calais, to relieve Boulogne by land; this is at leaft what du Bellai imputes to him in his memoirs. However, the marshal leaving the fort unfinished, encamped on mount Lambert, to be ready to oppose the fuccours. But the English appeared not. As for the landsquenets sent for by Henry from Germany, they returned home, becaufe they received not on the borders the money, they were made to expect. Mean while, the French army continued encamped, without undertaking the fiege either of Guisnes or Boulogne, though Francis had made fo great an effort for that purpofe.

In the mean time, the duke of Orleans died at Chateau- Death of the Montier, to the great grief of the king his father, who, by duke of his death, faw the peace with the emperor very much fhaken, Mezerai. fince it was properly founded upon that prince's life, as will quickly appear.

The French army being encamped on mount Lambert, within cannon fhot of Boulogne, there were fkirmifhes every day in the space between the mount and the town. In one A terrible of these conflicts, the duke d' Aumale, known afterwards by wound cured the name of the duke of Guife, was wounded with a lance, paré. which entering at the corner of his eye, came out behind Bellai, his head. The wound, though deemed mortal by all, was however cured by the great skill of Ambrose Paré, the king's furgeon, who was even forced to draw out with pincers, the head of the launce which remained in the wound. The fcar in the duke's face, gained him the firname of Balafré [or Gashed.]

The feafon was now fo advanced, that the fiege of Bou- The French. logne was not practicable. So Francis was forced to be army ravage contented, with ordering the marshal de Biez, to ravage d'Oye. Terre d'Oye, belonging to the king of England. But the Herbert, fudden rains made the country fo watery, that the marshal was foon obliged to retire with his army. Indeed the inhabitants were great fufferers, becaufe the garrifon of Calais, which should have protected them, was unable to refist fo numerous forces. On the other hand, Briffac, afterwards marshal of France, defeated a body of two thousand English. Thefe

THE HISTORY

1515. These were all the damages Henry fustained during the - campaign, from an army of above two hundred thousand men, which had put his enemy to a prodigious expence. In all likelihood, this expence, and the ill fuccefs of the campaign, contributed most to the peace which was foon after concluded.

Francis's motives to make peace with Henry.

Herbert.

·

2 mm may

He got the protestant princes to him; " Sleidan. 1. 16.

who fend ambaffadors to France and England.

Befides that France was exhausted, Francis had still another motive to make peace with England. He was apprehenfive of being foon compelled to renew the war with the. emperor. By the treaty of Crepi, it was agreed, that the duke of Orleans fhould marry one of the daughters, either of the emperor, or of the king of the Romans, and on account of the marriage, fhould have the duchy of Milan, or the earldom of Flanders. In confideration of fo advantageous a fettlement for the duke his fon, Francis had refigned above twenty places, which he held in Piedmont or Montferrat, and relinquished the interests of his brother-inlaw the king of Navarre. So, the hopes of the advantages this marriage was to procure, vanishing by the death of his fon, Francis was to find fome other way to obtain them, or break a treaty now become useles. For this reason, being defirous to know the emperor's intentions, he fent admiral Annebaut to Antwerp, to offer him to renew the treaty of peace upon other conditions, fince the death of the duke of Orleans had rendered those of the treaty of Crepi of no effect. But the emperor plainly intimated, that by the death of that prince, he believed himfelf freed from his engagement, when he told the ambaffador, he would not attack the king of France, if he was not first attacked. Francis eafily judged by this answer, he should infallibly have a war with the emperor. This, added to the little progress he had made during the last campaign, made him defirous of a peace with England. But as he was unwilling to fue for it, he applied to the princes of the Smalcaldick league, who ofnegotiate for fered to become mediators. This mediation feemed the lefs precarious, as the protestants themselves were highly concerned to procure a peace between the two kings. They faw themfelves upon the brink of being attacked by the emperor fince he had made peace with France, and knew moreover, he was negotiating a truce with the Turks. Nothing therefore could be more for their advantage, than a good understanding between France and England, that both kings might be able to protect them. They fent therefore to France, Chriftopher de Veninger, John Bruno of Nide-. pont, and John Sturmius; and to England, Lewis Bambach, and 540.

OFENGLAND.

and John Sleidan, to perform the office of mediators between 1545. the two kings, in the name of the league. These am- baffadors meeting the plenipotentiaries of France and Eng. Sleidan. land between Ardres and Guifnes P, prefently found it was Herbert. not eafy to make peace. Francis infifted that Henry fhould Difficulties reftore Boulogne, and Scotland be included in the peace. of a peace, But Henry absolutely rejected both these articles. Whereupon a truce only was negotiated, but with no better fuccefs, becaufe Henry would never agree, that the Scots should and of a be comprised in the treaty. This appears in the fecret in- truce, ftructions fent to fir William Paget one of the English ambaffadors 9, and inferted in the collection of the publick acts. We find also in his instructions, that fir William Paget at- Act. Pub. tempted to bribe Bruno, one of the German mediators, with XV. p. 82, the offer of a confiderable penfion, and in all appearance, the 83. mediator hearkened to his propofals. Mean while, to obtain the better terms, Henry feigned a defire to be reconciled with the emperor, and even fent in embaffy to him, the bifhops' of Winchefter and Weftminfter. But this was only to give a jealouly to Francis. ULLES CO.

Cranmer took the advantage of Gardiner's absence to ad- Cranmer vance the reformation, which he knew that prelate would procures bioppose with all his power. Some vacant bishopricks were, his friends. by his means, given to perfons who favoured the reforma- Burnet. tion, and he had thereby among the bifhops a much ftronger Fox. party than ever ', Nay, he found means afterwards to obtain the king's confent to fome alterations advantageous to religion. But Gardiner, who was then at Bruges with the Gardiner emperor, having notice of it, fent the king word, that the breaks his pope and the emperor being joined in a league against the measures. protestants of Germany, the least innovation in England, with refpect to religion, would be apt to induce them to give the king of France all the fatisfaction he could defire, to engage him in their league, in order to act all together against him. This caused Cranmer to find more difficulty than he expected.

In August this year Cranmer lost a good support by the Death of the death of Charles' Brandon duke of Suffolk, who had always duke of Suffolk.

p In November. Herbert, p. 251. 9 The other Ambassadors were, Cuthbert, bissop of Durham, and Dr. Tregonel. Hall, fol. 260.1 .

r Lee, archbishop of York dying, Robert Holgate, bishop of Landaff, was promoted to that fee, Kitchen being made bishop of Landaff, who turned with every change. Heath was tranflated from Rochefter to Worcefter, and Henry Holbeach was made bifhop of Rochefter. Day, a moderate man, upon Sampfon's translation to Litchfield and Coventry, was made bishop of Chichefter. Burnet, tom. I. p. 333.

· · · · · · · · ·

continued

· · · · · · · · · · · ·

54I

Herbert.

THE HISTORY.

542

1545.

Hall. Stow. Hollingfh.

Continuation of the war with Scotland. Buchanan. Herbert. Hollingfh.

continued in the height of favour s. He was Cranmer's friend, and would have willingly agreed to a farther reformation. But he was too much a courtier, to attempt directly to oppose the king's will. However, as Henry was not always in the fame disposition, with regard to religion, this lord did the reformed good fervice, when he faw the king in a favourable fituation.

The war with Scotland was faintly continued on both fides. Henry's defign was only to terrify the Scots, and induce them to execute the treaty concerning their queen's marriage. On the other hand, the Scots had no thoughts of invading England. Nevertheless, Francis, who, as was observed, had formed vast projects against England, sent betimes to the regent an ambassador, called la Brosse, to affure him of his protection, and a powerful aid, which was inftantly to depart. Befides that a diversion in Scotland could not but be advantageous to him, he was also excited by the Lorrain princes, who was defirous to support the queen their fifter. So, caufing the Seigneur de Lorge, count of Mongommeri, to embark with five thousand men, he ordered him to use his utmost endeavours to perfuade the Scots to make a powerful diversion on the frontiers of England. Mongommeri arriving in Scotland the fecond of July, joined his troops with the Scots, and both making together fifteen tooufand men, advanced towards the Tweed. For fome days feveral parties, paffed the river, and did fome damage to the English. But the French general could never perfuade the Scots to venture with the whole army beyond the Tweed. On the contrary, upon news that the earl of Hertford was advancing at the head of twelve thousand men, they hastily retired, and presently after disbanded as ufual. This is all that paffed in Scotland worth notice during the campaign of 1545.

the king a Sec. Herbert.

Hall. Stow.

Hollingfh.

The parlia- ... The parliament of England meeting the twenty third of ment grants November, the convocation continued for two years the fubfidy, and fubfidy given the king for fix fhillings in the pound. At the the lands of fame time, the parliament fupprefied by an act, all the colthe colleges, leges and hospitals, and gave their lands to the king. The motive, or rather pretence of this suppression was, the abuse > s He died August 24, and lies buried in St. George's chapel at Windfor, by the door of the choir near the place where Henry VI. is interred. He had four wives. His third was Mary daughter of Henry VII, and widow of Lewis

Late La J

XII. of France. He had a fon by her, who died before him, and two daughters. His two other fons by his laft wife, died without issue, 5 Edward VI. Dugdale's Baron, vol. II. p. 300.

of these foundations. The parliament defigned it also to-wards the expence of the king's wars with France and Scotland. But this not fufficing, the commons granted him Burnet. moreover a large fum ', and as they were affembled only Hall. for that purpofe, they were difmified the 24th of December. Before the feffion ended, the king came to the houfe The king's of lords in great folemnity, and made a fine fpeech, faying, fpeech to the among other things, that never had prince a greater at-Hall. fection for his people, or was more beloved than himfelf. Stow. He added many fuch expressions, which, though very far Hollingsh. for the most part from the truth, were however received by Herbert, the people with loud acclamations ".

During this year, the German protestants began to feel Affairs of the effects of the emperor's late peace with France, and of Germany. the truce he was going to conclude with the Turk. Hitherto Sleidan. they had been used a little gently. But the emperor coming to Worms, where the diet of the empire was held, plainly declared to them, he could not any way difpenfe with their fubmitting to the council, which was to meet at Trent. This convinced them, there was in reality a defign to reduce them by force, and the more, as a certain rumour was fpread of a league between the pope and the emperor, which could not but be against them. Their suspicions were farther confirmed by a fermon preached by a certain Franciscan before the emperor, to whom he reprefented in very ftrong terms that he could not discharge the duty of a good emperor, unlefs he laboured to the utmost of his power to extirpate the Lutherans. They knew alfo, the emperor had writ to the king of Poland to excite him against them. Moreover, he fummoned the archbishop of Cologne to appear before him within thirty days, becaufe he had embraced the reformation, and tried to introduce it into his diocefe. ' All this fhowed plainly what they were to expect. Neverthelefs, as the emperor had not yet concluded the truce with the Turk. and as his affairs were not quite ready, he ordered that a new diet fhould be held at Ratifbon the following January. But the better to amufe the protestants, he decreed that the divines of both parties fhould come to Ratifbon a month be-

* Four shillings in the pound of lands, and two fhillings and eight pence of goods to be paid in two years. Hall, fol. 260.

" The most remarkable acts made in this parliament were thefe : 1. That the suftos rotulorum in each county shall be appointed by a bill figned with the king's hand ; and that the faid cuftos shall appoint the clerk of the peace. 2. That no higher interest, than ten pounds per cent. for a year, shall be paid. 1 3. An act for the payment of tithes in London. See Statut, 37 Hen. VIII, 1

fore

5

1545.

fore the diet, and hold a free conference that fomething might be afterwards fettled in matters of religion. The Roman catholicks did not like the conference, and the protestants were still less pleased with it, because they forefaw that the stiffness of the divines of both fides, on the points which would be the fubjects of their conference, would give the emperor and the diet a pretence to refer the decifion to the council of Trent. The diet breaking up the 18th of Auguft, the emperor returned to the Low Countries. Some time after, he received advice that the truce with the Turks was concluded. He then faw himfelf at full liberty to make war upon the protestants, and under that pretence to fet about the execution of his project to become mafter of the empire.

Remark on Sleidan. Herbert.

544

1545.

It was properly at the inftance of the protestants only, that the council. the council was to meet : but it was very far from being fuch a council as they had required. They expected it to be held in Germany in an unfuspected place, and it was convened at Trent, a city belonging to the king of the Romans, whom they justly confidered as their enemy. Their defign was to combat the papal authority, and it was the pope who was to prefide by his legates. They intended to fhow that the Romish clergy had corrupted religion both in doctrine and difcipline, and it was the Romifh clergy who were to affift as judges. Nay, it was uncertain whether they fhould be allowed to produce their reasons. Mean while, it was pretended, that out of great condescension, a council was called for their fakes, and at their follicitation. It is therefore no wonder, they fhould refuse to submit to such a council, which they as much feared, as they defired one free and impartial. So the emperor and the protestants acted directly contrary to their first proceedings. The protestants rejected a council, after defiring it with great earnestness, and the emperor, after amufing them many years on that account, preffed with all his power the meeting of the council of Trent, the authority whereof he intended to make use of to oppress them. The pope would have been glad to have had no council at all, but finding he was too far engaged with the emperor to recede, had fixed the opening to the 15th of March. After that, he put it off, because on that day there were too few bishops at Trent. But he had a much stronger reason. He was very glad to wait the event of the diet of Worms, in hopes that vigorous refolutions would be taken there against the protestants, which would engage both parties in an open war, and furnish him with a pretence, pretence, either to delay the opening of the council, or to remove it to fome town in Italy. But the emperor, who had now formed his plan of making use of the council's authority to proceed against the protestants, caused the pope at last to order it to be opened at Trent the 13th of December. That day the legates (meeting in the cathedral) Opening of declared, the council was affembled for three caufes, to de- the council of Trent. ftroy herefy, to reform discipline, and to settle a lasting peace F. Paul. between christian princes. This first seffion was properly Vargas. held only for the opening of the council. There were fo few Herbert. prelates at Trent, that it would have been ridiculous for fo fmall a number of perfons to pretend to make decrees upon the articles for which the council was called.

The protestants seeing a council opened quite different 1546. from what they had required, eafily perceived no good was to be expected from it. They had the more reason to fear it, as the kings of France and England being at war with each other, there was no hopes of affiftance from them. Mean while, though the German mediators had not fucceeded in their negotiation, the peace between France and England was not more remote. The reafon was, both kings were Henry and equally concerned to end a war, which only did them da-for a peace. mage, without a poffibility for either to expect any confide- Act. Pub. rable advantage. The war continued however during the XV. p. 80. winter of the year 1546. The earl of Surrey, fon of the Stow. duke of Norfolk, who commanded at Boulogne, having in- P. 591. Holingth. telligence that the French were conducting a convoy to the Herbert. fort of Outreau, fallied out " with part of the garriton to intercept it. But he fucceeded fo ill, that inftead of taking the convoy, he was himfelf defeated and forced to retreat in great diforder. This news extremely troubled the king, who was not wont to receive the like. Whether he thought it owing to the earl's imprudence, or fulpected him of fome hidden defign, he recalled him immediately, and fent the lord Gray to command in his room. A few days after, he Hall. ordered the earl of Hertford to depart with about ten thou-Herbert, fand men, for fear the French should feize fome post, and cut off the communication between Boulogne and Calais. And indeed that was their defign. But the earl of Hertford, preventing them by two days only, posted himself at Ambleville, where he ran up two forts which fecured the communication. The French having milled their aim, encamp-

W January 7. fir Thomas Poynings, with feveral others, were flain. Stow. P. 591. ed .

VOL. VI.

M m

545 1545.

THE HISTORY

1546.

546

Reafons of both kings for a peace.

Burnet.

ed on mount Lambert; and as the two armies were not far from each other, there were fkirmishes every day, but which decided nothing. It was equally the intereft of both kings to run no hazard for fear of breaking off the negotiation of the peace, which was treating between Ardres and Guifnes.

Francis wifhed for a peace, because his Exchequer was drained by his great and continual expence, from the beginning of his reign, and particularly by the naval armament of the former campaign. Befides, as he was entering into a war with the emperor, he wanted fuch a friend as the king of England. In fine, he perceived that after his fruitlefs efforts to retake Boulogne, it would be very difficult to recover that place by force. Henry was no lefs defirous of peace for feveral reafons. He was grown to fat and corpulent, that it was a trouble for him to move. Nay, he had occasion for an engine with pullies to lift him up and down stairs. This made him extremely uneasy, and gave him a distaste for business, so that he attended to affairs with some reluctance. In the next place he had no farther thoughts of making conquests in Picardy. His fole aim was to procure what was due to him before Boulogne fhould be reftored, which was of little use to him, fince Calais could ferve all his purpofes. But he had ftill a more urgent motive to renew his old friendship with Francis. He faw the emperor with the pope's affiftance upon the point of making war on the protestants, and much questioned their ability to withftand him. In this belief, he was afraid the emperor, after fubduing Germany, would turn his arms against England, with all the forces of the empire, Spain, Italy, and the Low Countries. He could use the pretence of executing the pope's fentence, and even cau'e a like fentence to be paffed by the council of Trent. It was therefore not at all advantageous to Henry to be in war with France. It was rather his interest to have Francis's friendship, as it was also very advantageous to Francis to be fecure of Henry's affiftance, in cafe the emperor turned his arms against France.

Difficulties

The obftacles to the conclusion of the peace confisted in of the peace. Henry's demand of what was due to him, and in Francis's want of money to content him. Befides, Francis infifted upon Boulogne and upon Scotland's being included in the treaty. These difficulties would have been sufficient to hinder the conclusion of the peace, if more urgent motives had not induced the two kings to feek expedients to furmount them. Henry confented at last to the article concerning Scotland, and as to the reft, a way was found to fatisfy both.

OF ENGLAND.

both. Henry was to keep Boulogne till he was paid, and 1546. Francis promifed to discharge the debt in eight years. Every thing being thus fettled, the peace was figned the 7th of June *. The treaty ran :

That the king of France shall pay regularly the pension, Treaty of due by the treaty of Moore of the 30th of August 1525, between confirmed by feveral fublequent treaties. As alfo the penfion France and of falt contained in a treaty of the 25th of April 1527, va- England. lued afterwards at ten thousand crowns a year. But as Act. Pub. Henry pretends the faid penfion given in lieu of the falt is June 7. to be perpetual, and as Francis maintains, on the contrary, Hall. that it is to ceafe at Henry's death, it is agreed that the dif- Stow. pute shall be amicably decided by umpires; and if the pen-Herbert. fion shall be found to be perpetual, Francis shall pay it to Henry and his fucceffors for ever.

Moreover Francis shall pay to the king of England, on the feast of St. Michael 1554, or within a fortnight after, the fum of two millions of crowns de foleil, as well for the arrears of the penfion of the ten thousand crowns, as for Henry's expence in the fiege of Boulogne, undertaken folely to procure his money, and in keeping and maintaining that place.

As to the article of the five hundred thousand crowns, which Henry prefented to Francis on condition he punctually observed the treaties, as the two kings differ in point of fact, it is agreed, the difpute shall be decided by commissioners appointed on both fides within fuch a time, or by four impartial lawyers, in cafe the commissioners end not the affair.

It is further agreed, that the king of England shall keep Boulogne with its territories, the limits whereof are fettled by the treaty, till he receive whatever is due to him.

That when all the fums shall be paid, Boulogne shall be reftored to the king of France, and nothing that is fastened to the ground shall be impaired or carried away.

That from the date hereof to the furrender of Boulogne, neither of the two princes shall raise any fort or new fortification within the territory of Boulogne, but those already begun may be finished.

* The English plenipotentiaries were, John Dudley viscount Lisse baron Malpas and Sommerey, fir William Paget mer's Fæd. tom, XV. p. 93.

the king's fecretary, and Dr. Wotton dean of Canterbury and York. Ry-

The

The emperor was included by both parties in the peace. As for Scotland, Henry agreed, it should be included, on condition the Scots gave him no fresh cause to make war upon them; and in cafe they did, they were to be deemed included no otherwife than according to the treaty of the 5th of April 1515.

Henry's advantages in this treaty.

548

1546.

Henry could hardly expect greater advantages than those he received from this peace, which seemed to secure him not only the payment of what was due to him, but also the yearly and perpetual penfion of a hundred thousand crowns. But the most folemn treaties are not always sufficient fecurity for the performance of what fovereigns promife. It will appear in the following reigns, that Francis's fucceffor not only broke the treaty with respect to Boulogne, and the fums for which his father was bound, but that even the penfion was never charged in the treaties he made with England.

The peace proclaimed at London. Hall. Stow, Henry calls in all the . church plate. Stow.

Charges of Herbert. p. 256.

The peace was very folemnly proclaimed at London the. 13th of June with a general procession, wherein were carried all the richeft filver croffes, and the fineft copes worn, for the greater pomp. But this was the last time these things appeared in publick. Shortly after, Henry called them in together with the church plate into his treasury and wardrobe, without giving any other reason than his will and pleasure.

It is faid, the late war with France coft Henry five hunthe late war. dred eighty fix thousand feven hundred and eighteen pounds fterling, and the charges of keeping Boulogne eight years amounted to feven hundred fifty five thousand eight hundred thirty three pounds. So large a fum which was not to be repaid under eight years, had confumed whatever had been granted by the parliament, and received from the chapels, colleges, and hospitals. So, he was forced in the beginning of the year to lay a tax upon his fubjects under the name of benevolence y, as appears in the collection of the publick

Act. Pub. XV. p. 84. acts. Strype. Henry ftands goddauphin's daughter. Hollingfh.

The peace reftored between the two kings, the good understanding which had been interrupted fome years, rather by father to the the artifices of the emperor and his party in England, than for any just cause. Catherine de Medici, dauphiness of France, being at this time delivered of a princefs, and Henry > y This benevolence amounted to fety three pounds. Strype's Mem. tom. venty thousand feven hundred and twen-I. p. 390.

> > defiring

defiring to ftand godfather 2, he called her Elizabeth. Pre- 1546. fently after, the two kings fent ambaffadors to each other to receive the oaths concerning the peace, and chole for thele Embaffy embaffies their two high admirals ^a. It is faid, that whilft fromFrance. admiral Annebaut was at London, he began a negotiation Stow. about religion, and that the two kings intended to abolish Project of the mass in their dominions b. As for Henry, very likely, if abolishing the had lived, he would have advanced the reformation : nay, Burnet. it is certain, that on account of this negotiation, he ordered T. I. p. 340. Cranmer to fet down in writing how fuch a change might Herbert. be effected, and to ftrengthen all with arguments and paffages from the scriptures. But this project foon vanished in-Francis's to fmoke. Probably, Francis had entered into the negotia- defign. tion only because he defired to be in frict union with Henry, and knew by experience that the bare propofal of conforming himfelf to his fentiments in point of religion, was a most effectual way to fucceed. But it is not likely he really intended to admit of any reformation in his kingdom. And indeed, at this very time he was kindling the flames of perfecution all over France against the reformed, of whom fourteen this year were burnt at Meaux, and many others at Paris, and in other places, not to mention the maffacre of Cabrieres and Merindol, for which none were punished. The cardinals of Lorrain and Tournon his chief ministers were too much incenfed against the protestants, for any man to believe, that fo long as they were in favour, the king ever ferioufly thought of abolifhing the mais in France.

Before the peace between England and France was figned, The emperor the protestant princes of Germany feeing themfelves going prepares to to be attacked by the emperor, who had at last taken off protestants. the mask fince his peace with France and truce with the Sleidan. Turks, fent to Henry prince Philip, brother c to the elector palatine, to defire affiftance. It appears in the king's letter Negotiations to this prince, extant in the collection of the publick acts, of the pro-test that Henry had fent to defire him to come, and the lord test with Herbert affures, that Philip aimed at marrying the princes Act, Pub. Mary. However, the king answered his demand of aid by XV. p. 88. feven propositions, containing the terms on which he was Herbert.

2 Sir Thomas Cheiny, treasurer of the houfhold, and warden of the cinque ports, ftood, as king Henry's proxy. Hollingsh. p. 973.

^a The English admiral, John lord Lifle, was accompanied by Cuthbert bithop of Durham, and feveral other lords. The French ambaffador landed at Greenwich, August 19. Hall, fol 262. b The mais was changed into a communion, and Cranmer was ordered to draw a form of it. Fox. Burnet, tom. I. p. 340.

c Lord Herbert fays, nephew.

549

Mm 3

willing

THE HISTORY

willing to enter into a defenfive league with the protestants, But as his propositions tended only to render him head and fole director of the league, they did not think proper to put themfelves blindly into his hands. They only told him, if he would deposit somewhere in Germany a hundred thoufand crowns to ferve for the defence of the league, they would prefer his alliance to that of Francis. But finding they offered no advantage for himfelf, he had no fuch zeal for the Augsburg confession (from which he was yet very remote) as to engage in its protection without reaping any benefit. The truth is, the protestants were perfuaded, he had no defire to be really united with them, but intended only to encourage them for fear they fhould submit to the emperor, as also to hinder them from putting themselves under the French king's protection, with whom he had not yet made peace. For the fame reason it was, that under colour of continuing the negotiation, he kept the count palatine at his court, till he faw the peace with France was near a conclusion.

League between the pope and emperor against the protestants. Sleidan. It was now fome time fince the pope and emperor had formed the project of a league against the protestants of Germany. They had agreed upon all the articles, but the emperor had thought proper to defer the figning, that he might fay he did it merely in his own defence. At last, about the middle of June he fent the cardinal of Trent to Rome, where the league was figned the 26th of the fame month. The pope promised to find for fix months twelve thousand foot, five hundred horse, and two hundred thoufand crowns, for the war in Germany. Moreover, he gave the emperor a moiety of one year's revenue of the benefices in Spain, with power to alienate a hundred thousand crownsworth of church lands. This was a demonstration that it was a religious war, though the emperor affected to publish the contrary.

TheGerman war.

The emperor having notice that the pope's troops were beginning to march; that the count de Bure had forwarded his levies in the Low Countries, and duke Maurice of Saxony, whom he had engaged in his party, was ready to act when there fhould be occasion, affembled his army about Ratifbon. His defign was to meet the pope's troops, who were croffing Tirol under the conduct of Octaviano Farnefe. At the fame time to hinder this junction, the elector of Saxony and the landgrave of Heffe marched the fame way with an army of forty thousand men. Without entering into the particulars of this first campaign, I shall only fay in general, that the protestants, protestants, though superior in number, could not hinder the junction of the Italian troops nor of those of the Low Countries with the emperor. The different tempers of the elector of Saxony and the landgrave of Helle did not a little contribute towards their taking wrong measures. In fhort, the campaign lafting till November, without either of the two armies defiring to engage, the elector of Saxony received the ill news that the king of the Romans and duke Maurice were destroying his country with fire and fword. This obliging him to march with part of the army to the relief of his subjects, the landgrave, grown too weak by this feparation, chose likewife to retire into his dominions. Thus the emperor meeting with no more opposition, took Francfort, Ulm, and feveral other towns belonging to the league, which furnished him with the money he wanted for the maintenance of his army.

550 1546.

Whilft the war was carrying on in Germany, the council Continualanguished at Trent and proceeded very flowly. Befides that tion of the council of the members were very few, they were wholly dependent Trent, on the legates, who durft not themfelves undertake any F. Paul. 4 thing without orders from Rome. But it was the pope's Herbert. interest to prolong matters, because he hoped, time would procure him at last fome occasion to diffolve the council or remove it to Italy. Thus the council was but an empty name, made use of by the pope and the emperor for their own private views and to caft a mift before the eyes of the publick.

Religion began alfo to caufe troubles in Scotland, or at Perfecution leaft to produce the feeds thereof, by the defpair to which in Scotland. Buchanan. those that embraced the reformation were driven. Since car-Burnet, dinal Beaton and the earl of Arran had enjoyed the peace procured them by the king of France, they thought only of being revenged on their enemies. Religion furnished them with a pretence, becaufe the oppofite faction almost wholly confifted of the reformed. In the course of this year 1546, they put to death feveral perfons for religion at Perth, St. Andrews, and other places d. The regent fuffered himfelf to be fo led by the cardinal, that he gloried in delivering to the flames those whom he had formerly confidered as his brethren. Among those who were facrificed to the furious

Some of the Scottifh priefts were fo ignorant, that they maintained, the New Testament was lately written by Martin Luther, and therefore they defired only the old. Buchanan, 1. 35.

ŝ

paffion -

THE HISTORY

552

1546.

Wifhart's martyrdom, Buchanan, Burnet,

His prediction about cardinal Beaton.

The cardinal is murdered. Buchanan.

The flate of religion in England.

Henry is much troubled with a fore leg and his corpulency.

paffion of the cardinal, a minister , who suffered martyrdom at St. Andrews, was particularly remarkable. This man being condemned to the fire, the regent at the inftance of one of his friends would have faved his life, and to that end fent a note to the cardinal, defiring him to fulpend the execution. But the barbarous prelate, without regarding the regent's requeft, not only cauled the fentence to be executed, but would alfo feed his eyes with the fad spectacle, fitting in state in a great window of his castle. It is faid, that, before he was delivered to the flames, the minister told the executioner, " That within few days the prelate who beheld him with " fuch pride from yonder high place, fhould lie in the fame " as ignominioully as now he was feen proudly to reft him-" felf." This prediction proved but too true for the cardinal. Prefently after he was murdered in his own palace, and his body thrown into the freet, out of the very window from whence he looked on, while the minister was burning.

As for England, religion was fill upon the fame foot, as the king had been pleafed to establish it. The reformation had made fome progrefs, but was far from being brought to perfection, and yet the reformed could not forbear hoping, the king himfelf would carry it much farther. In this belief, they thought it prudent not to provoke him, and that they effectually confulted the welfare of their religion by remaining in filence and waiting for better times. This is the true reafon why there were fewer perfons that fuffered for religion in England than in France. It is not to be queftioned that if there had not been hopes of a farther reformation, many people would have openly declared the opinions which these hopes induced them to conceal. For a like reason, those who retained all the tenets of the old religion durst not directly oppose the king, for fear their opposition should carry him beyond the bounds he feemed to have prefcribed to himfelf. From hence fprung a blind and univerfal compliance with the king's will, and the exceffive power he had acquired over all his subjects, of which he made a very ill use. had been troubled for fome time with an old fore in his leg, which was grown very painful. This, added to his great corpulency, which rendered him almost unable to flir, made e The suthor means Mr. George Withart, defeended of a noble family, who finished his Studies in the univerfity of Cambridge, and returned to Scotland in 1544. See the flory of his death in Burnet, wol. I. p. 333; and Buchanan, l. 15.

him

OFENGLAND.

him to froward and untractable, that none approached him 1546. without trembling. He had been always ftern and fevere, but was incomparably more fo towards the end of his days He grows than in the beginning. Flattery had fo corrupted his judg- cruel. ment and fenfe, that he deemed it an unpardonable crime to p. 262. contradict his opinions, though he changed them himfelf very frequently. I have obferved that he treated with admiral Annebaut of abolifhing the mafs and changing it into a communion, after the manner of the protestants. And yet, Shaxton is fhortly after, Shaxton, who had refigned the bifhoprick of accused of Salifbury and been long a prifoner for refufing to conform denying the realprefence. to the fix articles, being accufed afresh of denying the real Burnet. prefence in the facrament f, the king was pleafed to have He is conhim tried according to the rigour of the law, and he was demned to condemned to be burnt. But this man, who had endured the hardships of a long imprisonment, could not behold with the fame firmness the punishment prepared for him. The king having fent the bishops of London and Worces- He abjures ter to perfuade him to recant, he was prevailed upon and and is parabjuring his pretended herefy, the king granted him his Burnet. pardon. He became afterwards a cruel perfecutor of the re- T. I. p. 340. formed.

This example was not capable of moving Anne Afkew, AnneAfkew who was accufed of the fame crime and rigoroufly profecuted, burnt. though fhe had good friends at court, where fhe was well Burnet, known ^g. She firmly perfifted, notwithstanding all the pro- Strype. mifes to fave her life in cafe fhe would recant h. Some court ladies, touched with compassion for her, having fent her fome money when in prifon for her fubliftence, were the occafion of her being more cruelly tormented ¹. Chancellor Wriothefly, great enemy to the earl of Hertford, hoping f His words were, That Chrift's natural body was not in the facrament, but that it was a fign and memorial of his body that was crucified. Burnet, tom. I. p. 340.

g She was nobly defcended (being fifter of fir Francis Alcue, or Alcough, of Lincolnshire) and educated beyond what was usual in that age to those of her fex. But the was unfortunately married to one Kyme, who being a violent papist, drove her out of his house, when he found she favoured the reformation. Burnet, tom. I. p. 341.

h Upon her examination, being afked by the lord mayor of London, whe-4 ther the prieffs cannot make the body of Chrift? fhe wittily replied, I have read that God made man, but that man can make God, I never yet read. Strype's Mem. tom. I. p. 387.

i Being afked what favour or encouragement fhe had from any in the court, fhe would confess nothing, but that one in livery had brought her fome money, which he laid came from two ladies in the court. This made the chanceller put her to the rack. She had been oft at court, and was much favoured by many great ladies there; and it was believed the gueen had showed kindness to her. Burnet, p. 341.

THE HISTORY

to draw fomething out of the prifoner against that lord or his countefs, caufed her to be racked. Nay, it is faid, he would be prefent himfelf, and observing the executioner was moved with pity to the prifoner, threw off his gown and taking upon him the honourable office drew the rack fo feverely, that he almost tore her asunder. But this is a fact that scarce feems credible. However, the woman's bones being put out of joint, the was carried in a chair to the place of execution and burnt with four men condemned for the fame crime k. But to add to their fufferings, they were made to hear a fermon preached by Shaxton their falle brother, who upbraided them with obstinacy in very fevere and abusive terms. All this was not capable of fhaking their conftancy, which endured to their last breath.

The enemies of the reformation feeing the king incenfed gainft Cranagainst the facramentarians, thought it a favourable oppormer and the tunity to ruin the queen and the archbishop of Canterbury, whom they confidered as the grand protectors of the reform-T. I. p. 342, ed. Among the supporters of the old religion, the chief were, chancellor Wriothefly, the duke of Norfolk, the earl of Surrey his fon, Bonner bishop of London, Gardiner bishop of Winchester; and these had doubtless, among the courtiers and the king's fervants, creatures who failed not to be ferviceable on occafion. . But whatever project they formed, the archbishop of Canterbury was still in their way, who having great influence over the king, commonly broke their measures. So to be entirely freed from this formidable adverfary, they refolved to complain of him openly to the king and accuse him of being the head and protector of the facramentarians, and of all in general who rejected the fix articles. This refolution was executed. The perfon who took upon him to fpeak to the king told him, there were evident proofs ready of what was alledged against Cranmer, and if he was fent to the Tower, fo many witneffes would appear against him that the king would himself be surprized. Henry was not ignorant that Cranmer was against the fix articles in his mind, fince he had himfelf frankly owned it. But he really loved him, and therefore would not expose him to a trial which must have been fatal to him. Belides, he took it very ill that fuch pains were taken to deftroy a man, for whom he had to often and to openly declared. However, > k John Lascelles a gentleman, (probably the fame that accused Catherine Howard) Nicholas Otterden and ---- Belenian two priefts, and John Adlam a taylor. Hall, fol. 263. Strype, tom. I. p. 388.

refolving

Hall. Stow.

Defigns a-

queen.

Sec.

Burnet.

Cranmer is openly accufed. Burnet.

1546. Fox.

refolving to fee how far the malice of his enemies would go; he confented that he fhould be the next day called before the council and fent to the Tower, if they faw caufe. But in the The king night the king fent for Cranmer, and telling him what had gives him a fenfiblemark been refolved, defired to know how he meant to answer for of his afhimfelf. Cranmer thanked the king and prayed him, that fection. fince he was to be questioned for his religious opinions, judges might be affigned him who underftood those matters. The king replied, he went the wrong way to fave his life, for most certainly his enemies had witness ready to convict him in fuch manner, that the judges would be forced to condemn him; and therefore fince he took fo little care of himfelf. he would look to it. So he ordered him to defire the council to use him as a privy counsellor, and as they would expect . to be used in the like case, that is, that his accusers might be brought face to face before he was fent to the Tower : and if his request was not granted, he was to appeal to the king. At the fame time he pulled off his ring, and giving it to him, faid, if his appeal was rejected, he fhould fhow the council that token of his protection. Next morning Cranmer coming to the council door, was fo long kept waiting in the lobby, that the king hearing of this difrespect, sent word, that he fhould be prefently brought in ¹. It happened as the king forefaw, fo that Cranmer was forced at laft to produce the king's ring, which terribly mortified his enemies. Then they all role up and went and informed the king of The king what had paffed, who told them, he thought he had a wifer mortifies the council than now he found they were, and laying his hand archbithop's on his breaft, fwore, that he took the archbishop to be the most faithful subject he had. The duke of Norfolk willing to excuse the council, faid, They meant the archbishop no harm, but only to vindicate his innocence by fuch a trial as would have freed him from all asperfions. But the king looking sternly at him answered, " He would not suffer men " who were fo dear to him, to be thus handled with impu-" nity. He knew the factions that were among them, and " their malice to one another, which he would either extin-" guish or very speedily punish." Then he commanded them all to be reconciled to the archbishop. They immediately obeyed, though it was but in outward appearance. But

1 Dr. Buts the king's phylician, who loved Cranmer, went and told the king what a strange thing he had feen : the primate of all England waiting at the council door among the footmen and fervants. Whereupon the king fent to the board to have him brought in immediately. Burnet, tom, I. p. 343.

555

1546.

THE HISTORY

556 for Cranmer, he heartily forgave them, as he plainly showed asterwards.

The queen is accufed, who happily brings herfelf off. Herbert. Burnet.

It feems, fo great a mortification should have made thefe men more cautious. But their extreme defire to fucceed in their plots would not fuffer them to defift with regard to the queen. They perceived, if the king had opposed their accufation of Cranmer, it was not to hinder the execution of the law of the fix articles, but from a pure motive of affection for that prelate. That therefore their proceedings could not have displeased him as to the thing, but only in respect of the perfon. This made them think they should find it eafier to deftroy the queen, because the king would never willingly fuffer that his own wife fhould differ from him in matters of religion. Catherine Parr, who was then on the throne, had gained the king's affection by her extraordinary care of him, and by giving him daily fresh marks of her gratitude. She was a reformer in her heart, and even fometimes took the liberty to have fermons preached in her privy chamber before fome of her ladies. It came to the king's ears, but he took no notice of it. Nay, he fuffered her to dispute with him upon religion, imagining she did it only for instruction. But at last these disputes having been carried too far, he expressed his displeasure at them, and even began to look more coldly upon the queen than formerly. This made her enemies think it a fair opportunity to work her ruin, whilft, ignorant of their defigns, the was feeking occafions to infpire the king with favourable thoughts of the reformation.

Bornet.

Herbert.

queen. He could not pitch upon a more partial man. Gardiner failed not to cherish the king's refentment by aggravating the queen's obstinacy, and her pains to instill her notions into the ladies who ferved her. The chancellor, who was also let into the fecret, confirmed what Gardiner had faid and hinted to the king, that the queen had encouraged Anne Askew in her obstinacy, and even infinuated that she was plotting against the state. In short, they went fo far that articles were drawn against her and figned by the king. The chancellor putting up the paper carelefly in his pocket, it dropt from him and the perfon that found it carried it to the queen, who feeing the king's hand to fuch a paper concluded herfelf loft. However, being advised by one of her friends to go to the king and try to appeale him, the came into his room with a fettled countenance, as if the knew nothing of what had paffed. The king received her very kindly kindly and began to talk of religion. She answered, these 15.16. things were above her, and fhe ought to learn of him, what ---the was to believe, "Not fo, by St. Mary (faid the king,) Herbert. " you are become a doctor, and able to inftruct us." The queen feigning to be furprized at his manner of fpeaking to her, answered very mildly, " She faw with grief he was of-" fended at the freedom the had fometimes taken to difpute " with him in matters of religion, but fhe had done it in-" nocently, with the fole view of diverting him, knowing " what pleafure he took in talking of those things, which. " none understood better than himself; her chief aim had if been, not only to make him forget his pain by fuch fort " of discourses, but also to receive instruction herself, and " indeed the had profited much; and if the had ftarted ob-" jections, it was only to give him occasion to clear the " difficulties, which were above a woman's understanding.", And is it even fo, faid the king, then we are friends again. So he embraced her with great affection, and fent her away with very tender affurances of his conftant love to her m. On Burnet. the morrow, which was the day appointed for carrying the queen to the Tower, the king going to take the air in the garden fent for her, and prefently after came in the chancellor with forty of the guard. But the king ftept afide to him, and after a little discourse was heard to call him in an argry tone, knave, fool, and beaft. Then he came again to the queen, who feeing him in a paffion with the chancellor endeavoured to appeafe him." But the king told her, fhe had no reason to plead for him.

The king first vented to Gardiner his displeasure with the

Thefe two attempts against the archbishop and the grocen The king not only proved unfucceisful but also very prejudicial to the hegins to have the enemies of the reformation. From thence forward the king enemies of could not endure them, being fatisfied their chief aim was to the reformaoverthrow whatever he had eftablished. Gardiner was turn- tion. ed out of favour immediately, and the king would not faffer Gardiner's him to be prefent in the councilⁿ. difgrace.

m Whether the king had really defigned her ruin or not, is differently reprefented by the writers who lived next that time. Some, fays the lord Herbert, believe it was not fo much the king's intention to use the rigour of the law, as to deter her from reading forbidden books, p. 263.

n Lord Herbert fays, though it appears by Gardiner's fubmission, extant in our records, that not long after he fell into the king's displeasure, yet whether on this occasion, or that he was a special friend to the duke of Norfolk, (who was now alfo in difgrace). or any other caufe, is not there determined. However, the king excluded him out of the number of those whom he appointed his executors, and counfellors to his fon Edward VI. Herbert, p. 263.

- 5 57-

Hut

fon the earl of Surrey. Henry almost choaked with fat and perceiving his leg visibly to grow worfe, plainly faw he had not long to live. In this belief, he confidered the duke of embroil the prince his fon during his minority. The duke of Norfolk was the head of the favourers of the pope and the old religion, though like a good courtier he had outwardly complied with all the king's innovations. Henry was con-

The king folves to put the duke of Norfolk and Norfolk and the earl of Surrey as two lords who could greatly the earl of Surrey to death. Herbert. Stow. Hollingfh. Burnet.

558

1546.

tented with this external compliance, though he knew he was ever attached to the pope, whole party was still very powerful in England, and that his fon the earl of Surrey was in the fame fentiments. This fufficed to infpire him with a just fear, that after his death these two lords, affisted by the pope. the emperor, and their friends, would labour to fet the crown on the head of the prince's Mary, and fo what he had been at fuch pains to eftablish during his reign would be entirely overthrown. And indeed, he could not question, if that party prevailed, they would deem his divorce with Catherine of Arragon null and void. In which cafe, Mary was his only lawful iffue, and the prince his fon a baftard. He could hope for no remedy to this evil from the parliament, having learned by long experience, with how much eafe that body confifting of fo many members, was carried away with the prevailing party. He thought therefore, the best and shortest way to prevent these mischiefs and free himself from his fears was, not to leave thefe two lords behind him, whom he believed capable of diffurbing his fon's minority, and even of robbing him of the crown. For this fole reafon their ruin was refolved, after which fome pretence was to be found. And this is feldom wanting to those who have the power in their hands. As foon as it was perceived, his affection for the father and fon was grown cold, there were perfons ready to infinuate, they had pernicious defigns against the state . and only waited his death to put them in execution; that the earl of Surrey had refused feveral good matches p fince the lofs of his countefs, and it was generally reported, he aspired

· Their chief accufers were fome of their own family. The duchefs, daughter of Edward Stafford duke of Buckingham, had, for above four years, been parted from the duke her hufband; his daughter, Mary duchefs of . Richmond, was grown an extreme enemy of her brother. From thefe two ladies came the first information against those unfortunate lords, as appears from lord Herbert, p. 263, 264.

p Henry Howard earl of Surrey had married Frances daughter of the earl of Oxford, by whom he had two fons, Thomas and Henry, and three daugh-ters. The duke of Norfolk would have aspired to the princess Mary: that it was not without some 1546. private reason he used the arms of St. Edward the confessor, though his father had taken them out of his efcutcheon, but however the duke himself had left that quarter blank, in order to refume then at a proper feason. Upon these general They are accufations, the king ordered them to be arrefted, and fent fent to the to the Tower 9. After that, care was taken to let the pub-Herbert. lick know that they who had any thing to fay against the stow. prifoners should be graciously heard, and the king would par-Burnet. don all perfons concerned in any plot with them, who would come and make a difcovery r.

Herbert. Burnet.

Some time before this affair was begun, the king reftored The two the two univerfities of Oxford and Cambridge to all their univerfities effates, rents, and privileges, though by the act of parlia- arepreferved. ment which gave the lands of the colleges to the king, they Burnet. were to be suppressed. It might be thought very strange, the parliament should not diftinguish the two universities from the reft of the colleges, confidering their antiquity, and the advantages the kingdom had thence received and daily did receive, if it had not been now frequently feen, that they had long acted folely by the direction of the court. It is probable, the king remained long doubtful, whether he should diffolve or preferve the two universities, fince having received their humble petitions the beginning of the year, he made them wait for his answer till October. Nay, it have allied himfelf to the Seymour family, by engaging his fon to marry the earl of Hertford's daughter, which his fon would not confent to, and the duchefs of Richmond his daughter, to fir Thomas Seymour, Herbert, p. 263, 264.

9 December 12. Stow, p. 592.

" This year, in the latter end of March, the publick flews which had long been allowed by the ftate, were Appressed. Stow, p. 591. They were a continued row of houses along the Thames fide in Southwark, eighteen in number, and diftinguished by figns. In the reign of Henry II, there were feveral regulations made concerning these houses, to be seen in Stow's furvey of London, book IV. p. 7. Cam-den thinks they were called flews, from the fift-ponds near them, for the fatting and cleanfing pike and tench. Camden in Surrey .---- April 27, William Foxley fell afleep, and could not be waked by any means, till he had flept fourteen days and fifteen nights. The king's phyficians, as well as the king himfelf, examined him. but the caufe of his fleeping thus could not be known. He was potter to the mint in the Tower. When he awoke he thought he had flept but one night, He lived forty one years after, till 1587, Stow, p. 591. Hollingfh. p. 972.---Of much the fame nature is what we find mentioned in Rymer's Fæd. There is, in vol. XIV. p. 447, a bull of Clement VII. for John Scot a layman in the diocefe of Glafcow in Scotland, who lived a hundred and fix days without food.---- This year, on Feb. 18, died the famous Martin Luther aged fixty three years. Sleidan, I. 16.---In Henry VIII's reign (though the particular time is not mentioned) was inflituted the government of the prefident of the north: Tunftal bishop of Durham was the first prefident.

T

1546. was talked at court for fome time of making great alterations in their charters. But at laft, the king refolved to continue them upon the fame foot they had all along been. Shortly Act. Pub. XV. p. 106, after, on the 19th of December he founded Trinity college in Cambridge, which is one of the nobleft foundations of that kind in Europe ⁸.

The king diner out of his will. Burnet.

Mean while, diligent fearch was making by the king's orfrikes Gar- der, after every thing that could ferve to form an impeachment against the duke of Norfolk and the earl his fon, the king, who found himfelf near his end, being abfolutely bent, T. I.p. 349. they should go out of the world before him. In this interval, he ordered his will, made before his late expedition into France, to be brought him, and perufing it, caufed Gardiner's name to be ftruck out of the number of the counfellors appointed for the council of flate during Edward's minority. Sir Anthony Brown, who was prefent, would have fpoke in the bifhop's behalf t. But the king answered, he knew Gardiner, and though he himfelf could govern him, yet none of those who were to come after him would be able to do it.

This will, extant in the collection of the publick acts, is Act. Pub. XV. p. 110. dated December the 30th, 1546, and the king's name is at the bottom, with those of ten witnesses. But it is hard to know for certain, whether it was figned with the king's own hand. This was afterwards gueftioned. Mr. Rymer, who collected the records, would have done well to have put the thing out of difpute, and informed the world, whether he had the original in his hands, and if fo, whether the king's name was his own hand writing. This he might have eafily known, by comparing his name on the will with his ufual fignings, of which doubtlefs he had feveral by by him ". The importance of this inquiry confifts, in that the > s It was founded out of three others, St. Michael's college, built by Harvey of Stanton, in Edward IId's days; King's-hall, founded by Edward III. and Fishwicke, or Fysycke hoftel. King Henry founded it for a mafter, and fixty fellows and scholars, but it has been fince augmented by feveral benefactions. Camden in Cambr .-----About the fame time the king alfo founded Chrift church hospital in London, and endowed it with five hundred marks. It was, before the suppression, a convent of Franciscans or grey friars, that the king beftowed both the ground and buildings of the faid convent, as alfo the adjoining hospital of St. Bartholomew, on the city, for the relief of the poor. Stow, p. 592.

t Thinking it was only an omifion. Burnet, tom. I. p. 349.

a Some gentlemen were deputed in queen Anne's reign, by perfons of the first rank in the kingdom, to go to the chapter house of Westminster abbey, to fearch for the original will among the records of the exchequer. They found one confisting of feveral sheets of foft coarfe paper, tacked together with a braid of green and white ribband ; the the act of parliament, impowering the king to fettle the fuc- 1546. ceffion, ordered, it should be by letters patent under the great feal, or by his last will, figned with his own hand. Now it happened afterwards, that the line of Scotland, not being placed in the order which belonged to them, queflioned the validity of the will, maintaining that Henry had not figned it with his own hand writing. Indeed it could be alledged against this pretension, that the will being dated a month before the king's death, there was no room to fuppofe, Henry was then unable to fign it. On the other hand, it is not impossible, that, having ordered his will to be transcribed the 30th of December, he delayed to fet his hand, and fo was prevented by death. But there is moreover a ftrong prefumption he did not fign it with his own hand, namely, he was very probably unable to write feveral months before his death, doubtlefs, by reason his fingers were so fwoln, that he could not hold his pen. This conjecture is confirmed by two papers in the collection of the publick acts, both prior to the will. The first is a power of the 31st of Au-Act. Pub. gust 1546, given by Henry to three of his ministers w to XV. p. 100. lign in his name all the royal commissions, and acts of grace. The fecond is a like power of the 16th of October 1b. p. 102. following to fome of his council to put the king's flamp to, and feal with his fignet, all acts to which the king's hand was required *. The reafon alledged for these powers was taken from the multiplicity of affairs, wherewith the king was overwhelmed. But as he had never lefs than at that time, it is extremely probable, this was only a cloke to hide his indisposition. However, as this dispute, which concerned only the royal family of Scotland, was ended by the acceffion of that family to the throne of England, it is now of no confequence. And therefore it fuffices to mention wherein it confifted y. Here follows the manner Order of the wherein fucceflion.

x There is the like order before, dated October 12, 1545. Ibid. p. 81. y Maitland fecretary to the queen of Scotland, accounted the ableft man of his nation at that time, in a letter to fir William Cecil, afterwards lord Burleigh, fays, " The king neither " figned the will, nor ordered the " framp to be put to it. He had been " oft defired to fign it, but always put " it off: but when he faw his death " approaching, one William Clarke, " fervant to Thomas Henneage, put " the flamp to it, and fome gentle-" men Νn the writing of a mean and flovenly character. The will was figned at the top of the first, and the end of the last page, with the king's hand writing, as pretended, but the character was fairer than ever he could make, and the hand ftiff, like a counterfeit hand. Upon comparing his name on the will, with his famp and his usual hand writing, it agreed with neither.

See Acta Regia, p. 343. vol. III. w Sir Anthony Denny, John Gate, eiq; and William Clerc, gent. Rymer, tom, XV, p. 101. Vol. VI.

1546. wherein Henry fettled the fucceffion, purfuant to the power given him by act of parliament in the year 1543.

I. Prince Edward and all his posterity.

II. The children he might have by his prefent queen, or any other whom he fhould marry after her.

III. The prince's mary and her iffue, provided the married with the affent and confent of the executors of his laft will and teftament, or of the major part of those who fhould then be alive, given under their hands and feals. This confent of the executors was a condition fo annexed to the right he granted Mary to fucceed in her turn, that without it his intent was, the fhould entirely forfeit her title to the crown.

IV. The princess Elizabeth upon the fame condition with Mary.

V. Frances Brandon, eldest daughter of his fifter Mary and the duke of Suffolk.

VI. Eleanor Brandon, Frances's younger fifter.

If all thefe perfons fhould happen to die without heirs, or their iffue come to fail, it was the king's will, that the crown fhould go to the next rightful heirs. By that he could mean only Mary the young queen of Scotland, grand-daughter of his eldeft fifter Margaret, who ought naturally to have preceded the children of the king's younger fifter Mary.

Laftly, He added, that in cafe Mary performed not the condition required of her, the crown fhould devolve to Elizabeth, as if Mary had died without heirs.

In like manner, if Elizabeth neglected to perform the fame condition, his intent was that the crown fhould go to Frances Brandon, as if Elizabeth had died without ifiue.

Executors.

He appointed for executors of his last will thirteen lords, most of whom were privy counsellors, as the archbishop of Canterbury, chancellor Wriothesly, the earl of Hertford, young Edward's uncle, &c. These thirteen ² executors

were

" men that were waiting without, " were called in to fign as witheffes. " For this he appealed to the depofi-" tion of the lord Paget, and defired " the matquis of Winchefter and Nor-" thampton, the earl of Pembroke, " fight be examined, and their depo-" fitions entered in the chancery. He f alfo appealed to the original will, f' by which it would appear, that it was not figned but flamped only; and therefore not being according to the act of parliament, was of no force." See this letter in Burnet, vol. I. p. 349. and Collect. p. 267.

z There are fixteen named in all, of whom there were only feven that were lords or bifhops; viz. the archbifhop. of Canterbury, lord chancellor Wriothefley, were also nominated for the prince his fucceffor's privy 1546. council, till he was eighteen years of age. Moreover, he named certain perfons who were to be called to the council upon extraordinary occasions.

.562

He ordered his executors to pay first all his debts, and Debts. then to make good all his grants to feveral particular perfons.

He made the prince his fon heir to all his goods, plate, Heir, jewels, money, cannons, ammunition, fhips, with all things belonging thereto, and charged him to be guided by the advice of those who were appointed for his privy counsellors, till he had attained to eighteen years of age.

.He gave till their marriage to his daughters Mary and Legacies. Elizabeth a yearly penfion of three thousand pounds sterling, and to each a portion of ten thousand pounds or more, if the executors thought proper.

He left his queen a legacy of three thousand pounds, either in jewels or plate, as the pleafed, and a thoufand pounds in ready money befides her dower.

Laftly, he gave five hundred marks to each of his executors who were lords, and to the others three hundred each. *

The most extraordinary thing in this will was, the king's Remark on paffing over in filence the pofterity of his eldeft fifter Marga- Henry's ret, or at leaft his placing them after the line of his youngeft fettlement of fifter Mary Belides the claufe in his will still the fucceffifter Mary. Befides, the claufe in his will, which faid that fion. after the posterity of Eleanor Brandon the crown should go to the next heir, must have been favourably explained for this first branch, fince these general words were liable to fundry interpretations. This was the effect of the power, the parliament had given the king to fettle the fucceffion, or rather to unfettle and put it in a horrible confusion, if divine providence had not taken more care of it than he. It is not poffible to devife any other reason of his proceedings than his hatred of the Scots, and his fear that the kingdom of England would one day fall under the dominion of a prince or princefs of that nation, which however all his precautions could not hinder.

Whilft the king was ordering his will to be transcribed, the duke of Norfolk's and the earl of Surrey's process was Wriothefley, earl of Hertford young Edward's uncle, lord St. John, lord Ruffel, viscount Lifle, bishop Tunstal. The reft were, fir Anthony Brown, fir Edward Montague, juffice Bromley, fir Edward North, fir William Paget, fir Anthony Denny, fir Wil-liam Harbard, fir Edward Wootton, and doctor Wootton his brother.

1547.

Nn2

forming

THE HISTORY

1547. Surrey is beheaded. Herbert. Stow. Burnet. Hollingfh. Herbert, 564

The duke of Norfolk tries in yain pardon. Herbert, p. 265. Burnet.

. 1

forming with great warmth. The king being refolved to difpatch these two lords, nothing was able to fave them. The The earl of fon was first brought to his trial at Guildhall 2, before the lord chancellor, the lord mayor, and other commissioners, and put upon an inquest of commoners, because he was not a peer of the realm, the duke his father being alive. Several witnesses were examined, whose depositions the lord Herbert has inferted in his hiftory. But there appears nothing P. 263, 264. fufficient to convict him of high treason, of which he was accused. What was chiefly urged against him was his bearing St. Edward's arms, from whence it was inferred, he afpired to the throne. However, the king being refolved he fhould die, he received fentence of death, and was beheaded on Tower-hill the 19th of January b.

Mean while the duke of Norfolk used all forts of means to obtain the king's pardon. He knew him well enough to to obtain his be fenfible, that nothing but an entire fubmission was capable of appealing him. To that end, he wrote him a very humble and fubmiffive letter, declaring he could not call to mind he had ever offended him, and entreated him for God's fake to let him know the caufe of his difgrace. He prayed likewife that his accufers might be brought face to face before his majefty, or at least his council, that his cause might be maturely examined. He knew not, he faid, that he had offended any man, otherwife than in appearing very zealous against the facramentarians. But therein he had only complied with his majefty's fentiments and orders. He concluded with conjuring him to be fatisfied with taking all or part of his lands and goods as he pleafed, leaving him only a subsistence.

January 13. Herbert, p. 264.

b Henry Howard (eldeft fon of Thomas third duke of Norfolk, by Elizabeth daughter of Edward Stafford duke of Buckingham) died much pitied, being a man of great parts and high courage, with many other noble qualities. His fentence was generally condemned as an act of high injustice and feverity, which loaded the Sey-mours with a popular odium that they could never overcome. Sir Richard Southwel deposing, that he knew certain things of the earl, which touched his fidelity to the king; the earl vehe-mently affirmed himfelf a true man, and offered to fight in his fhirt with his acculer. As to the giving the arms of the confessor, he faid, he did it according to the opinion of the king's heralds. His fifter Mary, duchefs of Richmond being examined, confessed that the earl her brother fhould fay, These new men (meaning the Seymours) loved no nobility, and if God called away the king, they should fmart for it, with some other passionate words and circumstantial speeches, lit-tle for his advantage. He lies buried at Framlingham in the county of Suffolk. Herbert, p. 263, &c. Burnet, tom. I. p. 345, &c. Dugdale's Baron. vol. II. p. 275:

.. .

This

This letter produced a quite contrary effect to what the 1547. duke expected. By clearing himfelf, he accufed the king of injustice, an offence which would not have been eafily pardoned, though his deftruction had not been refolved. The duke, feeing the king unmoved, figned, the 12th of Ja- Herbert, nuary, before the lord chancellor and feveral other privy p. 265. counfellors, a writing wherein he confelled, " That on fe-" veral occasions he had been guilty of high treason, in con-" cealing from the king that his fon the earl of Surrey bore " the arms of St. Edward the confession, which did only " belong to the king: that himfelf had born in the first " quarter of his arms, ever fince his father's death, the " arms of England, with a difference of the labels of filver, " which were the proper arms of the king's eldeft fon, and " of no other. That he owned this to be high treason by " the laws of the realm; and that he figned this fubmiffion " without compulsion or advice, and threw himself entirely " upon the king's mercy."

Very probably the duke was induced of himfelf, or by the He is atadvice of his friends, to make this confeffion, in the belief, tainted in parliament, he should never obtain his pardon, unless he confessed him-Burnet. felf guilty, that the king might have room to fhow mercy. But it was all to no purpofe. His ruin was refolved, and the king was not wont to defift from fuch refolutions when once they were taken. Mean while, as it was eafy to fee that the peers, who were the duke's proper judges, could not condemn him upon the evidences which were to be produced against him, the king thought he should more easily compass his ends by an act of attainder. So the parliament meeting at this time, a bill of attainder was brought into the house of lords, and read three times, on the 18th, 19th, and 20th of January, and paffed. In all likelihood the duke's confeffion under his own hand contributed very much to the paffing of the bill. At leaft it ferved for an excuse to those who durft not oppose it. The bill being fent down to the commons was read thrice, and fent up also passed on the 24th of January. According to the method too frequently practifed in this reign, it contained only general accufations, without specifying any thing, except the duke's bearing the arms of England, with three labels of filver. It was very ftrange that his arms fhould not have been taken notice of before, which he had borne fo long in the fight of the king himfelf and the whole court, which he had received from his anceftors, and for which he had the opinion of the he-The bill having paffed in both houfes, the lord Act. Pub. ralds. chancellor, XV. p. 118. Nn 3

566

1547.

A warrant for his execution. He escapes narrowly.

Cranmer retires to Croydon during the duke's procefs. Burnet.

The kings, death approaches.

He is warned of his approaching end. Burnet,

He fhews figns of repentance Ibid. chancellor, the earl of Hertford, and fome other lords were commiffioned under the great feal to give the royal affent ^c. After that, a warrant was fent to the lieutenant of the Tower, to cut off the duke's head the 29th of January. But happily for him the king died the night before, and the council did not think it advifable to begin the new reign with the execution of one of the greateft lords of the kingdom. It is to be observed, that during all the proceedings both of the court and the parliament against the duke of Norfolk and the earl of Surrey, the archbishop of Canterbury withdrew to Croydon, without ever appearing at court. As these two lords were justly deemed his most mortal enemies, he would not be accused of being concerned in what was transacting against them.

Whilft these proceffes were forming, the king was feized. in his bed with an illness which brought him infensibly to his end. However, the confideration of the account he was going to render to God, was not capable of moving him to use compassion towards two lords, of one of the most antient families in England, who had done him great fervices, and hitherto were guilty of no crime which deferved fo fevere a punishment. On this occasion, prevailed, as on many others, passion and policy in the king's mind, over justice and mercy. He was bent at any rate, to facrifice these two lords to his fon's fafety, and to establish, by their death, all the alterations he had made in religion, being perfuaded they would use their utmost endeavours to destroy, them. The fequel plainly flowed, he was not mistaken with regard to the duke of Norfolk who furvived him. This lord's life, preserved by a fort of miracle, was a demon-firation how vain are human precautions, when contrary to the decrees of God.

The king's illnefs continually increased, and no man dared to warn him of his approaching end. Every one was afraid that a prince who was always approached with trembling, would look upon this charitable warning as a crime, and punifh it according to an act of parliament, by which thofe who fhould dare to foretel the king's death were adjudged traitors. But at laft fir Anthony Denny, one of his privycounfellors, had the courage and charity to warn him that he had but a few hours to live. The king thanked him, and expressed him if any clergyman fhould be fent for, and he faid, if any, it fhould be the archbishop of Canterbury. But Cranmer, being then at Croydon, could not come till the king was speechless. He had but just time He fends for to defire him to give fome fign of his dying in the faith of Cranmer, Chrift. The king squeezed his hand, and prefently after speak. expired in the night between the 28th and 29th of Janu- He dies. ary 1546-7, in the fifty fixth year of his age, having reign-Herbert. ed thirty feven years and nine months. His death was kept His death is private three days. Probably the council took time to kept private. confult whether the duke of Norfolk fhould be executed. At Burnet. last, after three days, the lord chancellor fignified to both houses, that the king was dead and the parliament thereby diffolved d. Two d The reader may fee Henry's character drawn at length by the lord Herbert. But as his life and actions fufficiently make him known, I shall only add what bifhop Burnet fays of him at the end of his first volume of the history of the reformation. King Henry VIIIth is rather to be reckoned among the great than the good princes. He exercifed fo much feverity on men of both perfuations, that the writers of both fides have laid open his faults, and taxed his cruelty. But as neither of them were much obliged to him, fo none have taken fo much care to fet forth his good qualities, as his enemies have done to enlarge on his vices. I do not deny that he is to be numbered among the ill princes, yet I cannot rank. him with the worft .---- King Henry's body lies buried at Windfor, under a most stately tomb, begun in copper and, gilt, but not finished. The reader may fee the model of what it was intended to be, in Speed, p. 784.

" Which they did January 27. Journals Parl.

5

3

By indentures of the 1st. and 23d. of Henry VIII. a pound weight of gold of the old flandard, was to be coined into twenty feven pounds by tale; viz. into twenty four fovereigns, at. 22 s. 6 d. a piece, or forty eight rials at 11 s. 3 d. a piece, or feventy two angels at 7 s. 6 d. a piece, or eighty one george nobles at 6 s. 8 d. a piece ; or one hundred and forty four half angels at 3 s. 9 d. a piece, or one hundred and fixty two forty penny-pieces at 3 s. 4 d. a piece ; and a pound weight of gold of the fineness of twenty two carats only, was to be coined into one hundred crowns and a half of the double rofe, or two hundred and one half crowns, making by tale twenty five pounds two fhillings and fix pence ; and a pound weight of filver of the old sterling, was coined into one hundred and thirty five groats, or two hundred and feventy half groats. or five hundred and forty fterlings, (or pence,) or one thousand and eighty half pence, or two thousand one hundred and fixty farthings; fo that every pound weight of sterling filver was coined into forty five shillings by tale .---- In the 34th, of this reign, a pound weight of gold of twenty three carats fine, and one carat allay, was coined into twenty eight pounds fixteen shillings by tale ; by which indenture there were coined fovereigns at 20s. a piece, half fovereigns at 10 s. angels at 8 s. and quarter angelets at 2 s. a piece; and a pound weight of filver of ten ounces fine, and two ounces allay, was coined into forty eight shillings by tale, namely into teftoons (which were 12 d. a piece) groats, half groats, pence, half pence, and farthings .---- In the 36th. of Henry VIII. a pound weight of gold of twenty two carats fine, and two carats allay, was coined into thirty pounds by tale ; viz. into thirty fovereigns at 20s. a piece, or fixty half fovereigns at 10 s. a piece, or one hundred and twenty crowns at 5 s. a piece, or two hundred and forty half crowns: and the king had two carats of fine gold for coinage, which yielded him, fifty fhillings. Silver was coined by the fame indenture, of fix ounces fine and fix ounces allay, into forty eight shillings by tale. It was coined into teftoons, groats, half greats, pence, half pence, and far-Nn4 things, things.—In the 37th, of this reign, a pound weight of gold of twenty carats fine, and four carats allay, was coined into thuty pounds by tale, as in the laft; and the king had four carats which yielded him five pounds two fhillings : and a pound weight of filver, of four ounces fine, and eight ounces allay was coined into forty eight fullings by tale, which raifed the pound weight of fine gold to thirty fix pounds; and the pound weight of fine filver to feven pounds four fhillings.

1547.

OF ENGLAND.

The gold coins of Henry VIII. are fovereigns, rials, half fovereigns, angels, george nobles, half and quarter angels, forty penny pieces, crowns, and half crowns: and the filver coins, teftoons, groats, half groats, fterlings, half pence, farthings; to which may be added crown pieces of filver, which were first coined by this king. Henry's fovereign has on one fide HENRIC. 8. D. G. AGL FRANCIE Z HIB. REX. the king in his robes crowned upon his throne, with the fcepter and ball. Reverfe, the arms of France and England quarterly, fupported by a lion and a dragon, IHS. AVTE. TRANSIENS PER MED. ILLOR. IBAT. (fig. 5.) The angel of this king is like his father's ; a half angel has this infcription on the reverfe, cavx. AVE. SPES. VNICA. The crown and half crown of gold, have on one fide a large rofe and crown betwixt H. I. crowned, HENRIC. VIII. RVTILANS. ROSA SIN. SPINA. Reverfe, the arms of France and England quatered under a crown; and H. I. DEI. G. R. ANGLIE Z. FRA. DNS. HIBERNIE. (fig. 6.) As for the filver coins, there were two forts of testoons or shillings. That of fine filver exhibits the king half faced, whereof one has CIVITAS EBO-RACI. The other shilling called the broad faced shilling, of a bafer allay, has on one fide HENRIC. VIII. DI. GRA, AGL. FRA. Z. HIB. REX. Reverfe, Posvi, &c. a rofe crowned, with H. R. likewife crowned. (fig. 1.) The groat has his head with the fide face, HENRIC, VIII. DI. GR. AGL. 2. FRANC. Reverfe, the arms, POSVI, &c. (fig. 3.) Another has HENRIC. VIII. DI. GRA. REX. ANGLIE. Reverfe, FRANCIE. ET. HIBERNIE RET. a crowned harp between the letters H. and R. crowned (fig. 7.) Some coined by cardinal Wolfey at York, have a cardinal's hat under the arms. His pence and half pence give him feated on a throne, with (and fometimes without) the globe and fcepter. H. D. G. ROSA SINE SPIA. (fig. 2.) The farthing has on one fide a portcullice (whereby it is diftinguished from half pence, which it was not before,) and a crofs and pellets on the other, (fig. 4.)

TWO

DISSERTATIONS.

I. Of Queen ANNE of BULLEN.

II. Of the BIRTH of EDWARD the Sixth.

THE HISTORY, &c.

DISSERTATION I.

Of Queen ANNE of BULLEN².

THE life of this unfortunate lady, is a remarkable inftance of the great inftability of human affairs. She had a fufficient fhare of prosperity and adversity. She was feen one day at the top of fortune's wheel. and the next at the very bottom of it. She had been raifed by king Henry to the highest pitch of glory, to the wearing of a crown, and fitting upon the throne; and by the fame hand was funk as low afterwards, deprived of her good name and reputation, and brought at last, like a malefactor, to the block. As her cafe has been very differently reported by fome writers, and very hardly and unfairly reprefented by others, I shall examine it with all the candor and impartiality I can, and endeavour to clear up, and vindicate the character of that unhappy princefs. A piece of juffice which cannot fairly be denied to one who first occasioned, and zealoufly promoted, the reformation of our church, and alfo gave life to an excellent princefs, who became the glory of her fex, the envy of her neighbours, the honour of her nation, which the more than once delivered from ruin and deftruction. But before I enter into the merits of the caufe, and confider what was alledged against that queen, I beg leave to make a reflection or two upon the unhappy fituation fhe was in, when the form broke in fo violently upon her. First, though a fudden elevation from a low estate to the higheft pitch of power and greatness is generally apt to raife the envy of the world and to create enemies, fhe lay the more open and exposed to these, as the was thought to be the occafion of the king's breaking with the pope, and fhaking off the yoke of Rome and the greatest instrument and promoter of all the bold fteps, that were taken by that prince, which could not but render her very odious to a formidable party, the whole body of the Roman catholicks, who, during her life could never expect to fee a reconciliation with the church of Rome, but might hope, after her death, to make up the guarrel, to heal the wound, and to clofe up the breaches. But fecondly, what bore the hardeft upon her, and was indeed the main occasion of her ruin, was the paffionate and violent temper of the king. No fea in a full ftorm was ever more boifterous and tempeltuous than he. Nothing could stem the tide of his rage and passion. He never fluck at any thing to gratify his luft, and fatisfy his defires. He was then tired and furfeited with the queen, and refolved to marry Anne Seymour, whom he had been in love with before, fo must be fure to get rid of his wife. Lord Herbert, and Rapin after him, impute his feverity to a fit of jealoufy, but with fubmiffion it is giving it too good a name. It was downright difguife and furfeit, and a violent passion for another woman. Jealousy (as is truly observed) is never without some 'mixture of love, but that Henry had not the leaft grain of that left, plainly appeared by his hafty, precipitate, and indecent marriage with Anne Seymour, the very day queen Anne loft her head upon the block. He had found a great deal of trouble and difficulty in breaking through his first marriage with queen Catherine, and was now refolved to make quicker work of it, and to cut a knot he could not eafily untie. It is true, that, in order to fave appearances, he got a kind of divorce to pass under the pretence of a contract, and pre-engagement on the queen's fide, and prevailed with the bifhops, (who fhamefully complied with every thing he required) to favour that abfurdity. I call it an abfurdity, because it was ruining and in effect destroying all that had been done before. For if there had been, as was trumped up, a precontract between her and lord Percy, (though by the way he fwore by his falvation See the let- and upon the facrament that it was entirely falfe ;) if I fay lord at end of there had been fuch a contract, then her marriage with the these papers, king was actually null and void, the proceedings against it of courfe must be fo too, and she could not without the utmost injustice be punished for adultery. I come now to examine the charge that was brought against her. And here, to clear my way, I shall remove like fo much dirt and rubbifh the evidence, or, to fpeak more properly, the invectives of the jefuit Sanders. He is a writer of fo low and profligate a character for veracity, that he is given up by those of his own communion, who are not a little ashamed, and out of countenance at his heat, forgeries, and falsehoods. He does not think it enough to revile and afperfe the character of this princefs, but makes a monfter of her perfon. He faith fhe was lean vifaged, longfided, gobbertoothed, of a yellow complexion, and had a wen in her neck. But fure king Henry must have had a better taste, he must have been a more a more elegans formarum spectator, " and could not (as " Fuller faith) have been drawn to fo passionate a love, " without a stronger loadstone." Besides such palpable falsehoods were eafily confuted by the fight of her pictures, which represent her very handsome, and by the paffionate letters from the king to her, that are still kept at Rome, by which it appears the was a beautiful perfon, and that it was her beauty that ftruck and charmed the monarch, and advanced her to the throne. The fame writer afferts, that fir Thomas Wyat affured the king he had himfelf first corrupted and debauched her. But the falfehood of this appears by a relation of his own fon. For fir Thomas was efquire of the king's body, and always continued in that post, except when he was employed in embassies abroad. But if Sanders's ftory had been true, he must have fallen under the king's jealoufy, or the queen's power, and would have withdrawn himfelf, or been produced as evidence against her at her trial. To proceed, it is faid there was a folemn tournament at Greenwich on May day, and that at this diversion the queen dropt her handkerchief, which was taken up by a fuppofed Fuller's favourite, who wiped his face with it b. The king, tak-church hift, ing notice of this passage, immediately withdrew, to the p. 206. great furprize of the queen, and the court. . The next day, Collier's ecthe earl of Rochford, the queen's brother, and one Henry cl. hift. Norris were committed to the Tower. But this also relies upon the bare report of Sanders, which I should not have taken notice of, but that I find it related by Collier, without naming the author he took it from, or paffing any cenfure upon it. Lord Herbert rejects it, as not being mentioned by any good hiftorian. Rapin faith it relies wholly upon the credit of Sanders, fo I look upon it to be a meer fiction and invention of that fabulous writer, or a filly imitation of the handkerchief plot in the Moor of Venice, which, by the way, is the only weak part, and blemish in that noble tragedy.

Thefe two differtations were communicated by the fame hand as those at the yead of yol. V.

But to come now to more material evidence. The queen was accufed of committing inceft with her own brother, the earl of Rochford. This is a heavy and grievous charge indeed. But how was it made out? for fure there is fome difference between proving and afferting. Why he was feen by her bed fide, and ftooping over the bed, while he

b Bifhop Burnet faith it proceeded from a letter which the king received at those jufts, to inform him that the lady Wingfield one of the queen's fervants had, upon her death bed, charged her upon oath, with fome criminal affair.

0

was talking to her, doctor Howel faith, that he was then feen to kifs her. Allowing the full of the allegation, allowing he did actually falute her, shall the kifs of a brother to a lifter be branded with the name of incest, and be construed as a breach of conjugal fidelity? It is certain the earl denied the crime, and afferted the queen's innocence, and his own to his last dying breath. But the evidence that seemed to be the most material, and to bear the hardest upon her, was the deposition of Smeaton the musician, who confessed, (faith Burnet) that he had lain three times with the queen. But this was too haftily afferted by that prelate. For there is not the least word of it in the lord Herbert, who is a very exact writer, and could never have omitted fo material a proof, upon which the whole iffue of the matter feemed to turn. He speaks indeed of a confession made by the queen herfelf, in relation to Smeaton. It appears (faith he), by a letter from Cromwell to the king, that the had confetted fome particulars, but he faith they amounted to no more than fome indifcretions and unguarded expressions. However, let Smeaton's confession be what it would, it is certain he never was produced face to face to the queen, and every body knows what ftress is to be laid upon an unconfronted evidence e. But her enemies had taken care of that. They had condemned Smeaton before her, that he might not appear as a witness against her; and this, as Rapin judiciously observes, looks very favourably on the queen's fide; fince it is not to be thought her accuser would have neglected to full a proof as this, if there had been the least ground and foundation for it. This looks very sufpicious, and as if they were afraid to produce him before her face, left she should confound him, and oblige him to recant. But it is most likely it was only a feint and artifice of her enemies, who told her of this depolition of Smeaton (as it appears they did by her reply), to fee whether they could draw a contession from her mouth. However the stratagem did not take. For fhe answered resolutely, " hath he not then cleared me?

• This is what the heartily defired ; fre earneftly begged of the king that the might have a fair and legal trial, by which her innocence might be cleared, the king's fufficion and confisience fatisfied, the flanders and ignominy of the world flopped, or her guilt openly acclared. This appears by a very moving letter the writ to the king when the was in the Tower the day before the died, which carries fuch marks of the queen's immocracy, and of her lufkand's hardfhip and cruelty towards her, that I thought I could not better illustrate this matter than by annexing it to these papers, together with the lord Percy's folemn protestation of there never being any marriage contract between him and the queen.

N. B. Thefe two letters were publifhed by Hern, anno 1717, at the end of Titus Liveus Ferojulienfis, from fome original papers of Dr. Smith. " I fear his foul now is fuffering for it, but as for Norris Burnet's and my brother, I doubt not but they are in the prefence of hift. of the reformation. " the great King with whom I am to be to-morrow." So yol. 2. that this evidence of Smeaton, upon which fo much ftrefs was laid, and the iffue of the whole affair feemed to turn, will be found, if duly weighed, to be mighty light in the balance, and to come very fhort of a full proof and conviction. Collier faith, " her language was broken and diffurbed. She, Collier's " feemed to difcover a mixture of affurance and confusion ecclef. hift; " in her difcourfe, for the laughed one minute, and wept ano-" ther." But fure that hiftorian did not know, or at leaft did not confider the nature and effects of vapours and hyfterick fits in women, which are frequently brought upon them by meer grief and trouble. In these fits the patients are difurbed and difordered in their heads, they know not what they fay or do, and often laugh and cry all in a breath. This I take to have been exactly her cafe. She was no doubt in the vapours occasioned by her troubles. But from these no proof can fairly be drawn of her innocence or guilt. What I have faid on this fubject will, I hope, fuffice to clear that unhappy lady, and to show the was not guilty of the crimes laid to her charge, but was meerly facrificed to the violent paffion, and cruel 4 and mercilefs prince, of a glutted and furfeited hufband, who was refolved, coft what it would, to get rid of his wife, and to marry another lady, whom he loved before. And this he was fo ftrongly bent upon, that till he could gain his end, he enjoyed no reft or quiet, and had no tafte or relifh for his pleafures and diversions. He went out with his hounds and breakfasted under a great tree ° in Epping forest, that very day she was to be exe-

d Cruelty indeed was the reigning vice of that king, and the great stain and blemish of his reign. He took a kind of pleasure in raising men from the meaneft condition to the greateft dignities, and finking them again to the bottom of milery. He was one that never did his work by halves, but always went through it in cruelty, of which his reign affords a fad and melancholy fcene. For, befides a great many private men, papifts, and gospel-lers, that fuffered for their religion under him, he put to death 77 abbots, priefts, priors, and monks, 18 berons and knights, 12 dukes and marquifes, and one cardinal. Ano-VOL. VI.

ther he attainted, and would have . used him in the fame manner, but could not get him into his hands. He executed two of his queens, and was just going to cut off a third, for he had figned the warrant to feud Catherine Parre to the Tower; fo I think there is no ftrain in what Raleigh faith of him, that if the world had loft the character of a mercilefs and relentless prince, it might be truly found in him.

" This tree is called Henry the VIIIth's oak to this day, as I was informed by a gentleman living in that forest.

vol.2.p. 116,

00

cuted

cuted in the Tower, from whence he had ordered notice to be given him by the firing of a gun, the minute her head was ftruck off. He no fooner heard the fignal, than he cried out the bulinefs is done, the bulinefs is done, uncouple the hounds, and let us follow our fport; and that very day at his return he married Jane Seymour, and took her to his bed. This fingle circumstance, were there no other in her favour, would be fufficient for any impartial perfon to acquit Anne Bullen, and to fhow her innocence. Rapin very justly observes that this lady's cafe became a party bufinels, and an affair of religion. As the was a principal occafion, and a zealous promoter and favourer of the reformation, the protestants afferted her innocence, and extolled her to the fkies. The papifts, for the fame reason, that they might caft a blemish upon the protestant religion, and wound it through her fides, blackened and reviled her to the utmost of their power. It was this bigoted zeal that whetted the pen of Sanders the jefuit, and tinged it in deepeft and rankeft gall. But fome writers of the fame communion have been more candid, and have done more justice to her character. I shall mention but two, whole testimonies I dare oppose to all the calumnies of that virulent writer. The first is Metteren, who, in his juftly efteemed hiftory of the Low Countries, speaks of her in these terms : " When she heard her sentence, (faith he) " fhe was not in the least concerned and terrified, but lifted " up her hands to heaven, and faid, O Father, who art the " way, the truth, and the life, thou knoweft well I have not " deferved this death." This is the account this writer gives of her behaviour at her death, without infinuating that there was the leaft prevarication, falsehood, and hypocrify in her carriage. The other author I shall produce is Thevet, a friar, who in his hiftory faith, that king Henry at his death owned and declared her innocence, and heartily repented of his injustice and cruelty towards her. Now the testimony of this writer is very material, and carries much weight along with it. For, befides that he was a Franciscan friar, he had been a confiderable fufferer himfelf for the fake of Catherine, the divorced queen, and therefore can never be fuspected of any favour and partiality for queen Anne her rival, fo that nothing but the force of truth could have drawn fuch a confession from his pen.

Letter

Letter of queen ANNE BULLEN to king HENRY VIII.

C. O.

A Copy.

SIR,

VOUR grace's difpleasure, and my imprisonment are things fo strange to me, as what to write, or what to excufe, I am altogether ignorant. Whereas you fend unto me (willing me to confels a truth, and fo to obtain your favour) by fuch a one whom you know to be my ancient profeffed enemy : I no fooner received this mellage by him, than I rightly conceived your meaning; and if, as you fay, confeffing a truth indeed may procure my fafety, I fhall with all willingness and duty perform your command. But let not your grace ever imagine, that your poor wife will ever be brought to acknowledge a fault, where not fo much as a thought ever proceeded; and to fpeak a truth, never a prince had a wife more loyal in all duty and true affection, than you have ever found in Anne Bullen, with which name and place I could willingly have contented myfelf, if God and your grace's pleafure had fo been pleafed. Neither did I at any time fo far forget myfelf in my exaltation or received queenship, but that I always looked for fuch an alteration, as new I find. For the ground of my preferment being on no furer foundation than your grace's fancy, the leaft alteration was fit and fufficient (I know) to draw that fancy to fome other subject. You have chosen me from a low eftate to be your queen and companion, far beyond my defert or defire. If then you found me worthy of fuch honour with your grace, let not any light fancy, or bad counfel of my enemies withdraw your princely favour from me. Neither let that ftain, that unworthy ftain of a difloyal heart towards your grace ever caft fo foul a blot on your most dutiful wife, and the infant princefs your daughter. Try me, good king; but let me have a lawful trial, and let not my fworn enemies fit as my accufers and judges. Yea, let me receive an open trial. For my truth shall fear no open fhame. Then shall you fee either my innocency cleared, your fuspicion and confcience fatisfied, the ignominy and flander of the world ftopped, or my guilt openly declared. So that whatfoever God or you may determine of me, your grace may be freed from open cenfure, and my offence being fo fo lawfully proved, your grace is at liberty both before God and man, not only to execute a worthy punifhment on me, as an unfaithful wife, but to follow your affection already fettled on that party, for whole lake I am now as I am; whofe name I could fome good while fithence have pointed unto you, your grace being not ignorant of my fuspicion therein. But if you have already determined of me, and that not only my death, but an infamous flander must bring you the joying of your defired happinefs, then I defire of God, that he will pardon your great fin herein, and likewife my enemies, the inftruments thereof; and that he will not call you to a ftrait account for your unprincely and cruel ufage of me, at his general judgment feat, where both you and mynot must shortly appear, and in whose just judgment, I doubt felf, whatfoever the world may think of me, my innocence shall be openly known, and fufficiently cleared. My last and only request shall be, that myself may only bear the burden of your grace's displeasure, and that it may not touch the innocent fouls of those poor gentlemen, whom I understand are likewife in strait prifonment for my fake. If I have ever found favour in your fight, if ever the name of Anne Bullen hath been pleafing in your ears, let me obtain this last request. And fo I will leave to trouble your grace any farther, with my earnest prayer to the Trinity to have your grace in his good keeping, and to direct you in all your actions. From my doleful prifon in the Tower, the fixth of May.

O 0 2

Your most loyal and ever faithful wife,

ANNE BULLEN.

Earl

The king fending a meffenger to queen Anne, being prifoner in the Tower, willing her to confefs the truth, fhe faid fhe could confefs no more, than fhe had already fpoken; and fhe faid, fhe muft conceal nothing from the king, to whom fhe did acknowledge herfelf fo much bound for many favours, for raifing her first from a mean woman to be a marquefs; next to be his queen; and now feeing he could beftow no further honour upon her on earth, for purposing to make her by martyrdom a faint in heaven. Earl of Northumberland to secretary — —, denying that there was a contrast between queen ANNE and him.

An Original.

C. O.

Master Secretary,

T HIS shall be to fignify unto you, that I perceive by Sir Raynold Carnaby, that there is supposed a precontract to be between the queen and me; whereupon I was not only heretofore examined upon mine oath before the archbishops of Canterbury and York, but also received the bleffed facrament upon the same, before the duke of Norfolk and other the king's highness council learned in the spiritual law: affuring you, mr. secretary, by the said oath and bleffed body, which afore I received, and hereaster intend to receive, that the same may be to my damnation, if ever there was any contract or promise of marriage between her and me. At Newington Green, the 13th day of May, in the 28th year of the reign of our fovereign lord king Henry the eighth.

Your affured,

H. NORTHUMBERLAND.

THE HISTORY

DISSERTATION II.

Of the birth of EDWARD VI.

Y last discourse was upon the death of Anne of Bullen, the wife of Henry the WILL deavour to vindicate of the crime of adultery that was laid to her charge. The fubject of my prefent remarks shall be the birth of that king's only son, Edward the VIth. And here one could hardly think an affair of this nature, as the birth of a prince (especially when there was not the least doubt and contest about the legitimacy of it) should afford much matter for a review-But as the nativity of Edward hath occafioned controverfy among the writers, and given room to fome of them to fhow their fpleen and malice, I shall examine the matter with all the fairness and impartiality I am able .- Now the main of the difpute feems to turn upon these two points ; 1st, The day on which king Edward was born; 2dly, The manner of his coming into the world. For the better clearing these matters, it will be neceflary to confider three things; 1st, The very day of the month on which he was born; 2dly, The precife time of his mother, queen Jane's death, and how long it happened after the birth of her fon. This laft particular may perhaps be thought a matter of fmall confequence, but it will appear to be material, as it may help to difprove the third thing which I defign to examine, I mean a ftory related by fome writers, that he was born by incifion, and violently cut out of his mother's womb. As to the first of these, the very day of his nativity, the opinion of historians in general is, that he was born the 12th of a October, on the eve of the feaft of Edward the martyr. It is probable his father laid hold d Three days after, i. e. the 15 of October he was baptized with great fplendor and folemnity, thofe of the higheft nobility, the bifliops, abbots, dignified clergy and chaplains, with abundance of knights and gentlemen being fummoned to be prefent. The prince was carried from his lodgings to the chapel by the marchionefs of Exeter, with a moft illuftrious attendance. The two princeffes, and the lady Mary and the lady Elizabeth were in the retinue and affilted. The godfathers at the font were archbifhop Cranmer, and Thomas duke of Norfolk, and the duke of Suffolk was godfather at his confirmation at the fame time. After he had been baptized by one of the bifhops, his title was alfo proclaimed by garter king at arms, and called prince Edward, duke of Cornwall, and earl of Checker.

OF ENGLAND.

on this, as a happy omen, and fo gave him the name of that faint. There is one writer indeed that differs from them in this, and places his birth on the 10th day of that month, and that for a reafon best known to the perform himself. I mean the jesuit Sanders, who afferts in his book de Schifmate Anglicano. But this author's character is fuch, that when he deviates from other writers, we may take it for granted, it is either to lead the reader out of his way, or to vent his fpleen, and to difplay his malice. He was an inveterate enemy to the reformation, and to all the authors and promoters of it, and by confequence to king Edward the VIth, who had fo great a hand in that pious work. Had he been a catholick prince, and a favourer of the popifh caufe, Sanders, no doubt, would have laid hold of this circumstance of his birth, would have enlarged upon it as a happy omen, that feemed to promife and foretel all the glories of his reign. But, as he was unwilling an heretical prince fhould be fo happy as to be born on the eve of that English king and faint, he made no fcruple to haften and advance his birth, and to make him come into the world two days before he really did. The next thing to be confidered is the exact time of queen Jane Seymour's death, and how many days fhe lived after the birth of the prince. And this Stow, Polydore Virgil, and the reft of the writers have fixed, by a mistake, on the 14th day of October, that is, two days after the nativity of Edward. In this they are followed by Mr. Rapin, which is the more strange, because he must have feen the remarks upon Hayward's life of this prince in doctor Kennet's edition of the Complete Hiftory of England, which clear up that matter, and fet it in a true light. Heyward indeed varies from those writers, and fets her death four days . after her delivery; but this does not at all mend the matter; for it is certain, fhe did not die till twelve days after the birth of the prince; and this appears from an authentick Annotations niafuscript of the folemnity of her funeral, as also from a on the life of Edward journal of fecretary Cecil.

I have been the more exact in fettling this date of the net'sedition. queen's death, in order, 3dly, to disprove a story that has been related by fome writers, that Eaward was born by incifion, and violently cut out of his mother's body. The first who mentions this is Heyward, who faith, " All re- Hayward's ⁴⁴ ports conftantly run, that he was not, by natural paffage, life of Ed-⁴⁵ delivered into the world; but that his mother's body was Kennet's " opened for his birth, and that fhe died of the incifion the edit. 3. P. 273 " fourth day following." How thefe reports were first foread.

VI. in Ken-

004

spread, and how justly grounded they are, will I hope appear in the fequel of thefe papers. After this he faith, that the Romans thought such births fortunate; and fancied, that those proved commonly great men, that came into the world in that manner. For this he quotes Pliny, whole words are, Aufpicatiùs enectà matre nascuntur, sicut Scipio Africanus prior natus; and that they were called Cæfones, and afterwards Cæfares. But, by the way, his observation and guotation out of Pliny are little to the purpose here. For whatever e conceits and superstitions the Romans had in relation to these violent births, it is certain there was no such notion in England at that time; nor is there in the prefent age in which fuch a birth, attended with the mother's death, is effeemed a great misfortune and fad calamity to the family it happens in; and I dare fay, that the first inventors and fpreaders of the flory had this very thing in their view, namely, to caft a flur and blemifh upon the birth of this prince as tragical and unfortunate. I make no doubt but the enemies to king Henry and the reformation were highly pleafed with the report, looked on it as a judgment upon him for his hard usage of the good catholick queen Catherine, and as a fatal curfe upon the two wives which he married after that divorce, the first of which died like a malefactor on a scaffold, and the laft loft her life by the ripping up of her womb.

This is the opinion of the judicious author of the remarks upon Edward's life, in doctor Kennet's edition. "No hif-"torian (faith he) that wrote before Heyward, give any "countenance to this, except it be Sanders, whole pen was "not directed fo much by truth, as malice, who frames a fory that when the queen was in extreme labour, and they afked the king, whom he would have fpared, the "queen or his fon? he anfwered, his fon, becaufe he could

• The notion that the common people in England have of fuch births, is, that children fo born will be eminent phyficians. And this is no new opinion, but may be traced as far as Virgil, who faith of Lycas, that he was cut out of his mother's womb, and conferrated to Apollo.

Inde Lycham ferit, exectum matre peremptâ & tibi, Phœbe, facrum, Æn. l. X. v. 315. — Upon which place, Servius obferves fuch children were dedicated to Apollo, the god of phyfick, by whofe help and affiftance they owed their life. But I think it more probable this notion was derived from Æficulapius, who was himfelf thus taken out of his mother's body after her death, as is related by Pindar, who faith, that Apollo, having difcovered the infidelity of his miftrefs Coronis, and the affairs fhe had with Ifchys, fent his fifter Diana to put her to death. But fhe, unwilling that the child fhould perifh with the mother, came to the flames, which feparated of themfelves, and taking the babe out of the parent's body, gave it to old Chiron to bring up, and to inftruct in the practice of phyfick.——Pindar Pyth. Od. III.

se eafily

" eafily find out other wives : but even he has not a " word of cutting out the young infant out of his mother's " body. So that I make no question that this was at first se an idle fable, invented by papifts, improved upon what 56 Sanders wrote, and the report foon became current among " that party, out of ill will to king Henry, to make him " appear cruel, and the prince his fon to have been un-" luckily born." The truth is, this was a very good handle for a forgery. It was an easy transition from one fable to another. It was eafy, I fay, upon the first report, to graft the fecond falfe and fcandalous ftory, I call it falle and fcandalous, becaufe none of the writers that lived nearest that age, neither Stow, Hollingshead, nor even Polydore Virgil, who lived at the very time of the prince's birth, take the least notice of it. Neither is there a word about it in king Edward's journal, which gives a minute and exact account of all particulars relating to himfelf, from the year 1537, which was that of his birth, and fo proceeds regularly from the year of his acceffion to the crown in 1547, to the end of November 1552. Camden, indeed, in his Apparatus, or introduction to the reign of queen Elizabeth, makes mention of it. " Queen Jane " (faith he) fell in labour and prefently died, the prince " being fain to be cut out of her womb, and fucceeding his " father after in the kingdom." But then he feems to retract it in his marginal note, where he faith only, that the queen died in childbirth of king Edward ; and these are the very words of Polydore f Virgil, namely, that the died in childbirth two days after the birth of the prince. The fame is related by an old chronicle of Canterbury, published by Herne⁸, in his preface to his accurate edition of Cambden's life and reign of queen Elizabeth. This antiquary affures us, that the fame account of king Edward's birth is given by fir Thomas Smith, in a dialogue concerning the then intended marriage of queen Elizabeth, which is not yet printed, but was communicated to him by Anftis, king at arms. Fuller faith, in his Church Hiftory, that there went a ftrong tradition that king Edward, like Cæfar, was cut out of his mother's body; but he adds, that a perfon of great honour deriving her intelligence from fuch as were prefent at her f Mater vero in puerperio mortua eft, biduo poft partum, nam III idus Octobris peperit.—Edit. Gander 1557, p. 1743.

1743. 5 The title is a breviate chronicle, containing all the kings from Brute to this day, and many notable acts gathered out of divers chronicles from William the conqueror, printed in Canterbury in Se. Paul's parifh, by John Mitchell.

labour,

labour, affured him of the contrary. Befides, the time of Jane Seymour's death, namely, twelve days after her delivery, renders the ftory extremely improbable. But laftly, what fets the matter beyond dispute, and which (were there no other proofs against it) is enough to fink the credit of this report, is a letter ---- from the queen herfelf to the council, giving them an account of her happy delivery; to which may be added a certificate of her illness, from her phyficians and attendants, of the flate of her health, a little before the died, which makes no manner of mention of this circumstance of opening the body, which they could not fairly have omitted, had it been true. These two original papers, the letter, and the certificate, are still extant in the Cotton library, from whence they have been published by Fuller and Herne. All this, I hope, may be fufficient to put the matter in a fair and clear light, to difprove the teftimony of fir John Heyward, and to confute the ftory of king Edward's being cut of his mother's womb.

I could point at feveral other places in the life of king Edward written by this author, which are as liable to exception as this I have examined above, but not to detain the reader, nor to deviate too far from my fubject, I fhall confine my-· felf to two facts only, wherein fir John Heyward has laid himfelf very open to cenfure, and reflection. The 1st concerning the quarrel between the protector and the admiral his brother, which proved, in the end, fo fatal to them both. The 2d, relating to the death of the last of them, who lost his life upon a scaffold. As to the 1st, the difference between these two great men, Heyward imputes it to a jealousy between their two ladies, about precedency and taking place, which he faith the protector's wife refused to give to Catherine the queen dowager, who had married the admiral. His words are thefe " The lord Sudley had taken to wife Catherine " Parr, the queen dowager, laft wife to king Henry the " VIIIth, a woman beautified with excellent virtues, efpe-" cially with humility, the beauty of all other virtues. The " duke had taken to wife Anne Stanhope a woman for many " imperfections intolerable, but for pride monstruous. She " was exceedingly fubile and violent in accomplishing her " ends, for which the fpurned over all respects both of con-" fcience and shame. This woman did bear such an invin-" cible hate, 1ft, against the queen dowager, for light causes " and womens quarrels, especially for that she had the pre-" cedency of place before her &c : he adds that fhe rubed " into the duke's dull capacity (as he very courfely expresses " it) " it) that his brother fought to take away his life and to at-" tain to his place, that the duke at length yielding himfelf " to her, did devife his brother's destruction, and that being " arrefted, and fent to the Tower he was condemned by act " of parliament a fhort time after." But befides the great improbability of the thing, befides that the duchefs must have been mad and out of her fenfes or entirely ignorant of the cuftoms of the nation, to think of taking place of a queen dowager of England, befides this, I fay, there is not a fingle word of it in all the letters that paffed about this grand affair. There h is not the least mention of it either in Hollingfhead, Stow or the journal of Edward the VIth, which is very large about the matter of the admiral, and relates many particulars about it, that are of much lefs confequence than this, fo that Heyward could have no authority for his ftory but that of the jefuit Sanders, a writer of very low credit and fad character for veracity, and who made it his whole bulinefs to afperfe and revile king Edward, and his ministers, and the duke of Somerfet especially, who had fo deep an hand in the reformation of the church. But a fair and impartial historian should not have made use of those scandalous memoirs, or if he did, fhould have named his author, and let the matter reft upon the credit of his voucher. It is certain Sanders was the 1ft broacher of this fable, he relates it thus : " There arose a great contest between Catherine Parr and the " protector's wife, who should have the precedence. And " the contest rested not in the women, but passed to the " men, and when the emulation continually encreased, the " protector's wife would not let her hufband alone, till at " laft it came to pafs, that the protector who, although he " ruled the king, yet was ruled by his wife must cut off his " brother, that nothing might be an hindrance to her i " will." These are the words of Sanders, who produces no authority for what he faith, I am apt to believe it is an old ftory new vamped up, and that the jefuit took his hint from the famous dispute of the two ladies, daughters of Fabius Ambuftus, in Livy, who, quarrelling about precedency and rank, occasioned a difference, 1st, between their husbands, then between the patricians and the plebeians, and raifed fuch a fedition in the commonwealth, as wrefted from the nobles a fhare in the places and employments in the flate. But as h See Mr. Strype's annotat, on the life of Edward the VIth, Kennet's edition, p 301. See the annotations on the life of Edward the VIth. Kennet's edit, p. 301.

1 Sanders de schismate Anglicano.-

this

this is only a conjecture, let the original of the ftory be what it will, it certainly did not become a good Englishman and true protestant, as fir John Heyward was, to rake into the filth, and to glean the scandal of such a profligate writer, whom he knew to be made up of falsehood and lies and a fworn enemy to Edward and his ministers, and to the whole body of the reformers. The 2d thing I mentioned, as liable to cenfure and exception in this writer, relates to the death of the admiral, who, he does not scruple to fay, fuffered for pitiful and frivolous matters. But fure he must never have feen the act of parliament by which he was attainted, which plainly contains, not trivial and pitiful matters, but a very heavy charge of treason and rebellion. For, (as a judicious writer k has observed) " the admiral was certainly a very ill " man, turbulent and full of ambitious defigns, from the " beginning of this king's reign, and his brother the duke " observing it, did often advise him, and earnestly diffuade " him from his dangerous courfes, using all the fairest means " with him, pardoning all that was past; and that he might " meet with this brother's high mind, gratifying with pof-" feffions befides the high and honourable office of lord high " admiral. Yet he was continually practifing after this, he " raifed foldiers, and threatened he would make the blackeft " parliament that ever was in England. He was fuspected " to have poiloned his wife, the excellent queen dowager, . that, being fingle, he might make his addreffes to the " princess Elizabeth, the king's fifter, and one of the heirs " to the crown, fo that in fine the parliament did judge these " things to be a traiterous aspiring to the crown." Mr. Rapin, in this part of his hiftory (for what reafons I cannot tell) feems to agree with Heyward; at least he endeavours to extenuate the guilt of the lord Sudley, and to lay the whole weight and odium of his death upon the protector. " It is " pretty hard, faith he, to excufe the duke of Somerfet for " profecuting his brother even to death, for crimes com-" mitted against himself only. For it was never proved, " that lord had formed any evil defign against the king " and ftate, as he himfelf protested to the last moment " of his life. But it is not the first time that facts commit -" ted against prime ministers have been construed as high " treason, and conspiracy against the prince." I wonder at this in Rapin, who feems herein lefs excutable than Hay-k Strype in his annotations on the life of Edward the VIth, Kennet's edit. p. 301.

ward,

ward, fince he could not but have feen Burnet's account of the matter. This prelate clears up this affair, does justice to both fides, and produces thirty three articles that were brought against the admiral, and these not confisting of trivial and frivolous matters, but of very heavy crimes that were laid to his charge. To three of these articles he replied indeed before the council, but, whether out of haughtinefs and pride, or a fenfe of his guilt, he obstinately refused answering to the reft, and whoever reads this charge brought against that lord, will I believe agree that there was ground enough for the parliament to attaint him, and to adjudge him guilty of treasonable aspiring to the regency, and crown. As to the protestation which Rapin faith he made of his innocence to the laft, his own acts and deeds, and the attainder of the parliament, do plainly prove the contrary. I do not deny but an unfatiable thirst of power in the admiral, and a violent jealoufy of his brother whom he faw as much fuperior in dignity and command, as he thought himfelf in fenfe and parts above him, might be the first sparks that kindled this great flame. But as a fire that is not fliffed betimes will foon break out with greater violence, these passions of jealousy and ambition did fo rage in his breaft that he was refolved, coft what it would, to gratify them; fo this, from being a perfonal matter, foon became an affair of the ftate, which he was refolved to overturn, rather than not to compass his ends. Matters in fhort were got to that pass with him as to wish with Dejotarus in Tully, Perreant amici dummodo inimice intercidant, that his friends might perifh, fo that his enemies might be destroyed with them. He did not care what became of the fhip, and who were loft and funk in it provided his brother did but perifh with the reft. This drove him upon those violent measures, and treasonable practices as the levying ten thousand men, and threatening the parliament with a more dreadful blow, than it had ever felt before. Now if fuch dealings and threatenings do not amount to treafon, and to treafon of a very heinous kind I do not know what the law can ever call fo. Burnet is more fair and candid in his account of this matter; he carefully weighs the merits of the caufe, does full juffice to the characters of the two brothers, and agrees upon the whole that the removal of fuch a turbulent perfon as the admiral, was the only way to procure the peace and quiet of the ftate. I shall set down his own words here, and with them will conclude these remarks. " The " bufinefs of the duke's brother, though it has a very ill ap-" pearance, and is made to look the worfe by the lame ac-" count ⁴⁴ count our books give of it, feems to have been forced up-⁴⁴ on him. For the admiral was a man of moft incurable ⁴⁴ ambition, and fo enclined to raife diffurbances, that, af-⁴⁴ ter fo many relapfes, and fuch frequent reconcilements, he ⁴⁴ ftill breaking out into new diforders, it become almost ne-⁴⁴ ceffary to put him out of the capacity of doing more ⁴⁴ mifchief." Burnet's preface to the fecond part of the Hiftory of the Reformation.

THE HISTORY

The END of the SIXTH VOLUME.

Directions concerning the Genealogical Tables.

H ISTORY reprefents to us four things, which are effential to it: 1. The events: 2. The place where: 3. The time when they happened: 4. The perfons who were the actors. If therefore, in order to underftand a hiftory perfectly, it is neceffary to have a knowledge of the country where the fcene of the actions lies, by means of geography, and of the times wherein they were tranfacted by chronology; it is no lefs requilite to know the perfons concerned, by the help of genealogies, which very often difcover the motives and reafons of things. Nay, genealogy has this great advantage above geography and chronology, that whereas thefe laft prefent to the mind fome particular actions only; the bare names in a genealogical table, form, if I may fo fay, an abftract of all the remarkable events in thofe perfons lives.

Nothing is more eafy than to make genealogies; but it is very hard to draw them up in a clear and diffinct manner, and to obferve a fixed and conftant method, which reprefents to the eye and mind what one looks after, without the leaft trouble. This I have endeavoured to do, by means of the following rules, which it will be proper to lay before the reader.

1. The genealogical tables are divided by horizontal lines. marked, 1, 2, 3, 4, &c. On the first line is placed the name of the common flock, whole posterity is fet down on the other lines. Thus all that are placed on the fame horizontal line, (or between the fame figures) are at an equal distance, or in the same degree from the common original. Hence may be feen by the caft of an eye, the number of generations from the common root, and the degrees of confanguinity between the descendants. For instance, in the table of Woden's posterity, Woden being the common flock of the Anglo Saxon kings, Hengift, first king of Kent, is placed on line (6), by which is meant that Hengist is the fifth descendant from Woden. Afterwards, in the genealogical table of the kings of Kent, Hengift is placed on a line marked (6), by which means one may immediately fee how many degrees any one of Hengist's descendants were removed from Woden.

England ceafing to be under the dominion of the Saxons by the conquest of the Normans, instead of Woden, William the the conqueror is made the common root of the English kings down to the prefent time. Accordingly, in the genealogy of Wlliam the conqueror, his name stands upon the line marked (1.) to denote his being the stock from whence all the others spring. For instance, Edward III. in this table, being on line (9.) in the table of his own posterity, he is placed at the same number, to shew it is only a continuation of the genealogy of William the conqueror.

Directions concerning the Genealogical Tables.

2. The fons are always placed according to the order of their birth, from the left hand towards the right, by which means the eldeft branches are diffinguished from the younger, at one view. The fame order is not obferved with regard to the daughters, who are placed in the void spaces, fo as to prevent the lines from running out to too great a length. But however, the elder stands always on the left hand of the younger fifter.

3. The children of the fame prince are placed fo, that their father flands in the line over them, just in the middle, which faves a great deal of trouble and confusion.

4. As the only end of these genealogical tables is to facilitate the reading of this history, several persons who died young, or unmarried, or without issue, and the like, are omitted.

5. One of the chief things which render genealogies plain and ufeful, is to load them with as few words as poffible. By which means the blank fpaces will remain the larger between the names, than which nothing contributes more to make the tables clear and diffinct. This is the reason the following abbreviations are made use of, as, e. for earl, d. for duke, k. for king, q. for queen, w. for wife, d. for died, The names written in Italian character, under those that are part of the genealogy, denote the husband or wives. Sledda For inftance, This fignifies that Ricula of Kent. S Sledda married Ricula princess of Kent. When two or more names are under another, with numbers before them, this means, 1st. wife, 2d. wife, 3d. wife, or husband, &c.

6. Laftly, Each king has a number annext, to denote the order of fucceffion, and in what rank each fucceeded to the crown. This is abfolutely neceffary in the fucceffion to the throne of England, where the order of the branches was not always obferved.

